The enclosed document is an example of the anti-student bigotry of a faculty member in the English Department which should be brought to the attention of the general student body. Prof. Spivack's heavy-handed irony obviously reveals his opinion of the students on this campus.

Forewarned is forearmed.

Arnold Ransom
English Dept.

From: Bernard Spivack
To: The English Faculty

I was advised by a colleague (who now seems more of a mossback than he did formerly) to suppress the following course description. He called it, unjustly I believe, "a competitive exercise in academic pimping." But I wonder if others in the department won't agree that it moves in the right direction, fulfilling the spirit and approaching the letter of our current fashion in this art. Any support at all will encourage me to submit it literatim next time. Here it is:

English 222

In this course we will be enthralled by the beauty and terror, the pity and fear, of great Shakespearian Drama. We will want to understand and share (empathetically) the sexual agony of Othello, the existential agony of Macbeth, the Oedipal agony of Hamlet, the geriatric agony of King Lear. When agony palls, we will turn to sex; and here we really strike pay-dirt, since Sex and Shakespeare are practically synonymous ("The bawdy hand of the dial is on the prick of noon", you know). We will want to take a long Freudian look at the repressed sexuality of Ophelia, the transvestite sexuality of Rosalind, the reminiscent sexuality of Angelica, and the RAM-PANT (!) sexuality of Cleopatra. When we finally shift from sex to simpler fun, the Bard will convulse us with the arsy antics of obscene clowns and ribald rascals drawn by his inimitable pen from the fantastic low-life of Elizabethan England. Since, as T.S. Eliot once observed, literature is really a superior form of entertainment, and since Shakespeare (as this course will show) is in this respect more superior than anybody, we will want to avoid intellectual strain and give ourselves over to pure gut sensation–to the sheer pleasure of it all. Therefore, no lectures, no writing, no reading–just relaxed, cross-legged discussion about life and art in order to decide democratically whether we want to read any of Shakespeare's plays in the first place. Two dollar lab fee for incense and ostrich feathers (so that we can imitate those fantastic Persians who tickled themselves with aromatic feathers while chanting the poems of Firdausi). Enrollment limited to 1100.

Give It To The Friends Association

To The Editor:

"$17,000 to spend. And nowhere to spend it." Being a commuter myself I felt obliged to answer the problem of The Commuter Assembly. I understand that there are approximately 6,000 commuters on this campus and at the commuter assembly meetings there is rarely a quorum of 35. Apparently there is a definite lack of interest, however, this does not mean that there is not a cause. There is a lawsuit going on right now against the state of Massachusetts directed by The Parents Friends Association. The Friends Assoc. is attempting to rectify such conditions as inhumane treatment to residents, un-hygienic and sub par food distribution and preparation, general shelter and clothing necessities, and the hiring of the adequate number of interns and attendants to maintain and care for the residents at the State School. The physical attention of the buidings and facilities are in dire need of renovation and repairs;-the plumbing in the sensori-motor dept. has been leaking badly for over a year, lavatory facilities in reference to open and overflowing toilets exist, lack of and leaky showers are prevalent, ceilings and walls that are peeling badly due to the inadequate and panickly done "snow" job to passify the governor on his last spring's tour are common. The intentions of the commuter assembly to build new locker facilities and to create a new coffee shop or whatever are all well and good, but I am suggesting that the list of priorities in my opinion be directed toward the top. As a commuter, a student, and an intern at B.S.S. I urge that The Commuter Assembly consider strongly to give to charity, to people who cannot speak for themselves, to the lawsuit, to "The Parents Friends Association." I suggest that a young boy falling out of a building at the State School and breaking a leg and not being discovered for hours to be found in a snow bank bleeding from the mouth by a passerby is sufficient reason to hire more attendants. This happened Nov. 19, 1972. Please Help. This is more important than a new coffee shop.

Don't Wait, Participate

To The Editor:

We lost the election; that much is clear. In terms of the national scene, we lost it rather badly. Locally however, we have the chance to create, through the democratic political process, the kind of community in which we want to live.

We can do this through active participation in the upcoming Amherst town elections. Each year there are 240 Town Meeting Member seats open, and a number of positions on the varigus executive boards which oversee the day to day operation of the town. We could, if our influence was strongly felt, turn the town's growth around, aiming it at creating a more human environment, rather than making money for speculators. We could have a local police force which was friendly and responsive, rather than surly and cold. We could, as Ann Arbor has done, virtually eliminate the illegality of marijuana. We can do all this if we participate.

Tonightat 7 PM in Room 903 of the Campus Center, we shall meet to find out how we can participate. All who are registered to vote in Amherst, and all who are interested in working in local politics, are invited to attend.

Protest The Murders

To The Editor:

Last Thursday two students were shot down by the state police at the Baton Rouge campus of Southern University. What many people do not realize is that those students as well as those at the New Orleans and Rustin campuses have been on strike for the past three weeks. Their list of seventeen demands include:

1. curriculum changes (one of the faculty that was forced to resign was a member of the Nazi party).
2. better medical care and an ambulance service.
3. housing and edible food.
4. higher wages for the cafeteria workers (The workers were supporting the student demands. They were laid off from their jobs when the University closed down and the National Guard came in.)

and 5. the right to review the financial records of the University (Southern University was not getting as much funds as the predominantly white Louisiana State Univ.)

The brutal answer to these legitimate demands was the murder of two black students.

A plea has been issued by these students at Southern University for nationwide support of their struggle. More attention should be called to these slayings. Blacks, whites, and Spanish-speaking peoples all face the same miserable conditions, high taxes and inflation. Only by uniting can we achieve any real success. While people suffer without jobs or decent living conditions this administration and its allies stir up racism to keep people from dealing with their problems together.

Please show your support and let these students and workers know that they are not fighting alone. The students have been supporting the workers with money out of their own pockets as a sign of unity. Let this unity spread nationwide.

Letters of support demanding the University give in to the demands can be sent to President G. Leon Netterville, Southern University, Picard, 6400 Press Drive, New Orleans, La.

Eyewitness Account Of N. Viet Medical Care

By GEORGE ROTH, M.D.
Pacific News Service/
LIBERATION News Service

(Dr. Roth has been working with the Medical Aid to Indochina Committee; he recently returned from a trip to North Vietnam.)

QUANG AN, North Vietnam (LNS)--Nothing reveals more clearly the attitude any society has towards its members than how medical care is conceptualized and delivered. What remains in the forefront of my mind from my trip to North Vietnam is that the country has profound dedication, in every sense, to the health and well-being of all its people.

As a doctor, I am aware that many people in the United States find its medical health care system to be unsatisfactory. Medical care is prohibitively expensive and unnecessarily impersonal, due to the aura of professionalism surrounding medicine in the U.S. At best, good care is difficult to obtain, and is often fragmented, over-specialized, and incomplete. In contrast, North Vietnam's medical structure is attuned to the needs of its citizens both for normal medical problems and those resulting from the air war.

According to former Minister of Health of North Vietnam, Dr. Pham Ngoc Thach, the main problem had been the shortage of trained personnel. This was solved by abandoning the long-term "academic" approach to medical education and training large numbers of people in a short time to carry out specific important jobs. They return to medical school later if they wish. As a result, today almost every one of North Vietnam's 6,000 villages has a health facility with several well-trained staff people.

Medical care delivery begins at the co-operative level. Groups of farmers who come together for economic reasons such as the purchase of fertilizers and seeds, contract with the province's health service agency to make medical personnel and goods available to the co-operative or nearby villages.

I visited a co-operative at Quang An, and there I spent the most exciting day of my life. A small dispensary provides traditional herbal medicines as well as routine measures as the immunization of children. Common medical complaints can be taken care of there. In addition, there is a five bed maternity ward with a skilled midwife (one of 14,000 trained in North Vietnam), who delivers some 70-80 babies a year.

Quang An village is also a research station that grows herbs and plants which have medicinal value. For thousands of years, the Vietnamese used certain kinds of plants to treat illness. One hundred herbs are now being systematically studied at the Institute of Pharmacology in Hanoi to identify and measure the pharmacologically active ingredients.

For example, it is widely known that if one is elderly and has had problems with swelling of the feet, shortness of breath and persistent cough, there is a particular herb that should be taken. The active ingredient has now been identified as digitalis. A potent drug, digitalis has specific and predictable effects in treating heart failure, of which swelling and shortness of breath are symptoms.

The staff at the co-operative level usually consists of the midwife and an assistant doctor who has had between two and three years of medical school. In my talks with several of these people, I was impressed with their wide range of medical interests, energy, and high sense of devotion to the co-operatives' citizens.

The next step in the medical hierarchy is the village level, where there are dispensaries, much like small hospitals in this country. Here a number of problems are dealt with. There is usually a rather primitive X-ray machine, which can examine chests for lung disease, and check bones for possible fractures. The staff includes a midwife, perhaps two assistant doctors, and a nurse. A fully-trained physician educated in either Paris, if elderly, or in Hanoi if younger, makes periodic visits about twice a week.

At the next level are the province hospitals. During the French occupation there was a hospital built in each of the country's 36 provinces. The province hospitals are capable of providing more complicated care, and correspond in many ways to small community hospitals in the United States. There is a full medical staff with nurses, X-ray technicians, laboratory technicians, and other para-medical personnel. All but the most complex diseases or injuries can be handled there.

These province hospitals continue to function under the most arduous circumstances. Since the beginning of the stepped-up air war offensive in April, the U.S. has bombed 32 of these 36 hospitals. I visited one, Bachmai Hospital near Hanoi, where an entire building had been destroyed by low-altitude bombing and rocket attacks in May.

Long ago, the Vietnamese made a massive effort to eliminate those diseases which, at the end of the French occupation in 1954, caused an infant mortality rate of 400 per 1000 births a year.

TURN IN YOUR YOUTH CARD FOR TWA's. YOU'LL GET A TOP LP ALBUM AND A WHOLE LOT OF THE WORLD FOR FREE.

It may sound funny to turn in your card for a free TWA card, but it's worth it. If you turn in your American or United or whatever other airline's youth card you have to your campus representative or any TWA counter (or pay $3 for a new one, if you don't have one to turn in), you'll get more than any other airline offers you. Maximum discounts on TWA and all other airlines, more free things and, on top of all that, a free album.

FREE ALBUM—FIRST 10,000.

First, you'll get a Record Club of America coupon good for your choice of a free top album worth up to $6.98. From a list of over 100 incredibles. Like Three Dog Night, Neil Diamond, Roberta Flack, Elton John. Plus a free lifetime membership in Record Club of America, with no obligation to buy any record. The offer's limited to the first 10,000, so you've got to do it soon.

FREE MONEY-SAVING COUPONS.

When you land in any of six cities (London, Boston, Paris, Los Angeles, San Francisco or Denver) with your TWA card, you'll get a brochure full of hundreds of dollars' worth of deals. And we mean deals. Like absolutely free or 50% off.

What we did was to talk to students in those cities and ask where they'd take their friends—not just the "in" places, but the spots that only the knowing would know about. And those are the ones we give you free dinners, drinks, club memberships or discounts in. Here are just some of the absolutely free things you'll get in London and Boston, as an example of what TWA has arranged for you in all the cities.

BOSTON FREEBEES.

FREE
A spaghetti dinner at the "Spaghetti Emporium, Inc.," just off Harvard Square.

FREE
Breakfast in the "Pewter Pot Muffin House" (14 locations) where many Harvard students stop first in the morning.

Free checking accounts with $100 minimum balance at Hampshire National Bank!

That's right—Hampshire National Bank has done away with service charges on personal checking accounts—just so long as you maintain a $100 minimum balance in your account.

The average cost of service charges is $15 to $20 a year. This is the cost that you'll save by maintaining a $100 minimum balance. Where else can $100 earn you that kind of money?

And it's easier to balance your checkbook, too! There's no service charge to remember to deduct. Just add your deposits and subtract your checks—that's the only bookkeeping necessary!

If your balance should drop below $100 in any month, you pay a $3 charge for that month.

This minimum balance checking account is offered to individuals only—not for business accounts.

School Of Ed Learning Experiences Available

The following list represents Education learning experiences that are now available under the School of Education's Flexible Curriculum. The purpose of the Felxible Curriculum is to provide alternative choices when developing a program of studies. By maintaining a modified record-keeping and scheduling system within the School of Education, which supplements the University's system, it is possible to have courses which break away from the three-credit, full semester standard.

Who's eligible: University Students (Preference to Education Students.)
Tuition:
1. No cost to undergraduates.
2. No cost to graduates registered for more than 10 credits.
3. Graduate students with less than 10 credits will register and pay second semester except for tuition waivers.

Credit:
1. 100 mods-1 credit.
2. Graduate students with less than 10 credits will receive credit second semester.

Registration:
1. Where: Room 121, School of Education.
2. When: Prior to the second meeting of the learning experience.

Study In Germany

Applications are being taken for the UMass 1973-74 study program at the University of Freiburg in Germany.

Graduate and upper division undergraduate students from all colleges and universities are invited to apply. Although the program is not restricted to students concentrating in German language and literature, the University of Freiburg requires all foreign students to pass its language proficiency test. The program begins with a several week orientation program which stresses the German language.

Courses are offered in the social sciences, arts and humanities, including comparative literature, political science, philosophy, history, music, English, economics, and German language and literature. Scholarships are available to outstanding students, and Fulbright scholarships may be applied to participation in the Freiburg program. UMass students who receive financial aid may apply it towards their expenses in Freiburg.

The $2400 cost includes round-trip travel, room and board, tuition and fees. Not included are books, travel within Europe and miscellaneous fees. Between the foothills of the Black Forest and the Rhine Valley in southwest Germany, Freiburg is renowned for its 12th century cathedral and open market.

Applications and additional information are available from Dr. Barbara B. Burn, director of international programs, Whitmore Administration Building, UMass-Amherst, 01002.

Law Courses At Hampshire

Seminar in Constitutional Law: The First Amendment (SS 114)
The First Amendment reads, "Congress shall make no law..." abridging the freedoms of speech, press, religion, and assembly. This seminar will study the controversies surrounding the amendment. Primary and secondary sources will be used.
Professor R. Bruce Carroll

Culture and Poverty (SS 112)
The course will examine the perspectives and implications of poverty. Ethnographic and sociological studies, novels, autobiographies, and other reports will be used.
Professor Barbara Yngvesson

Problems in the Philsophy of Law and Justice (SS 214)
The nature of law and the meaning of justice will be the major explorations of this course. Major philosophers from Plato to the present will be studied. A principal object of the course is to examine the difference one's philosophical position makes to the resolution of practical problems.
Professor Lester Mazor

Planning and Non-Planning (SS 219)
This seminar will be concerned with the planning processes in the United States and in a few European countries, by focusing on several case illustrations from both a legal and sociological point of view.
Professors Linden, Rosenthal, Resnick

Professions (SS 221)
The course will study the professions from the sociological perspective, focusing upon Law and Medicine as specific cases. Questions of definition, the socialization process, rights and responsibilities, freedom, control, and future of the professions will be examined.
Professors Mazor and von der Lippe

Science and Public Police (NS 180, 280, SS 139, 231)
This course will define and describe the concept of adversary science as a technique of technology assessment. It will examine the decision-making process and the role adversary science in NASA's proposed space shuttle. Individual projects will play a major role in the last half of the course. There will be a weekly lecture series connected with the course.
Professor Brian O'Leary, Dir.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆—by SYDNEY OMARR—☆

Diaries, photographs, special albums--these make ideal gifts for those born under Cancer. The Cancer individual usually is appreciative of gifts which have sentimental value and responds also to gourmet foods and cookbooks. Select a rare wine, a gastronomical delicacy and you are on the right path when it comes to choosing a gift for natives of Cancer. Shopping for Cancer can be educational and certainly can sharpen the appetite!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Those who appear to oppose your ideas may be bluffing. Stick to principles. Don't be fooled by one who blusters, makes boastful claims. Perceive what is real as opposed to illusion, wishful thinking.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money situation needs additional attention. What appears a "sure thing" could be the opposite. Know it and respond accordingly. Experience now pays dividends. Older individual, perhaps a Capricorn, is in your corner.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Protect image. Be aware of public relations. Cycle is such that you can direct your own destiny. Key is to get legal clearance for proposed project. Means take nothing for granted. Contact powers that be.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make new starts in new directions. Stress originality, independence. Look behind scenes for key answers. Don't fear the unknown. You have more allies than might be imagined. Visit one temporarily confined.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Friends are in picture. Some expound ideas which encompass extrasensory perception. Keep open mind. Refuse to be drawn into foolish controversy. Welcome chance to meet people who are vital, exciting.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): One in your home may have problems which requires expert legal advice. Don't cast first stone. Be willing to listen and understand. You can make room for yourself at top. Crystallize ambitions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Before taking journey or making basic change do some double checking. Information should be verified. You do not seem to be getting complete story. Some tearing down in order to rebuild should be on agenda.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Don't take chances where financial security is concerned. Patience now is your ally. Young person is impulsive and should not be taken literally. Gemini and Virgo probably are in picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Romantic aura is featured. Many now are intrigued, fascinated by you. Take advantage. Be discreet. Don't tell all. Others prefer to speculate. Do some entertaining at home. Let others come to you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Obtain valid hint from Sagittarius message. Romance is in picture. Have fun without becoming inextricably involved. Key is to be realistic. Don't fool yourself. Avoid extremes. Remember diet, health resolutions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friend is sincere but probably misinformed. Don't take everything you hear as gospel. Rely on your own sources. Check with one who has good track record. Your popularity increases. You are due for pleasant surprise.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): This is time to finish rather than to begin project. Accent security. Build on solid base. Get rid of concepts which are flimsy, outmoded. Deal with Aries. Stand tall. Your own rights should be respected.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have tendency to put on weight, more so than does average individual. You also have sense of humor and an abundance of charm. Change of residence, domestic adjustment was featured this year, with September an outstanding month.

Fisk Gets AL's Rookie Award

NEW YORK (AP)–Boston Red Sox catcher Carlton Fisk became the first American Leaguer in history Monday to be unanimously selected Rookie of the Year by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Fisk, who batted .293, eighth best in the league in 1972, hit 22 home runs and drove in 61 runs, garnered all 24 BBWA votes.

He joined Frank Robinson and Willie McCovey of the National League as the only major league players unanimously selected since the award was given annually to a player in each league in 1949. Robinson won it in 1956 with Cincinnati and McCovey in 1959 with San Francisco.

In addition, Fisk is only the second catcher to win American League rookie honors. Thurman Munson of the New York Yankees was selected in 1970.

Fisk is the Red Sox' third Rookie of the Year. First baseman Walt Dropo was chosen in 1950 and pitcher Don Schwall received the honor in 1961.

Fisk's batting average and home run and RBI output were tops among American League catchers. He recently was voted to receive the Gold Glove award of managers and coaches as the league's best defensive catcher and was named to the 1972 American League All-Star team by Manager Earl Weaver of Baltimore.

The 24-year-old native of Bellows Falls, Vt., had brief trials with the Red Sox in 1969 and 1971. The first time he failed to get a hit in five at-bats, the second time he hit .313 with 15 hits--including two doubles, a triple and two homers--and six RBIs in 48 at-bats.

But at the start of the 1972 season, Fisk was the third-string catcher behind Duane Josephson and Bob Montgomery.

He played only occasionally until Josephson pulled a groin muscle and was sidelined for several games. Then Fisk alternated with Montgomery while Josephson, in order to avoid aggravating the injury, played first base.

But on May 18 in Detroit, the Red Sox, looking for stronger defensive play behind the plate, gave Fisk the fulltime job--and he never relinquished it.

Fencers Shine

Yesterday's Sports head was the famous bald eagle.

UMass took two firsts and a second in the Open Novice Meet for men and women's foil held at WoPE, Saturday.

There were 14 entries for the men and 5 for the women. The men had 2 preliminary pools of seven with 4 advancing to the finals from each pool.

In the men's finals were: Pete Dillard, Tom Ebitz, and Al Chin, all of UMass.; Pete Jaouen, Bob and Terry Holland of Berkshire Community College; and Bob Snook, and Art Hoener of Northampton Y.

Pete Dillard and Al Chin were tied for first place with 18 touches against and 6 victories apiece. The fence-off was won by Al Chin in a hand fought bout resulting in a 5-4 victory. Pete came in second and Bob Guttormsen came in third. Tom Ebitz was fourth.

The men's competition was a well and hard fought event. The women's entries were: Sozanne Uhl of UMass., Elaine Marden and Mary Formosa of Albany, N.Y., Carolyn Hoener of Northampton Y, and Angie Arico of Berkshire Community College.

Sozanne Uhl came in first for UMass, Angie Arico was second, Mary Formosa third, Carolyn Hoener fourth, and Elaine Marden fifth.

The meet directors were Tom Bevon of Holyoke, Bernie Desautels of UMass., and Joel Caplan of Berkshire Community College.

Sunday, at Kingston, N.Y., UMass fencer, Bernie Desautels fenced foil in an A.F.L.A. composite 4 weapon team event. Fencing with Bernie were: Angie Arico-women's foil; Joel Caplan-epee; and Pete Jaouen-sabre. Bernie's Raiders swept the 5 team event with a total of 13 victories and 3 losses for 4 team points.

Lettis Takes Albany Race

Charlotte Lettis, UMass junior, won the U.S. Region #1 cross-country championship race in Albany Saturday. Lettis ran the 2-1/2 mile course in 14 minutes and 32 seconds to defeat the best from Maryland to Maine. She won the race by 27 seconds which is considered a very comfortable margin.

Running under the banner of the Sugarloaf Mt. Athletic Club Lettis led from the gun around the one loop course through the campus of the State University of New York at Albany and gradually built up her lead with a steady controlled acceleration throughout the race. "I felt happy and in control of the pace," said the 21 year old theater major of her win.

Joining the veteran Lettis who place 3rd in this race last year was Merry Cushing of Amherst and Marianne Wilcox who placed 16th and 17th in their first women's competition at a Regional level. Both represented the Sugarloaf Mt. Club.

In other weekend action Carol Steel of the Sugarloaf Mt. Club entered the New England Senior cross-country race in Haverhill.

About EMS
Our professional staff members are avid cross-country skiers. When you visit EMS you get assistance, advice and years of experience, not a sales pitch. We'll help you select the finest equipment available to suit your budget and needs. Being the country's largest retailer of cross-country skis, we're naturally concerned with the tendency of prices to rise in this field. We're interested in keeping the cost of outfitting you with touring equipment as low as we possibly can. Our feeling is this winter recreation should remain distinct from its super-commercialized down-hill sister.

As of 6 p.m. last night Bischoff told the MDC that he could not in any way give a premature statement and that all speculation will be finalized this morning. "There are certain steps that we must take. This is a matter that directly affects the whole University community and must be treated with that amount of due consideration from many sources", said Bischoff.

The sources reached last night in closed sessions were...

1) A meeting with football coach Dick MacPherson, Assistant Athletic Director Bob O'Connell, Athletic Director Frank McInerney, and Dean Bischoff to decide a policy statement on the financial and academic repercussions of attending the Bowl.

2) A statement of approval or disapproval must be forwarded from Chancellor Bromery. Bromery in his decision will weigh the initial policy statement quite heavily.

3) President Robert Wood also has to sanction the endorsement that is forwarded from Chancellor Bromery.

4) A reaction from the Board of Trustees is needed for any such authorization of matters concerning a Bowl bid.

5) The issue also needs endorsement from the Athletic Council.

Joseph P. Healey, Chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees, said, "If the team wants to go, then I completely support them. It is a "further step for greater recognition" of the job they (the football team) has done this year.

In a closed session last night, the football team unanimously voted to accept the Boardwalk bid as offered. At present the opponent for Massachusetts has not been selected.

It is expected that Delaware University, the nation's number one small college team and the defending small college national champion, will host the Atlantic City classic. Delaware, as Mid-Atlantic Conference champ with a 10-0 record has an automatic bid to the Bowl, whether the Blue Hens want to accept or not. It is likely that Delaware will accept the invitation.

Bowl Committee Chairman Kolleval was not available for comment on the Delaware situation as of late yesterday afternoon.

Upon hearing of the Bowl bid coach Dick MacPherson said, "Many people respect the fine efforts by the young men of our 1972 football squad." MacPherson went on to add that he was not really overwhelmed by the Boardwalk nod. He said that University of Maine head coach Walt Abbott, who attended the Conference title clincher against New Hampshire, told him that the Delaware players wanted to play UMass.

The last time Massachusetts attended a Bowl game was back in 1964, Saturday December 12th. On that night a Vic Fusia coached Redmen Eleven was defeated by East Carolina, 14-13 in the Tangerine Bowl at Orlando, Fla. As a small college power UMass is no longer eligible for the Tangerine Bowl but the Minutemen are eligible for a number of small college Bowls namely:

1)-Boardwalk Bowl, Dec. 9, Atlantic City, N.J.

2)-Grantland Rice Bowl, Baton Rouge, La.

3)-Pioneer Bowl, Dec. 9, Wichita Falls, Tex.

4)-Camelia Bowl, Dec. 9, Sacramento, Cal.

6)-Alonzo Stagg Bowl, Nov. 24.

According to Assistant Athletic Director Bob O'Connell each team that participates in any of these small college bowls will be guaranteed a sum of $18,537. O'Connell added that no TV revenue goes back to the school. The Bowl Committees are responsible for lodging and feeding the teams invited to the respective Bowl.

If the University of Massachusetts accepts the bid, the probable opponent will be Delaware. Another team considered will be Tennessee Tech, 10-1 on the season. In the last two outings against Delaware in 1968 at Delaware and a year later at Alumni Stadium, UMass was stopped 28-23 and 33-21 respectively but led in both contests.

McInerney added last night that, "We have to look at this as a cost factor but right now the issue is in the hands of President Wood and the trustees."

The final vote on whether or not to take the Boardwalk offer will rest with the many positive factors that the Bowl will offer the university both financially, for recruiting, but for public relations as well.

You Can't Forget Massachusetts Bowl

By EARLE BARROLL

O.K. So the word is finally out, the waiting has ended and the UMass football team was extended a bid to the Boardwalk Bowl.

The opponent to be is Delaware, if they accept. They're 10-0, the number one small college team in the country. They smothered fellow Yankee Conference rival Maine, 62-0. And the experts will still tell you that they should be playing a major college schedule (i.e., Penn State, West Virginia, etc.).

The date of the Bowl game is December 9. But in case you've forgotten Nov. 25 at Alumni Stadium...And the opponent is Boston College.

B.C. is B.C.--'nough said. You can go 1-9, dwell in the cellar of the Yankee Conference, but if that left hand column is at the expense of the Eagles....hey, that's enough, the season was a complete success.

Not exactly, but the meaning is there. And as assistant UMass coach Larry Pasquale said last night, "we're going to the Massachusetts Bowl on Saturday."

You mention Delaware to the UMass players and thank God for Master Medical. "We're not even going to talk about Delaware and the Boardwalk Bowl until next Monday," insisted captain Clarence Brooks. "This week is strictly for Boston College."

Ask linebacker Tim Edwards and he'll tell you, "The coach has said that this is let it all hang out week. This is the last game for us on the schedule. And we're going to treat it like it is. We want to show B.C. a thing or two and stick 'em good."

For halfback Paul Metallo "this is my last home game. We still have two weeks for Delaware. There's no use to ever think about it."

And as far as head coach Dick MacPherson is concerned, "We don't have time this week to think of it. We achieved our number one objective on Saturday by winning the Conference. Our number two objective--number one in New England--culminates this weekend with Boston College.

"We think the world of B.C. and for us to reflect on Delaware this week would be an insult to Boston College."

Maybe that's why Mark Tripucka said, "We better be thinking of B.C., cause if we don't Mac will help us along."

Coburn, Oullette Selected

Senior co-captain Dave Ouellette and sophomore Tom Coburn have been named to play in the New England University Division All-Star Soccer Game at Springfield College this Sunday at 1 p.m.

Coach Gerry Redmond was quite pleased with the selection. "It is a great personal honor for these two fine players," said Redmond, "as well as an honor for the team and the school."

Ali to Fight

By JACK STEVENSON
Associated Press Sports Writer

STATELINE, Nev. (AP)--Muhammad Ali, continuing his busy 1972 schedule, risks a return shot at the heavyweight title Tuesday night when he fights hard-punching light heavyweight champion Bob Foster.

Ali goes into the ring for the scheduled 12-round bout favored to beat Foster of Albuquerque, N.M.

The ex-champ has fought and won five times this year, stopping his foes in the last three. "I'll stop that skinny little Foster in eight rounds," predicted Ali.

Table Tennis

The second annual UMass Table Tennis Tournament was held in Boyden Gymnasium this past weekend. The winners will represent UMass in the Association of College Unions - International regional tournament to be held Feb. 9 - 10 at Central Connecticut State College.

The women's singles champion was Sherrie Kowarsky and the runner-up, Lynn Russell. The women's doubles team winners were Allison Rossett and Jill Dardig. The men's singles champion was Paul Sandman and the runner-up, Rich Sandman, his brother. The winning men's doubles team was Eng-pi Chang and Dick Ti Tung.

With a Beanpot You Get Two

Under the Boardwalk--At the time the press box was motionless and only a full moon and the lingering lights from southwest offered scant illumination over a dampened terrain that had hours since witnessed and held up the weight of an obvious Yankee Conference title. And the wine bottles left in the Stadium snow wouldn't be there a week hence when the Eagle came to town. And who would have thought that three major titles wouldn't as well be available for the comrades of Alumni Stadium who were to finish in the snow and raw next week against the best that God could throw at them in '72.

At first the titles were but figments of the imaginative mind. As the Globe Correspondent and I walked out of the Stadium darkness, that first and inevitable title had been captured. And to look at the fruitless caliber of the Yankee Manor, it was an easy accolade to put in the casing. However, we won't overlook the fact that it was the first outright Yankee Conference title in five years for Massachusetts. But as programs continue to grow, Yankee Conference titles are on their way out. They just don't sell anymore.

And whose fault is that? You could blame it on the fact that Vermont was stopped by powerful AIC that same day and a week earlier rugged New Hampshire was upset (that remains a question) by Northeastern. I'm horrored. And anyone who lauds out play in the conference should be embarrassed by what we have to play. Thank God Holy Cross got out. Well, at least we did save some face by scoring over forty points in all our Conference games minus the 37-0 whitewash against BU--but I'll take the shutout.

Oh, the Conference was hapless this fall! Indeed it was a Fall for the Conference and the weather stunk. But now we can start to play some football and hark the actualization of the other two titles I told you about.

For All-New England, well, without a doubt the king will be crowned in the Amherst snow this weekend. Let our turkey settle and get back for this one. Although those Chestnut Hilltoppers are making a concerted but punishing effort at the "big time", they did conjure up over 400 yards of total offense against Paterno.

And if the Eagles and Esposito don't strike fear in the hearts of the descendants of Mr. Revere, try the Blue Hens out of that tiny estate that hides from the rest of the nation in size and importance. But Delaware and its Blue Hens have been at the top of the heap of the small college ratings for the last couple of years and it's just a question of time before they are forced to go the Major Leagues.

And it will be a "Big League" setup at Convention Hall on the ninth of December when the Minutemen might get the shot at Delaware for yes the top spot in the small college ratings. Yes, there is a possibility UMass would garner a third title, that of the best small college team in the nation.

And you should have seen the look Doug Winslow gave me when I presented my attractive title pyramic over ham and wax beans at the Hampden DC last night. "Marty, don't say a word about Delaware or I'll escort you out of here, real fast," said Doug! (I hope rather facetiously) But I can recoil under some extreme pressure. Especially the Winslow type.

Yes, it's a pleasure to walk the Boardwalk against the likes of Delaware and that has its time and place. A team with three super stars, a 33 point per-game average, and drawing power from the largest campus in New England and regionalization from Boston deserves a shot at the Hens.

So don't ask directions to Atlantic City yet although we'll all be having one or two on those MacPherson Men Under the Boardwalk. But remember the Boardwalk is four quarters away and the New Jersey beaches minus mid-summer shape are at least the breath of a New England championship away. And the team will spend Thanksgiving Day together mixing the meat of the Eagle with their cranberry sauce.

Yes we're perhaps caught in the web of football history that poor old Metawampee had to miss. You know, maybe that Ageless Algonquin didn't want to leave on a quiet note. Maybe he didn't want to leave at all. But he left us on the threshhold of an era-an opportunity for UMass football to-for the first time since Vic's Tangerine Bowl--to startle the country with wins over the pompous Eagle and the overrated, undersubscribed Mud Hen.

And as the saying goes, "We'll take 'em one at a time".

VOLUME C, ISSUE 53 UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1972

In yesterday's Board of Trustees meeting, Chancellor Bromery defended the right of campus police to carry guns and President Robert Wood applauded the Trustees new policy on tenure, as "one of the most far-reaching actions the Board has ever taken." He warned however, after the meeting, that "the tenure cannot be accepted as an automatic gift." (MDC Photos by Steve Smith)

Trustees Keep Tenure; Condemn La. Killings

By DON GLICKSTEIN

The Board of Trustees reaffirmed the concept of tenure yesterday, and rejected any maximum departmental quotas for tenured faculty.

The Trustees also condemned the killings last week of two students at Southern University in Louisiana.

The Southern University administration had "over-reacted" according to Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, and the UMass Board endorsed his views.

"Those of us in higher education," Bromery stated, "abhor what has happened down there," adding that "persons who have legitimate grievances have difficulty getting access to the Louisiana Board of Education."

He noted that he had been to the Southern campus two weeks ago, and that the situation was no more "escalated" the week of the killings than it had been when he had visited it.

Bromery observed that although someone in Louisiana may have done the actual shooting, "we, here in Amherst, also participated in pulling the trigger," through silence and inaction.

In a press conference after the Board meeting, Bromery defended the right of Campus police to carry arms. He said that "outsiders have access to the campus" and that guns were needed to protect students. Representatives from several prominent Third World campus groups had requested yesterday that all arms be banned from campus.

Bromery also said that incidents" of police harassment of black students "do happen", and urged a better educated and better paid police force on campus.

Tenure Policy

Meeting in the red-carpeted and chandeliered Bancroft Room of the new Sheraton-Lincoln Inn in Worcester, the Trustees approved a new tenure policy that officially recognizes community service and teaching as criteria for decisions.

Detailed guidelines for tenure planning, review, and appeal procedures will be issued by the Board after studies are made by the administrations of the three UMass campuses. Each campus will make a presentation to the Trustees, itemizing the present and anticipated percentages of tenured faculty and distribution.

Currently, 51% of UMass-Amherst faculty have tenure, a growth of 4% from 1971-72. If the current rate continues, three-quarters of the faculty will have tenure by 1980. Tenure and large numbers of faculty on tenure have been criticized by some educators and administrators on the grounds that they are barriers to change, new ideas, and minority recruitment.

The new tenure policy also urges departments to consider tenure decisions in the context of the University's long-range goals.

While reaffirming their belief in tenure, the Board urged new techniques such as faculty exchanges to ease the effects of increasing tenure percentages and they gave support to the exploration of tenure alternatives.

UMass President Robert C. Wood applauded the Trustees new policy, calling it "one of the most far-reaching actions the Board has ever taken." He warned after the meeting that "tenure cannot be accepted as an automatic gift".

Rhetoric Requirement

The Student Senate appeal to have the Board overturn the Faculty Senate decision not to abolish rhetoric is now in committee, and the Trustees were told that an open hearing will be heard in December.

Chairman of the Faculty and Educational Policy Committee, Frederick S. Troy said that although both sides will be heard from, "it would be improper and indeed meddlesome" to overturn the faculty action. Troy is a retired English professor.

Other Business

In other business, the Trustees:

--accepted from the Peter Pan Bus Company a free passenger waiting station for the Campus Center Garage circle.

--approved plans for a non-permanent bus garage for the 10 buses that will be purchased at Amherst under a grant from the Department of Transportation.

--expanded a 1966 room rent refund policy. The new policy refunds all but $100 if a student leaves school before the first full week of classes, and $100 plus 20% of the balance for each week up to five weeks. There will be no refunds if a student leaves after five weeks. This change was previously approved by the Student Senate.

--gave the authority to the Amherst Chancellor to set parking meter rates.

--voted to send a letter to Boston College High School, assuring the school that UMass had no designs on property owned by the school.

--approved the list of persons to receive honorary degress.

--approved a graduate program in biology for UM-B.

--approved a consortium between UM-B and Hebrew College of Boston.

--formalized the rules by which a person can appear before the Trustees or a Trustee committee. This was a response to meeting disruptions last spring by a group of people opposed to R.O.T.C. on the Boston campus.

--approved the constitution "in principle" for College I and II at UM-B. These are the two existing liberal arts divisions on the Boston campus. College III, Community Service, is expected to open in fall, 1973.

--gave a citation to retiring board member Major General John J. Maginnis.

--heard President Wood's report of the Durham conference (see related story page 2).

Campus Clearinghouse Meets

CULTURNATIVES Clearinghouse held its initial organizational meeting Monday night. The group, formed under the auspices of the United Christian Foundation Peace Action Task Force, was conceived as a result of Gil Salk's weekly CULTURNATIVES column in the Collegian.

Salk, who acted as coordinator of the meeting, announced that the Clearinghouse would gather and disseminate information about resources available to the campus community which would be useful to those seeking some sort of alternatives within their lives. The group would gather information on people within the community who have skills which they are willing to share or teach, or ideas on which they want to work, as well as compile ideas and suggested programs for change which don't have people behind them for the moment.

Once the information has been compiled, CULTURNATIVES Clearinghouse will disseminate it through a variety of media with three major goals in mind. The first will be to simply inform the community of the wide range of skills, tools, and resources available within it, and where they can be located. Secondly, the Clearinghouse will be able to get people who have similar ideas and programs in touch with each other. The third purpose is the hope that the gathering of these resources will result in a critical mass which will generate new ideas, programs, individual initiative, and individual freedom.

At one point in the meeting, members brainstormed a list of areas in which skills are known to be available or where needs are known to exist. CULTURNATIVES Clearinghouse will try to compile information relevant to all these areas.

A partial list: communes; action programs; crafts skills; building skills; publicity; ideological and political skills; organizational development; human relations training; legal aid; volunteers & vocations for social change; problem pregnancies; community development; hobby skills; alternative income production; alternative summer programs; ecological living; art skills; astrology & religion; co-ops (medical-food-clothing-books-tools-etc.); consumer info; draft, taxes, & military; commune development (physical plant--locations-income-social systems); sexuality; life plannings; value clarification; women's-men's-gay-human lib; third world; alternative education; guerilla theater; drugs.

The list, according to Salk, is open to nearly any additions, and he urges people with skills in any of these areas to contact the Clearinghouse and leave their name so an interviewer can contact them.

He also emphasized that more people are needed as interviewers, to help in the office, to assist with publicity, and, as the information starts to be collated, to help disseminate it. Those who are interested in being working members of the CULTURNATIVES Clearinghouse are urged to attend the next meeting on Wed., Nov. 29, at 7:30 p.m. in 909 C.C. or call Gil Salk at 545-0813.

People planning to attend the next meeting were asked to perform four tasks prior to the meeting. First is to prepare a sample questionnaire which interviewers could use when talking to individuals. Secondly, prepare a sample form to be used to gather information about groups. Both samples will be used to prepare two master questionnaires which will be keyed to the information retrieval system to be devised by the Clearinghouse. Third, people have been asked to list possible people and groups which should be included in the initial series of interviews. Finally, members were asked to prepare a list of their own skills, interests, hobbies, etc., in order to determine what resources are immediately available to the Clearinghouse. New members are asked to try to come to the meeting with this work done if they possibly can.

'Kennedy Years' Film On Channel 22 Tonight

"John F. Kennedy: Years of Lightning, Day of Drums," the critically-acclaimed documentary produced by the U.S. Information Agency for showing in foreign countries, will be telecast by Channel 22 tonight from 8:30 to 10:00 p.m.

The film covers the two years and ten months of John F. Kennedy's suddenly-terminated service as President of the United States. Its showing in the country was made possible by a special Act of Congress.

"Years of Lightning, Day of Drums" is, in part, a memorial to President Kennedy - the "Years of Lightning" representing the major programs which he instituted in various fields - and, at the same time, projects the determination of the United States that men of all nations should live in freedom and equality.

The late President's programs are presented as the six faces of the New Frontier - the Peace Corps, the Alliance for Progress, Civil Rights, the Exploration of Space, the Pursuit of Peace, and Military Preparedness. He is shown carrying his messages of peace and progress to various countries and is heard commenting on crucial issues at home and abroad, as the film dramatically illustrates them. Excerpts from some of his most famous speeches are included.

The personal efforts of President Kennedy, and the efforts of the U.S. Government to carry out his aims, are interwoven with scenes of the late President's funeral - the "Day of Drums."

Gregory Peck narrates the special, which contains scenes in color as well as black-and-white.

WMPIRG Hits High Drug Prices

The Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) has launched a drive to lower prescription drug costs, following release of a price survey of ninety area pharmacies. The study revealed generally high and widely varied prices for an identical drug at stores throughout Western Mass.

"The survey results," said Ron Bogard, WMPIRG Director, "show that consumers pay too much for prescription drugs because they have no means of getting adequate information about drug prices."

As a result of the survey findings, WMPIRG will seek passage of local and state laws requiring pharmacists to post prices for commonly-sold prescription drugs. WMPIRG maintains that posting will enable consumers to shop for low drug prices as they do for other purchased products. "Every other item in stores has a price tag, and drugs should too," said Bogard. "Consumers have a right to know what they're going to pay for a prescription."

Twenty-five student volunteers conducted the survey last month in Springfield, Holyoke, Northampton, Amherst, Pittsfield and six other Western Mass. towns. The students requested price quotes for identical prescriptions of a commonly-used antibiotic, erythromycin. Prices ranged from a low of $2.00 in a Holyoke pharmacy to a high of $9.97 in Springfield for twenty capsules of the drug. $5.03 was the overall average for the prescription in all stores surveyed.

Fifteen percent of the pharamacists discouraged comparative shopping by refusing to quote a drug price prior to sale. Forty percent gave prices willingly; nearly half of the druggists provided price quotes only with hesitation and after repeated questioning.

The study showed no noticeable price differences in minority districts or low-income neighborhoods; neither were prices affected by the size of the pharmacy. "We found no patterns that could explain the price variations," said Dorothea Katzenstein, WMPIRG staff member who headed the survey project. "In several cases, stores of equal size on the same street would show a 400-500% price range for the drug. We think that if consumers knew of the price differences, they would seek out the less expensive places to shop."

The WMPIRG study was designed as a follow-up of a more intensive survey conducted in Boston last year by the Boston Consumer Council. That study, in which researchers purchased a test drug in all 223 Boston pharmacies, revealed a comparably wide and inconsistent range of prices. The Boston survey prompted adoption of a city-wide ordinance requiring pharmacists to post prices for the 100 most commonly-sold prescription drugs. Vermont legislators recently passed a similar law requiring price posting on a state-wide level.

The WMPIRG survey also revealed inadequacies in Massachusetts' first-in-the nation generic drug law, according to Ms. Katzenstein. Backers of the bill, enacted in 1970, predicted consumer savings of millions of dollars in annual drug costs. The law requires doctors to prescribe drugs either by the generic, or common, name or by both the generic and brand name. Drugs purchased by generic name are less expensive than those purchased by brand name or trademark.

"Preliminary reports show that the law is ineffective, and our survey supports that view," said Ms. Katzenstein. "WMPIRG researchers asked for the test drug by generic name, but often they were quoted prices for the more expensive brand name. Many pharmacists said they don't even stock generics, forcing consumers to buy the higher-priced brand-name drugs."

AFTRA Halted From Respecting CBS Pickets

NEW YORK (AP)--The American Federation of Television and Radio Artists was forbidden by a judge Tuesday to order its members to respect another union's picket lines at Columbia Broadcasting System facilities.

AFTRA said it would comply and was notifying its locals in the six cities affected that all newsmen, entertainers and other on-air personalities "will continue work until further notice."

It said, however, that it would appeal the court ruling immediately.

The ruling, in New York State Supreme Court, came scarcely an hour before AFTRA members planned to begin respecting picket lines of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Both unions are affiliates of the AFL-CIO.

Judge Hyman Korn in his ruling said that "it seems clear that the possible irreparable injury that would flow to CBS from withholding the injunction is far greater than any injury that defendants AFTRA might sustain if the injunction is granted.

The ruling also meant that in the event AFTRA does not rescind its order, union officials could be punished for contempt.

However, newsmen who have individual employment contracts with CBS could make individual decisions as to whether they will comply with the court directive and cross the IBEW lines.

The court order was addressed to the president and treasurer of AFTRA and directed them to rescind instructions to their members to cease crossing picket lines as of 6 p.m.

CBS attorneys went to court in an effort to prevent 1,700 on-air employes from observing picket lines set up by the 1,200 striking technicians.

AFTRA argued that since its contract with the network expired Nov. 15, a no-strike clause had also expired.

Johnston Defends Gun-Carrying Policy

By BOB SCHEIER

Security Department Director David L. Johnston yesterday said changes were needed in the way both students and security police saw each other.

He made his remarks in the wake of charges made Monday by a group of black students and faculty that they had been harassed by security police, and a call by them for the immediate disarmament of the campus police.

Johnston also defended the carrying of guns by the police officers, saying "Persons from within and without the university community have weapons."

"There is a need-not a great one, but there is a need for officers to be armed," he said.

In a meeting Monday with assistant director of security Saul Chafin, the students claimed blacks were stopped for license and registration checks while driving more often than white students.

Several students also said black students were the first to be suspected when crimes were committed on campus.

David L. Johnston

"I'm very concerned about the perception of the community about the police," Johnston said. "Any case where a student, faculty member, or staff member feels he has been insulted or threatened, I want to know about it personally."

He said some of the complaints of harassment by police were "more the perception of the person" than any action of a police officer.

"Some of these students may have had unsatisfactory experiences with other departments," he said.

Charges made by students of police approaching their cars for license and registration checks with their hands on their guns might have been caused by the policemen resting their hands on their hips near the guns, he said.

"In my 10 months here, it has never been brought to my attention that an officer harassed a citizen," he said. "And we've never had a police officer here shoot at anyone."

He said he had not received any indication that any security police were racist, adding that police had discretion in stopping cars for license and registration checks.

Since the police normally don't keep a record of a vehicle check if the license and registration were in order, he continued, there was no way to determine how many black students were being stopped compared to white students.

"We need to change the perception of minority students," he said.

He also said a training program including seminars and role-playing sessions, was being planned to counsel the police on race and human relations.

In the role-playing, Johnston said, a student and policeman might act out a situation such as a policeman stopping a driver for a license and registration check.

On the firearms policy of the police, Johnston said the department had a "very stringent" policy on the use of the weapons -that they be used only in defense of someone's life.

"That specifically excludes their use in theft or property cases," he said.

He said he supported a police advisory group, currently being formed by the Student Government Association, to provide student input on a formal basis. (See related story on this page)

Johnston also said he and vice-chancellor for student affairs Robert W. Gage would meet with Prof. Michael M. Thelwell, head of the Afro-American studies department, to discuss the disarmament issue.

If the action were taken to the trustees, Johnston said, he had "no idea" of what action they might take, but said he would honor their decision.

Project 10 To Offer 25 3 Credit Seminars

Project 10, the campus self-styled "experimental college," will offer at least 25 special three-credit seminars next semester, ranging from food ecology, science fiction, and law to poverty in the inner city, and the history of the Cold War.

Among the Project faculty in the spring are Robert Wood, the University president, and Richard Howland, the Student Senate counsel.

Project 10, an academic program linking Cance and Pierpont Houses in Southwest, is now in its fifth year, and includes the option to undertake independent study and to devise an experimental freshman-sophomore year freed of core requirements.

This latter program-called the Inquiry program from the modes of inquiry seminars featured within it--began this year and now includes nearly 60 students, each of them individually negotiating a plan of study with a faculty advisor, without the oblication to take five courses each semester and with the possibility of earning 60 credits in as few as three semesters of regular study.

One of the primary aims of the students in Pierpont, where until this year the program has been centered, is to create and sustain a feeling of community and mutal aid in a dormitory setting, and to enliven the living atmosphere with both academics and experimental life-styles.

A recent Project effort was to stage the two-day Zen Circus as a mixed-media "happening" of music, film, art, and food, to celebrate the creation of an art gallery in Pierpont.

A weekly newspaper, Genesis, is published in Pierpont, and this year work has already begun to paint murals throughout the building and to complete work on a kitchen and food service out of the proceeds earned last week when the Project ran the food concession at the School of Education Marathon.

The Project is not restricted to residents of Cance and Pierpont. As an academic program it is available to students living off-campus and to the people in University Without Walls.

People interested in applying to live in Pierpont next semester should visit the Project office and file an application with the head of residence no later than 5 p.m. Monday, November 27. The curious should phone the Project office at 5-0871.

SGA Plans Security Council

By BOB SCHEIER

While charges of harassment of students and a demand for disarmament of the campus police come from students, the Student Government Association has announced plans for an advisory board for the UMass Security Dept.

SG President Larry Ladd said last night the advisory board, which would be called the Security Policy Council, would review the operations of and complaints against the department.

He said the plan would be submitted to the Student Senate when it meets next Wednesday, and go from there to the administration for approval.

According to Ladd, the proposed council would advise and assist the security director on security policy, as well as give advice in emergencies (such as disturbances on campus) and review complaints against the department.

The proposed board would also establish a grievance procedure for the conciliation of complaints. be a final board of appeal in complaint cases, and review and evaluate performance of the principal administrators of the Security Dept. every two years.

In its appeal function, Ladd said the board would have powers of investigation, could compel witnesses to appear, retain a temporary professional counsel, and make its conclusions public.

The review of the department's administration, Ladd said, would not go below the director and assistant director level.

According to Ladd, the board would have power to review and approve the operating budget of the department, although the UMass administration would still have final say.

On the proposed board would be two representatives of the employes unions, one appointee of the SGA president, four members elected by the district electing the Third World representatives to the Student Senate, four area government representatives, one faculty-senate representative, one representative of the graduate senate, and the director of security, who would not have voting powers.

Office For Handicapped Coming

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Working through University Health Services, a group of people from around the University have begun on a small scale the implementation of plans which would result in the establishment of an Office of Coordinator for Handicapped Students on the UMass Campus.

Dr. Michael Cann, a staff psychologist at the University Mental Health Services and Chairman of the Committee to establish the Coordinator's Office, said Monday that the reason for the stablishment of the office is that "the handicapped have a lot of complex problems that the normal doesn't think of." He cited such possible aids as allowing handicapped students to live closer to where their classes are and moving some classes to first floors in academic buildings instead of upper levels to help the handicapped. Cann's contention was that people without handicaps don't think of doing those kind of things.

As far as the coordinator's job itself, the major function of the office would be to make the coordinator an advocate of the handicapped inorder to help better integrate them into campus life.

According to Lynne McCoart, a graduate student working on the project with the committee, there are about 270 handicapped people on campus. Judith Sharpe, a Registered Nurse at University Health Services and a member of the committee, told the Collegian that it's "hard to tell how many handicapped there aie on campus."

In Steve Anderson's Editorial column on page eight of yesterday's paper it was stated that the special referendum concerning the Boltwood Walk Plan would be held Monday, Nov. 27, and that the polls would be open from eight to twelve. The hours which the polling places will be open are in fact 12 noon to 8 p.m. We regret the error.

'Jovial Atmosphere' Marks Peace Talks

PARIS (AP)-Henry A. Kissinger and Hanoi's Politburo member, Le Duc Tho, laughed and joked together Tuesday as they conferred for more than four hours in a villa belonging to the French Communist party.

Kissinger then called a pause in his critical Vietnam bargaining session with Tho to pay a flying visit to Brussels Wednesday for talks with Indonesian leaders.

The second day of the new round of secret talks was marked by a visibly jovial atmosphere between the two negotiators, suggesting that the discussions may be going well behind the total news blackout.

Tho and his delegation arrived at the conference villa before and left after him, suggesting that they regarded themselves as the hosts in a building normally used by the French Communist leadership.

Kissinger flew to Brussels Tuesday night to confer with President Suharto of Indonesia, one of four countries named to serve on the international control commission that would supervise a cease-fire. Suharto is on a tour of European capitals. Kissinger was expected to return to Paris early Wednesday.

At the Camp David presidential retreat near Washington, White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said a third negotiating session would be held Wednesday afternoon after Kissinger returns from Brussels.

Spokesmen on both sides refused comment on the subjects under discussion at the 4-1/2 hour meeting in suburban Gif-Sur-Yvette, 15 miles southwest of Paris.

Kissinger's meeting with Suharto was envisaged before the secret talks began Monday, said the White House press secretary, Ronald L. Ziegler.

Kissinger has said "six or seven concrete points" still needed to be ironed out to finalize the peace agreement he drafted with Tho last month. He has declined to spell out these points precisely, but they were believed to have arisen from objections to the agreement expressed by President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam.

At the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md., Ziegler said Kissinger had cabled reports to President Nixon on Monday and Tuesday and that the President "had communicated back to him by cable." He would not discuss the contents of the cables.

Kissinger and Tho did not meet in the morning, apparently because Tho wanted time to consult with Hanoi on Monday's 5-1/2 hour discussion. Both Kissinger and Tho put out word that they would confer with their respective allies in South Vietnam, the Saigon government and the Viet Cong, immediately after each meeting.

Reports from Saigon restating Thieu's objections were described by the North Vietnamese speakers as unacceptable at earlier meetings of the semi-public peace talks attended by all four delegations.

Kissinger showed no outward sign of concern over the apparent obstacles to what he has described as perhaps "the final phase of negotiations to end the war in Indochina." He appeared smiling and relaxed shortly before the meeting, when he escorted a beautiful, well-dressed blonde to lunch at a fashionable restaurant near the U.S. Embassy.

Friends identified the girl as Jan Cushing, wife of Freddy Cushing, an official of an American investment bank. The friends said the Cushings were staying in Paris and have invited Kissinger to Thanksgiving dinner Thursday-indicating that the talks may continue beyond that day.

Kissinger has said President Nixon has instructed him to remain in Paris "as long as is useful." Kissinger is in close touch with the President on the day-by-day progress of the talks.

In Brief...

Kennedy Memorial Services

WASHINGTON (AP)-Memorial services for slain President John F. Kennedy will be held today in Dallas and Washington.

School pupils will help Mayor Wes Wise conduct rites in Dallas at the Kennedy Memorial, a few hundred yards from the scene of the assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. The pupils will lead prayers and scripture reading, with a Jesuit high school band to play music for hymns.

In Washington, a private memorial mass for close friends of the late president will be conducted at Holy Trinity Church in Georgetown.

Bethlehem Steel To Raise Prices

PITTSBURGH, Pa. (AP)-Bethlehem Steel, the nation's second largest producer of steel, announced price increases Tuesday on a broad range of products used in the construction, machinery, automotive and container industries.

The hikes, most of which become effective Jan. 1, follow similar price increases announced last Friday by U.S. Steel, the nation's biggest steel producer, and voer more than half Bethlehem's products line.

Film Owners Scanning Vaults For Box Office 'Hits'

HOLLYWOOD (AP)-The current craze for nostalgia is causing film owners to scan their vaults in hopes that long-ago movies can still be box office.

Talkies of the 1930s, especially musicals of the Busby Berkeley genre, have attracted customers seeking entertainment of another, more placid era. Now it appears there might be a market for silent films.

34 Countries Confer On Europe

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — Representatives of the United States, the Soviet Union and 32 other countries are meeting Wednesday for the broadest effort to end conflicts in Europe since World War II.

Everybody in Europe is represented except Albania, Communist China's ally. There are all the North Atlantic allies, including Canada; all the East European bloc, including East Germany; and all the neutrals, even Switzerland. There are some unusual ones: the Vatican, unrepresented at such meetings since 1822; tiny Lichtenstein; and San Marino, the little republic inside Italy.

It was the first big preparatory session for a conference on security and cooperation in Europe. That will open — if the preparations succeed — in June. the Soviets attach great importance to it. They have sent Valerian Zorin, a deputy foreign minister who used to represent them in the United Nations.

The U.S. delegation is led by former Gov. Val Peterson of Nebraska, now ambassador to Finland. George Vest, a veteran foreign service officer is his chief adviser.

Wednesday's meeting will be only the opening ceremony to name the chairman, Richard Toetterman of the Finnish Foreign Ministry.

On Thursday, unless a fight over procedural delays matters, the diplomats hope to get down to their main business: deciding what the conference would talk about. No one can say how long that will take.

The way the discussion topics are phrased will be the subject of delicate negotiation because they show in advance how much the conference will be able to accomplish. For example, would it discuss "freer movement of people, information and ideas" as the Western countries want, or would it deal only with what the Soviets prefer to call "various mutually advantageous contacts," which does not actually commit them to let more people cross their borders.

One Western delegation outlined four major areas for discussions:

—Relations among governments, including both "peaceful coexistence" and "confidence building measures."

—Economic, technical, scientific and environmental cooperation. Here the Soviets want to put the emphasis on opening new markets for themselves, and getting economic aid.

—More East-West contacts.

—Permanent machinery to keep this all going.

The Soviets have pressed for such machinery. The United States has been skeptical, wanting to make sure first that there is something worth having such an organization for.

U.S. officials say that unless enough common ground appears, there may be no use having a conference at all. The Soviets see no trouble about that and sometimes refer to the Helsinki meeting as almost "a formality that can be completed before Christmas.

Federal Court Reverses 'Chicago Seven' Convictions

CHICAGO (AP)-A federal appeals court, citing errors by trial Judge Julius J. Hoffman, reversed Tuesday the convictions of the five Chicago Seven defendants found guilty of crossing state lines to incite riots at the 1968 Democratic National Convention.

In a 2-1 ruling reversing the convictions of David T. Dellinger, Tom E. Hayden, Rennie C. Davis, Abbie Hoffman, and Jerry C. Rubin, the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said the constitutional rights of the defendants may have been violated.

The judges ruled that Hoffman erred in several areas during the stormy U.S. district court trial in 1969 and 1970 and displayed "a deprecatory and often antagonistic attitude toward the defense...from the very beginning."

The appeals court said the government could retry the defendants, but added, "There is evidence in the record which, if believed, and inferences favorable to the defendants drawn, would lead a jury to acquit."

James R. Thompson, U.S. district attorney for Northern Illinois, said he would confer with the U.S. attorney general about any new trial. A Justice Department spokesman in Washington declined comment on a possible retrial until the appeals court opinion was read.

William M. Kunstler of New York City, who headed the defense staff, said, "I can't see how they can justify public expense of funds to continue this grotesque case. It never should have been brought in the first place."

In arguing before the appeals court, defense lawyers contended the antiriot section of the 1968 Civil Rights Act, under which the defendants were indicted, is unconstitutional.

The appeals court majority, Judges Thomas Fairchild and Walter Cummings, held the statute valid, but Judge Wilbur F. Pell, in his dissent, said, "I entertain no doubts that the statute under which the appellants were prosecuted is facially unconstitutional in that it is clearly violative of the First Amendment right of freedom of speech."

Judge Pell added that while he agrees with the majority opinion in that the convictions should have been reversed, he dissented from the interpretation of Fairchild and Cummings that the act is constitutional.

The five men were sentenced Feb. 18, 1970, by Judge Hoffman to serve five years in prison and were fined $5,000 each. Two other defendants, John R. Froines and Lee Winer, were acquitted and all seven were acquitted of charges they conspired to incite rioting.

An eighth defendant, Black Panther leader Bobby Seale, was severed from the others during the trial for his courtroom outbursts, sentenced for contempt and a mistrial was declared. The government declined to retry Seale.

The seven remaining defendants and their two lawyers were sentenced for contempt at the end of the trial. The 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed those convictions earlier this year on the grounds that Hoffman should have removed himself from the case. The government says it plans to retry the defendants for contempt.

Second Phase of SALT Talks Begins

GENEVA (AP)-President Nixon said in a message Tuesday to the American SALT II delegation that "the hopes of all mankind" accompany the talks to curb the offensive nuclear might of the United States and the Soviet Union.

The second phase of the strategic arms limitations talks between the two superpowers began with a 95-minute session.

SALT II's opening round, likely to last until shortly before Christmas, is to lay groundwork for further negotiations that could last for the duration of the five-year interim SALT agreement signed by Nixon last May in Moscow.

That agreement was the culmination of the SALT I talks that began Nov. 17, 1969, and alternated for 2-1/2 years between Helsinski, Finland, and Vienna, Austria.

Nixon's opening message for SALT II was addressed to Gerard C. Smith, the chief U.S. negotiator.

"The achievements of the SALT agreements, as well as the basic principles governing our relations with the Soviet Union, lead me to believe that our current efforts will meet with new success," the President said. "You have with you the hopes of all the American people-and indeed the hopes of all mankind."

Smith read the letter at the opening session, held in the Soviet mission. The next session is scheduled Friday in the U.S. mission.

Park Increases Power With New Constitution

SEOUL (AP)-South Korean voters gave President Chung Hee Park a landslide victory in Tuesday's referendum by overwhelmingly approving a "Korean democracy" constitution which would allow him to stay in office indefinitely with more power than before.

With about 65 per cent of the votes counted from across the country, Park's move to end Western-style democracy won 8,084,328 votes, more than the simple majority he needed, with 642,241 voting against.

Election committee officials said about 90 per cent of the nation's 15.6 million eligible voters cast ballots despite generally chilly and partly snowy weather.

Park suspended the old constitution when he proclaimed martial law Oct. 17, declaring that sweeping reforms were needed to save the nation from "big power" politics and to better conduct the dialogue with Communist North Korea for peaceful national reunification.

The 55-year-old general turned politician, who first came to power in a bloodless coup in 1961, also dissolved the National Assembly, banned all political activities and clamped rigid censorship on the press to clear the way for his proposed reforms. No vocal opposition to the proposed new constitution has been allowed.

Park did not specify what he would do if the voters turned down his constitution.

The new constitution would extend the presidential term from four to six years, with no limit on the number of terms.

The president would be elected not by a popular vote as in the past but by an electoral college, with one member to be elected from each of the nation's 2,800 townships.

Park was certain to be elected to the new, more powerful presidency and to be sworn in some time next month.

The new constitution would allow the president to hand pick one-third of the single-house National Assembly, which could be dissolved whenever he chose.

Chung Hee Park was given an overwhelming mandate, as he was voted South Korea's President again with extended powers. (AP)

Park has said his country could not afford to waste time and energy in imitating a Western democracy at a time when it was opening a crucial dialogue with North Korea for national unification.

Park's current four-year term, which would have been his last under the old constitution, would have expired in 1975. He last was elected in 1971-to his third term-after he amended the constitution in 1969, eliminating its two-term limit.

Park has built power largely on the nation's 600,000-man armed forces, the big business patronized by the government and the traditionally progovernment rural areas.

Syria, Israel Break Cease-Fire

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israel and Syria clashed along the Golan Heights cease-fire line in daylong air, tank and artillery duels Tuesday in some of the heaviest Middle East fighting since the 1967 war.

Israel blamed the outbreak on Palestinian guerrillas operating from Syria and reported it shot down six Syrian jets and destroyed 15 tanks.

A Syrian communique broadcast by Damascus radio acknowledged the loss of two planes. Six Syrian soldiers were killed and 11 injured in the fighting that lasted from morning to sundown, it added.

The communique claimed Syrian forces shot down three Israeli planes, disabled 14 tanks and knocked out eight fortified Israeli positions. An Israeli tank battalion commander and two officers were killed in the battle, it said.

In Tel Aviv, the Israelis reported none of their tanks or planes were lost. But the military command said an Israeli civilian was killed and two other civilians and a soldier were wounded by artillery fire.

An Israeli military spokesman reported two U.N. observation posts on the cease-fire line were hit and their installations were destroyed. He said both posts bore clear markings and flags of the United Nations. No U.N. personnel were reported injured.

The eight hours of fighting ended at dusk. During that time, the Israelis claimed, they scored direct hits from the air on three guerrilla encampments and two divisions headquarters of the Syrian infantry as deep as 50 miles inside Syrian territory.

Military observers in Israel could not recall heavier fighting in the Golan area since a three-day Israeli armored attack into Syria in June 1970.

The flareup along the tense Golan Heights cease-fire line

The flareup occurred along the tense Golan Heights cease-fire line. The second such clash this month, it came after Palestinian guerrillas infiltrated occupied territory and laid land mines which damaged two Israeli vehicles last week, a senior officer of the Israeli command said.

Early Tuesday an army patrol discovered two more mines and fresh tracks leading to Syria, the officer continued, and planes were sent on a retaliatory mission.

After the last major fighting Nov. 9, Syria declared it would continue to support guerrilla operations "no matter how heavy they are." The pledge was repeated again Tuesday on Damascus radio.

In an apparent reference to the silence of Egypt's guns along the Suez Canal, the broadcast said, "the Syrian challenge to Israeli arrogance should be an example for other Arab countries to follow."

In Cairo, Deputy Premier Abdel Kader Hatem said the Egyptian Cabinet met for five hours to discuss the fighting and took "urgent measures."

There was no elaboration but reports in Beirut said Egypt may break the U.S.-sponsored Middle East cease-fire of August 1970 to force the big powers to end the Middle East deadlock.

Until recently, the Syrian command kept the guerrillas under tight rein, but pressure for controls to be relaxed built up when the guerrillas were forced to suspend operations in neighboring Lebanon, after a major Israeli incursion in September.

Westwood May Step Down For Her 'Favorite Son'

WASHINGTON (AP)-Robert Strauss, who is emerging as a principal contender for the top job of the Democratic National Committee, said Tuesday the present chairman will be unsuccessful if she tries to name her own replacement.

"I can assure you that the responsible leadership of the Democratic party is not going to let Jean Westwood select the next chairman and I think she makes a mistake in attempting to do that," Strauss said.

Strauss, a Dallas, Tex., attorney who was party treasurer from 1970 until last July, said in an interview "if you think the Democratic leadership in the Senate and House and the Democratic governors are going to let a small group...pick the next chairman, you're wrong."

By the same token, Strauss said, his own chances to replace Mrs. Westwood as chairman are hurt by what he terms an incorrect image of "me being the candidate of organized labor and the South" to the exclusion of other segments of the party.

What the party needs, Strauss said, is someone who is "not an ideologue," someone "who can put back together the pieces that have traditionally made the Democratic party and have now fallen part."

"The Democratic party can ill-afford to purge anybody or lose anybody," Strauss said. He noted that only two Democrats have been elected president in the last 100 years with more than 50 per cent of the total vote cast for all candidates-Franklin Roosevelt and Lyndon B. Johnson.

Mrs. Westwood, the first woman chairman of either major party who was presidential candidate George McGovern's choice for the job, is being pressured to resign and let the full national committee pick a new chairman when it meets here Dec. 9.

There is speculation that she might step down if she is confident that Portland, Maine, attorney George Mitchell would be elected to replace her.

Mitchell, who presumably sides with Mrs. Westwood in strong support of recent party reforms, was the director of the unsuccessful presidential campaign of Maine Sen. Edmund S. Muskie.

Reporter Wins Round In Manson Story Trial

LOS ANGELES (AP)-Newsman William Farr lost a legal maneuver Tuesday that appeared would send him to jail indefinitely, but then won an unexpected reprieve from the judge who originally cited him for contempt.

Superior Court Judge Charles Older, in an surprise move, announced that Farr would remain free until next Monday.

The judge said he would then summon all attorneys who were involved in the Charles Manson trial and ask each of them under oath to say whether they gave Farr information for a story he wrote during the Manson murder trial.

All six defense and prosecution attorneys from the Manson trial and four other persons have previously sworn they did not give Farr the secret statement of a prospective witness detailing an alleged plan by the Manson clan to kill movie stars.

Farr has refused to reveal the source for his story, saying only that it was one or more attorneys. He was cited for contempt of court after the trial and was sentenced last week to jail until he was willing to talk, no matter how long that takes.

The U.S. Supreme Court has refused to hear an appeal of his contempt conviction.

He was jailed briefly last Thursday but was released after his attorney appealed to the District Court of Appeals on new grounds.

Apollo 17 Prepares For Final Mission

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP)-Clad in bulky space suits, the Apollo 17 astronauts boarded spaceship America Tuesday night to practice a countdown for the last planned flight to the moon on Dec. 6.

"It's a beautiful bird," said Apollo Commander Eugene A. Cernan as he slipped into his contoured couch and checked the communications system.

Cernan, geologist Dr. Harrison H. Schmitt and Ronald E. Evans duplicated the procedures they will follow on launch night in the simulated runthrough.

They suited up, rode a special van nine miles to the launch pad and took a highspeed elevator to their spacecraft, 320 feet high, atop a Saturn 5 rocket.

They claimed into the cabin at 7:13 p.m. EST to run through the final 2-1/2 hours of a practice countdown, with the launch team aiming for a simulated liftoff of the rocket at 9:53 p.m., the same time planned for launch night in the first after-dark liftoff of a U.S. man-in-space flight.

The prospect of a spectacular departure, plus the fact that Apollo 17 is the last in the series, is expected to lure nearly one million outsiders to the area and create mammoth traffic jams.

With the conclusion of the last test, the launch crew will concentrate on readying the rocket, the command vehicle America and the lunar lander Challenger for the actual countdown, which is to start Nov. 30.

Crews on Monday completed a full-scale dress rehearsal of the count. Launch Director Walter Kapryan reported it went very well.

For the last Apollo mission, scientists have selected a geologically complex landing site named Taurus-Littrow in the northeast quadrant on the moon on the rim of the Sea of Serenity.

Tenure Criteria

For years, students as well as faculty have complained bout the policies of "publish or perish". Untold numbers f excellent teachers have been fired because personnel ommittees have refused to recognize the importance of eaching and community service.

Yesterday, the Board of Trustees established a new olicy for granting tenure. They acknowledged that distinction in teaching" and "service to the University nd the Commonwealth" are as valid criteria for granting enure as scholarship and research.

During the next few months, the administrations of each ampus will be formulating specific guidelines for tenure lanning, review, and appeal procedures. As the perentage of tenured faculty on this campus grows greater, hese guidelines will become more and more significant.

We hope that the administration will achieve a degree of exibility in the guidelines.

The guidelines must be based on performance, not uperficialities. A teacher with only a bachelor's degree hust be given the same opportunity for tenure that a eacher with a Ph.D. has. Day-to-day student observations hust hold greater importance than professional rumors mongst colleagues. Above all, the decision-making rocesses should be publicized and public. There is no lace in a free society for irrevocable, secret decisions.

Mau-Mauing The Collegian

They said it couldn't be done. They said nobody would do it. But it happened. The Collegian got Mau-Maued.

What's a Mau-Mau? Let me explain. The term was originally used as a name for the anti-British underground in Kenya. But in the modern usage, the term Mau-Mau is used to denote that highly developed art of confrontation and intimidation. A cruder form of the art has been used traditionally by the underworld gangsters, who deliver "offers that can't be refused," backed up with the appropriate muscle and firearms.

That type of Mau-Mauing was nothing more than unrefined intimidation. Its results were limited by the degree of courage exhibited by the victim (he could always call the cops after the goons departed). Today, however, the art has been developed into a laboratory science, and the results are amazing. If one uses the right formula, one can Mau-Mau and make the victim feel guilty.

In the contemporary context, Mau-Mauing achieves its best results if the practioner is a member of the proverbial "Third World", and the victim is a White, middle class, "knee-jerk" liberal. The latter criterion is more essential. One can resist being totally Mau-Maued by not adhering to those currently fashionable liberal doctrines, such as the doctrine that we're all some way guilty of racism, and obligated to pay reparatory indemnities to whomever claims to be the victim of racial persecution. If you're in the unfortunate position of being a knee-jerk liberal (I sure as hell ain't), then you are totally defenseless.

The Editors of the Collegian fell victim to a Mau-Mau on Monday, and they were pitifully defenseless. When the office was invaded by angry students, claiming to be spokesmen and spokeswomen for the entire "Third World" community (Who appointed them to speak in their behalf, I don't know), the defenseless liberals could only surrender.

What would have happened if the Editors were not shackled by that knee-jerk complex? What would I have done if I were in their place, since I don't have that particular complex? Well, let me tell you.

"When fifty or so angry students entered the Collegian Office, Editor in Chief Matt Tackeff was informed of the existence of a protest rally in the Ballroom, calling attention to the death of two students at Southern University. Since such rallies usually receive front page reviews, Tackeff offered to give the rally the usual front page, and assigned his top reporter, Bob Schlep, to cover the story. But Tackeff was presented with a list of "non-negotiable demands", and the demands included one which required that the First Three Pages of the paper be given to cover the story and the underlying grievances. Tackeff said that he never feared to negotiate, but would not negotiate out of fear. "Non-Negotiable demands, brother! Either you fork over, or there won't be any more Collegian!" exclaimed Maria Toughshit, who assumed the role of Spokeswoman for the Spokesmen of the Third World. "Okay," replied Matt, "have it your way. No more Collegian."

"Subsequently, Tackeff walked out of the Collegian office and invaded the office of Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. The entire matter was turned over to the Chancellor, who took two Alka-Seltzer, stormed out of the office, and hasn't been seen since."

Academic Review

We are rapidly drawing to the close of our first semester under the new academic calendar plan. Things should become very cramped from here on in. Anxiety should be running high. In general the pace should accelerate to a degree higher than it is at the moment.

It seems the adjustment to our new academic calendar has been awkward, both for the faculty and the students. UMass does not seem to have shifted its gears to adjust to the demands of the new calendar. The time between assignments are shorter than ever. The demands of each class leave little time for reflection or even further research.

The new calendar shortens the academic semester. The time within each semester now is approaching the time alloted under a quarter system. At the same time the student is still expected to meet the demands of the semester system we had last year. The average credit load we are expected to maintain has remained the same, while the time alloted to tackle our courses has shortened. The consequences are varied. Students find themselves with only enough time to get the assignment done. With one demand on top of another from each class, the student is forced into a role of a mechanistic reader, writer, and thinker. A student finishes one assignment and immediately has to start thinking about the next ones. It does not seem to be the most conducive situation for education or development. In fact it seems to work against these ends. Its hard to reflect and investigate and internalize what you have learned when you have no time to do so. It becomes aggravating when a professor looks for additional student motivation, when the student couldn't demonstrate it if he or she wanted to. There is hardly enough time to fulfill the requirements of each course.

We think a student would make better use of a semester if he or she were not so overtaxed with syllabus responsibilities. The time we have to explore our particular disciplines has decreased. Possibly it would be worthwhile if the number of courses we had to maintain during a semester were better adjusted to that semester. Maybe we could receive four credits for what are now three credit courses. It might also be helpful to implement an interim program for credit during the now extended semester break.

In any case there is always a need for a revaluation, a revaluation that will make the necessary adjustments and improvements that will maximize the interests of the students. There seems to be room to adjust the calendar and curriculum to enhance the education and development of the students.

The Intelligence Gap

WASHINGTON--The U.S. State Department has been in a swivet for the past several months. It has been unable to get any information as to what the intentions of the United States are. An emergency meeting of high- level State Department officials was called the other night at Foggy Bottom and from what our sources told us, it was very tense.

"Gentlemen, the Secretary is very disturbed. He feels it is impossible to make foreign policy for the United States when he has no idea what the enemy is thinking."

"You mean Hanoi?" someone asked.

"No, dammit, I mean Kissinger," the official said. "How can we set up any counterthrusts when we have no idea what Kissinger plans to do? I don't mind telling you, gentlemen, our intelligence on the White House stinks."

"The only solution," said an assistant secretary, "is to plant our own man in the White House. We could equip him with the latest radio equipment, and he could transmit to us every day, by code, what Nixon and Kissinger are up to."

"It's too dangerous," the chief of intelligence operations said. "We've already lost three agents in two months. They seem to know everything we're doing."

"What about planting a woman on Kissinger? Maybe we could find out something that way."

"It won't work," said the intelligence officer. "The last woman we tried to plant on him fell in love with him, defected and is now writing a book about him. She took all our photographs of Kissinger."

An assistant secretary asked, "Why can't we get someone in the White House to defect and come over to our side?"

"We've been working on that," the intelligence officer said, "but it's almost impossible. The Defense Department is in the same shape we are, and they have a lot more money to bid for defectors than we do."

"I've never heard of a situation like this," another assistant secretary said. "We know what's going on in Peking, we know what's going on in Havana, we know what's going on in Cairo, but we have no idea what's going on 10 blocks from here."

"Has anyone checked with the CIA lately?"

"They know as much as we do," the intelligence officer replied.

"You mean they haven't even been able to get a man into the White House?" someone asked.

"The only way they've been able to follow Kissinger's movements is by monitoring 'Voice of America.'"

One of the lower high-level officials finally spoke up, "I know this sounds farfetched, but what if the State Department asked for diplomatic relations with the United States? We could set up an embassy here with an American ambassador."

"What good would that do?" someone asked.

"Well, it appears that the White House usually briefs ambassadors of foreign countries before they brief us. If we had an American ambassador stationed in Washington, Nixon might tell him what he's up to and the ambassador could transmit the information to us."

"That's not such a crazy idea," an assistant secretary of state said. "If we had our own embassy in Washington we could give a dinner party for Kissinger and probably learn what's going on."

"I'll take it up with the Secretary this afternoon," an executive assistant said. "In the meantime, no matter what you hear and no matter how inconsequential you think it is, report it right away. Perhaps, if we have enough clues from different sources, some pattern will emerge as to what their foreign policy is, and then we'll beat the S.O.B.s at their own game."

Letters To The Editor

Authenticity Considered

To The Editor:

The recent editorial by Mr. Mishler, Mr. Schmidt, and Ms. Cunnane entitled "Southern University" is another blatant example of that popular and worn out form of expression called the counter-culture cliche. Once again that ugly and all-prevading spectre called the racism syndrome rears its ugly head and screams for justice. The authors immediately jump on the racism bandwagon in the case of the Southern University incident assuredly without adequate knowledge as to what actually occurred and who precipitated the violence. Racism has been blamed for so many of the social ills in contemporary society that it has created a rift between blacks and whites on college campuses, a form of silent hostility that periodically manifests itself in activities as far removed from race as intramural basketball. Each splinter group is constantly on the defensive and ready to spout irrational invective whenever their particular clique is denied certain of their demands, the denial of which may be entirely legitimate and exercised with sound judgement. With the exception of Kent and Jackson State and the trial of Angela Davis, I cannot see how racism or repression was involved in incidents involving Fred Hampton of George Jackson. Hampton had an arsenal that rivaled the L.A. police department and George Jackson liked to slash people with razors. Why not choose H. Rap Brown as logical hero of the People's Revolution? His only hangup is that he likes to rob banks and shoot people, a real hot shit. How about the Free Huey Newton disease? Huey was a nice guy till you pissed him off. Then he had this thing about tieing you about and proceeding to burn your extremeties. In keeping with this vein of thought, why didn't anyone scream repression or racism concerning the Bobby Baker case or why no cry of railroading over the imprisonment of James Earl Ray?

When you speak of revolution you think of Thotsky, Che Guevara, Zapata, Mao, or Lumumba. They had the rational alternative to a repressive form of government, but doubt that subsisting the present status quo for a Panther Type anarchy has any obvious merits. The silent witnesses to the strategem of a Panther or Weatherman manifesto are about 10 policemen, half of them black, shot to death from ambush in places like New York City, Los Angeles and Philadelphia.

This country in most sections has been ready to integrate in every way possible for the last 10 years, but the stumbling block has been the labeling as racist or repressive any aspect of society that does not conform to the particular demands of a variety of ethnic groups. The Civil Rights movement lost a great deal of class with the demise of Martin Luther King, and the removal of James Meredith and Stokely Carmichael from the public scene.

The authors go on to attack education or the University as a manifestation of the racist bureaucracy. This phase of the attack is as predictable or as surprising as the possibility of a strike this spring (weather permitting for the Summer Soldiers). The University is a natural target since the student body is composed, now of so many political, ethnic, and special interest groups, some bordering on the maniacal fringe, that the trustees in essence, cannot dictate policy without encountering inane charges of tokenism or racism. The authors deal in generality with a call for courses that teach the true history of our people whatever that bit of abstractness may mean. Apparently, History as we know it, is so infused with racism as to be entirely incorrect. The HELL with what the records say. Apparently, this is a call to restructure and rewrite the books and the courses so that everybody has a good time, no one gets called any names, and everything is just peachy. Don't worry about authenticity.

The part about the Collegian banishing the news to page four is pretty weak too, kids. As long as I have been reading the Collegian, it has been their policy to report U.S. and World news on page four regardless of the impact. You could have read the article about Southern University right along side one, say for instance, about the President of Uganda expelling some 30,000 Ugandans with British passports from his country in the same breath that he gave Hitler a pat on the back for the latter's plicies concerning the Jews during World War II.

I realize there has to be a change in the corporate monopoly called the U.S. (socialism hopefully), but bring me revolution through the legislative system, restructure the Democratic party, remove the people's puppets, (not McGovern, right?), but above all, spare me the fear merchants, the Hamptons, the Jacksons, the Newtons, the Hoffmans, the Rubins, the Wallaces, and the priests.

Method Questioned

To The Editor:

I believe that everyone deserves an equal opportunity to pursue whatever interests turn him or her on. And on this basis I condemn the actions some members of the Black community took in obtaining four pages in Tuesday's Collegian.

I do not believe that circumstances at Southern University warranted the killing of two people. I agree that the student body should be made aware of that situation. I believe that we students should be made aware of other injustices which the Third World (or anybody for that matter) is suffering. But publicizing these facts and feelings in the Collegian does not require implementation by coercion.

If the Black Community felt they weren't getting enough exposure in the Collegian, then where were their letters to the editor? Why are there only two Blacks on the Collegian staff, a staff composed solely of volunteers? No Black student has ever been refused an opportunity to work on, or express him or herself in, the Collegian.

If the Black Community really wants equality for all, I challenge it to contribute copy to the Collegian on a regular basis, in the regular way.

Staff Parking

To The Editor:

A few months ago the University decided that an increase from one dollar to five dollars in parking fees would do something to eliminate a parking problem at the campus. I personally cannot understand why this University, with all the talented people supposedly working on these problems, cannot come up with an answer. Just a couple of days ago I was given a parking ticket for being 12 inches from the curb, even though I was parked in a "No Parking" zone where you would think that would be the violation. I am an employee at this University, and five dollars doesn't come easy to me. The least this University could do would be to make sure that parking be provided to the people who work in these areas, and that they not have to park a half mile away. I am hoping that in the near future the University will alleviate this problem before it becomes a real big problem.

Editorial Points

Yesterday there was too much room left over and we had to write too many editorial points. Today there's too little room. To top it all off, we're wasting valuable space saying this.

But then again the argument has been made that the only unwasted space in this newspaper is the comics and the horoscope, anyway. What's wrong with that argument is that people forget the valuable contribution of the front page weather.

Don't Look, George Orwell

To The Editor:

I was assigned by the Collegian to cover the rally held yesterday for the two Southern University students who were shot to death last week. However, my article was never printed because the editorial staff of the Collegian decided to allow those students who attended the rally to write the news stories which appeared in yesterday's edition. Please do not misunderstand me. I am not upset that my article did not get printed. I am mad because no objective article covering yesterday's rally was printed. I see nothing wrong with the Collegian providing space for student groups to voice their opinions, but I do not believe that the Collegian should allow student groups to cover their own newsmaking events.

I believe the Collegian is setting a dangerous precedent when it permits those people who are themselves making news to write the news articles that the college community will read the next day. If one stops a minute to look at the results this precedent could have, one begins to see signs of 1984 right here on this campus.

If the Collegian is willing to allow one student group to interpret for the community an action it has taken, why then shouldn't the Collegian allow all student groups to write stories concerning their own meetings and actions. One may wish to ask, for example, if the Student Senate should report on its own meetings? Certainly Larry Ladd and his boys would be overjoyed at such an idea. Is it only then will we learn what really goes on at those SS meetings? Just think how well informed we will all be then.

What has happened to the concept of a "free and responsible press"? Is it too much to ask for a little objectivism from a college newspaper? If only George Orwell were here to see!

Seizure Of The Press

To The Editor:

I truly am stimulated by the possible significance of the so-called "Seizure of the Press" incident. I have mixed emotions about what happened, and let me state emphatically-that emotion dominates my actions-not calculated exploitation of the event, for purpose of espousing personal philosophy about racism, militancy, murder, etc. Rather, I submit that consideration should be given to the possibility of a total take-over of the Collegian's machinery.

Mr. James E. Gold apparently saw the light at the end of a shot-gun barrel, as it ominously centered on his quasi-liberal head. I am sure, that it finally dawned on J.G., that the cause for which Marie Thomas made these unprecedented demands far outweighed the inconvenience of breaking up the highly stylized format of the tabloid we so eagerly ingest each day. I rather fear however, that perhaps other, less ennobling reasoning gripped the swift-thinking Mr. G.

Despite that, the Collegian did expand its horizons-dare I predict?- a reformation of journalistic doctrine. A newspaper of the people? by the people? For all the people?

Stay loose Collegian, you were brilliant under fire this time (even if perhaps for the wrong reason), and remember always that you are us. You answer not to Sigma Delta Chi, Spiro Agnew, Wood, Bromery, or Gage. If you miss the 10 AM, Midnight, or any othe deadline- we will hear your reasons-not the AP, UPI, or LNS.

Snap those bonds to the clock, and clamp onto the pulses of 22,000 living, breathering excreting-hearts, lungs, bowels, and most importantly-souls.

Don't worry J.G., we all have to sweat our way through it sometime. We applaud your action to give total cooperation to Ms. Thomas, and hail the precedent as truly a landmark for the MDC.

Harvard Professor Jailed In 'Papers' Investigation

By NILS BRUZELIUS

BOSTON (AP) — Harvard Professor Samuel L. Popkin was jailed Tuesday after U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity denied a last-minute bid to vacate a contempt of court citation in connection with a grand jury investigation of the Pentagon Papers case.

The afternoon court appearance included arguments on Popkin's behalf by Harvard University President Derek C. Bok, who is an attorney and former dean of the Harvard Law School.

Popkin faced a contempt of court order stemming from his refusal to answer 14 questions before a U.S. grand jury investigating the release of the Pentagon study to the press.

The 30-year-old assistant professor of government appealed the contempt citation all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, which on Nov. 10 denied his request for a stay.

Garrity, at the close of a 1-1/2 hour hearing, said recent decisions by the U.S. Supreme Court had held that the first amendment rights not to testify, which were claimed by Popkin, "must yield" to he grand jury's duty to investigate the commission of an alleged crime.

Popkin, who has done research into U.S. involvement in the Vietnam war and was an associate of Daniel Ellsberg, had claimed the questions asked by the grand jury would jeopardize the confidentiality of some of his sources, which he claimed were protected under first amendment guarantees of free speech.

Arguments before Judge Garrity Tuesday morning after the First Circuit Court of Appeals revoked bail late Monday.

Following the hearing Popkin was returned to the custody of the U.S. marshall, and a spokesman said he would be confined to the Norfolk County Jail in Dedham.

The sentence under the contempt finding, issued originally following Popkins' March 27 testimony before the grand jury, is disbanded. The grand jury's term expires Jan. 12, but extensions are possible.

In a statement distributed prior to the court hearing for use in the event that the contempt order were not lifted, Popkin said, "My grand jury testimony made clear that I have no knowledge about the distribution and publication of the Pentagon Papers."

"I have refused to answer questions which require me to name confidential research sources and which have no bearing on the stated purpose of the grand jury," he said.

To answer the questions, Popkin said, would create a dangerous precedent because "grand juries will become the government's instrument to limit the free flow of information about government to the public."

Two of the questions Popkin was ordered to answer concerned whom he had interviewed to find out who participated in the once-secret Pentagon Papers study. The third question asked if he had discussed with Ellsberg the content or existence of the Pentagon study between Jan. 1 and June 13, 1971.

Speck Gets 'Life'

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Richard Speck, convicted and sentenced to death for the 1966 murders of eight nurses in a Chhicago townhouse, was resentenced today to 400 to 1,200 years in prison in a move necessitated by the Supreme Court ruling against capital punishment.

Judge Richard J. Fitzgerald of Circuit Court sentenced Speck to eight consecutive 50-to-150-year prison terms for the slayings.

Gerald Getty, Speck's lawyer, had requested that Speck be given a single term of 20 to 60 years. That would have made him eligible for parole in less than 12 years.

Speck appeared in court in Peoria, where he was convicted in 1967, wearing a white shirt, dark pants and a jacket. He told a newsman he expected to get "500 to 1,000 years in prison."

Speck was sentenced June 15, 1967 to die for the slayings but resentencing was ordered after the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling against the death penalty earlier this year.

Speck, 30, who was arrested two days after the July 14, 1966 murders, was tried in Peoria after his lawyers contended he would not get a fair hearing in Chicago because of news coverage of the slayings.

The late Judge Hebert F. Paschen of Circuit Court moved the case from Cook County to Peoria and presided at the trial which ended April 15, 1967. The jury convicted Speck and recommended the death penalty which Paschen imposed.

7 Tons Of Jamaican Seized

BOSTON (AP) — Jamaican and U.S. agents seized a seven-ton shipment of marijuana off Montego Bay Monday that was headed for a port in Maine, the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs said.

BNDD agents in Washington said the haul was the largest single shipment ever seized that was headed for the U.S. Deputy Director Andrew C. Tartaglino said the shipment was headed for Maine.

The Boston street value of the shipment was placed at $3.5 million.

Five Massachusetts men, two whose addresses are not yet known and a man the BNDD described as a "major Jamaican marijuana supplier" were arrested. They were to be arraigned in Jamaica Wednesday.

Those arrested were identified as Arthur B. Davey, 31, and Ronald Leroy Rodman, 25, both of Truro; Richard Dickey, 42, and William J. Helliesen, 25, both of Provincetown; William Goldrick, 30, of Taunton; Daniel J. Ward, 28, address unknown; a man not yet identified, and Aubin MacBean, the Jamaican supplier.

The shipment was seized aboard the 74-foot steel shrimp boat Lady Christine, which had put out to sea from Intracoastal City, La. It had been transferred from the 42-foot cabin cruiser Sea Lion, out of Dennis, Mass.

"Taking it all together—performance, features, styling, the BSR 810 moves into ranking place among the best automatics we know of. And at its price, the others may well be in for a real contest."

From HIGH FIDELITY MAGAZINE—May, 1972

The BSR 810 offers an impressive group of design innovations for music lovers ... for professional users of transcription turntables ... and for the audiophile who revels in sophisticated high fidelity equipment. It has the lightest specifications for rumble, wow and flutter of any automatic turntable made. We would be pleased to send you detailed technical specs upon request. As a matter of fact, few—if any—automatic turntable manufacturers publish complete specifications as we do. Only your personal inspection can reveal the overall excellence of this fine instrument. May we suggest a visit to your BSR dealer.

Litsky Heads Env. Sci. Dept.

The appointment of Dr. Warren Litsky as chairman of the department of environmental sciences has been announced by Dean Arless A. Spielman of the College of Food and Natural Resources at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Dr. Litsky, who holds the rank of Commonwealth Professor, joined the University staff in 1951 and is presently considered one of America's leading specialist in the fields of environmental and public health microbiology.

Originally from Fitchburg, he received his A.B. at Clark University, M.S. at the University of Massachusetts, and Ph. D. in microbiology and biochemistry at Michigan State University.

The author of some 160 scientific publications, consultant to governmental agencies, and editor of a number of scientific journals, Dr. Litsky is now shaping the department of environmental sciences to meet the challenges of public service in environmental problem-solving and in the education of scientific workers and educators in environmental sciences.

The department presently offers a two-year program for the training of environmental technologists. This includes integrated laboratory, field and community experience and a final semester of training in a governmental or industrial laboratory. Also being developed is an undergraduate major which permits the student a variety of options in the growing field of environmental management.

The department also embraces the Technical Guidance Center for Environmental Quality, which is an information resource of the University and the Cooperative Extension Service. A project now under discussion is the development of a joint program with the School of Education for the training of teachers in environmental sciences. One such course is already being offered through the Division of Continuing Education.

'Nurses Lib' Program Next Week

"Nursing Liberation", an audience participation program for nurses and friends of nursing will be Wednesday, Nov. 29, at 7 p.m. at UMass.

A panel of persons prominent in recent evolutions in nursing and health care will be presented in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union by the School of Nursings' Beta Zeta Chapter of Sigma Theta Tau, the national scholastic honor society in nursing.

Ms. M. Lucille Kinlein, R.N., one of the panelists, has hung out her shingle as an independent practitioner of nursing in Washington, D.C., and is also co-investigator of curriculum research and assistant professor at Georgetown University.

"An office setting such as mine," says Miss Kinlein, "...has not been offered to any community by nursing, to the best of my knowledge. As I practice nursing in this setting, I see clients on an episodic or continuing basis, I make home visits, and I expect to be working with small groups....I have become professionally free."

Moderator will be Ms. Linda Ceriale, of the UMass School of Nursing faculty. Ms. Janet T. Swanson of the New York State Nurses' Association, who was involved in New York State legislative changes in the nurse practice act, will be a panelist.

The Massachusetts Nurses' Association has just declared its acceptance of its definition of nursing practice. Ms. Catherine Tower, another panelist, headed the council which worked on the statement for about two years.

WMUA To Discuss 'Boltwood Walk'

On Sunday, November 26, at 8 P.M., WMUA will broadcast a special program concerning Amherst's proposed Boltwood Walk project.

The Boltwood plan, which was approved at a special town meeting last month, would convert a portion of the block between Main and North Pleasant Streets to a combined community center, shopping mall, and housing development for elderly residents. Following the town meeting approval, a group of townspeople presented a petition to the Selectmen opposing the Boltwood plan and requesting a townwide referendum on the issue.

The Selectmen have set Monday, November 27, as the date for the referendum, which will be voted upon in the seven regular precinct locations in town between the hours of 12 noon and 8 P.M.

Sunday's program, produced by WMUA commentator Ken Mosakowski, will examine the origin of the Boltwood Walk plan and weigh the arguments which have arisen for and against the project.

UMass students who are registered Amherst voters are especially urged to listen to this WMUA special at 8 P.M. Sunday.

Alumni Assoc. Elects Exec Board

UMass alumni elected three members of the Associate Alumni to four-year terms on the board of directors, and the board has re-elected a slate of officers to serve for one year.

The new directors are: Carolyn A. Nevins of Greenwich, Conn., class of 1970; Patti Aspinwall Smith of Boston, class of '69; and Claire Costa Blauer of West Newton, class of '61.

Continuing as president of the UMass-Amherst Alumni Association is Paul G. Marks of Framingham. Other officers are: Harold Fienman of Brookline, internal vice president; Lois E. Toko of Needham, external vice president; Robert A. Fitzpatrick of Amherst, treasurer; Lillian Moldaw Davis of Worcester, secretary; Dr. William C. Less of Newton Centre, regional vice president for Eastern Massachusetts; Stanley P. Chiz of Longmeadow, regional vice president for Western Massachusetts; and Anthony G. Chambers of Bloomfield, Conn., regional vice president for New York.

VD Not A Problem...

50% OF COLLEGE AGE HAVE VD is the intelligence that comes from page one of the Trinidad (Colo) State JC Trojan Tribune.

According to a health officer of Las Aniams County there, "It has been estimated that one in two of the college crowd has gonorrhea."

VENEREAL DISEASE NOT A PROBLEM AT EASTERN NEW MEXICO, according to a story buried on page three of the Eastern News. As well it should, since the lead paragraph reads, "'We don't have much of a problem here at Eastern with venereal disease (V.D.),' stated Jerry Heath, University physician. 'Most of our cases are those of gonorrhea'."

AN EDITORIAL TITLED "Graduation Roulette" brings to light a problem that all college seniors will appreciate. According to The Beacon of the University of Portland (Ore), some seniors received on Oct. 2 the letters dated in early June that were to clarify their status with regard to being graduated.

Seems that some of the seniors discovered too late that they needed from 3 to 19 credit hours to be graduated in June 1973.

"Perhaps we should thank...for sending notices...it would have been more typical of them to conveniently delete your name from the graduation list."

Free checking accounts with $100 minimum balance at Hampshire National Bank!

That's right—Hampshire National Bank has done away with service charges on personal checking accounts—just so long as you maintain a $100 minimum balance in your account.

The average cost of service charges is $15 to $20 a year. This is the cost that you'll save by maintaining a $100 minimum balance. Where else can $100 earn you that kind of money?

And it's easier to balance your checkbook, too! There's no service charge to remember to deduct. Just add your deposits and subtract your checks—that's the only bookkeeping necessary!

If your balance should drop below $100 in any month, you pay a $3 charge for that month.

This minimum balance checking account is offered to individuals only—not for business accounts.

Answer to Yesterday's Puzzle

Spurrier Gets Down To Basics

NEW YORK (AP)–Touchdowns are basically what football is all about. On Sunday, Steve Spurrier got down to basics.

The San Francisco quarterback threw for five of them to lead the 49ers to a 34-21 victory over the Chicago Bears.

His five touchdowns tied a San Francisco team record and boosted the 49ers back into a share of first place in the National Conference's West Division race.

It also earned him the selection Tuesday as The Associated Press Offensive Player of the Week in the National Football League.

Other nominees included quarterbacks Fran Tarkenton of Minnesota, Mike Phipps of Cleveland and Billy Kilmer of Washington and Miami running back Mercury Morris.

Tarkenton threw four touchdown passes, including bombs of 76, 70 and 66 yards, in the Vikings' 45-41 victory over Los Angeles and Phipps passed for one touchdown, ran for another, then moved the Browns, 40 yards on three plays in the final 52 seconds to set up Don Cockroft's field goal that beat Pittsburgh 26-24.

Kilmer passed for a pair of touchdowns in rallying the Redskins to a 24-13 victory over Atlanta and Morris rushed for 107 yards and scored two touchdowns, including the winner that carried the unbeaten Dolphins to a 28-24 triumph over the New York Jets.

Spurrier, a sixth-year pro from Florida, had to ride the bench for five years while John Brodie called the signals on the field. But earlier this season Brodie suffered an ankle injury and Spurrier got his chance.

And on Sunday, his fifth straight start, he got San Francisco off to a big lead with scoring strikes of two and 16 yards to tight end Ted Kwalick and a 43-yarder to wide receiver Gene Washington.

After Chicago got on the scoreboard, Spurrier countered with a nine-yard touchdown pass to running back Vic Washington. But the Bears kept coming, trimming the lead to 27-21 before Spurrier wrapped things up with a 64-yard pass play to running back Larry Schreiber. He wound up completing 17 of 27 for 275 yards.

Coraopolis Native Named

(AP) — "He is better at his position than Mike Reid, Ted Kwalick, Jack Ham and Franco Harris were at theirs," says Penn State Coach Joe Paterno.

The object of Paterno's affection is quarterback John Hufnagel, who has guided the sixth-ranked Nittany Lions to a 24-2 record since winning a regular job in the middle of the 1970 season.

For the record, defensive tackle Reid, tight end Kwalick and linebacker Ham are starring in the National Football League after All-American careers at Penn State while running back Harris is one of this year's top NFL rookies.

Hufnagel can beat you either running or passing. Against West Virginia, he helped control the ball for more than 11 minutes of the final period by not throwing a pass but gaining 60 yards on the ground to set up a clinching field goal.

But when Maryland concentrated on stopping Penn State's running game, Hufnagel went to the air and passed for 290 yards in little more than three periods.

Last Saturday, he did it both ways as Penn State made it nine in a row by pulling away from stubborn Boston College in the second half for a 45-26 triumph. He completed 13 of 22 passes for 271 yards and two touchdowns and carried eight times for 92 yards and two more scores.

For that performance, the 6-foot-1, 194-pound senior from Coraopolis, Pa., was named National College Back of the Week by The Associated Press.

In winning Back of the Week honors, Hufnagel beat out:

—Quarterbacks Ken Johnson of Colorado, Steve Stetson of Dartmouth and Steve Cockreham of Wyoming.

—Running backs Mitchell True of Pacific, Cliff Hoskins of Texas Tech, Anthony Davis of Southern California, Harold Henson of Ohio State, John King of Minnesota, Chris Linderman of Auburn, Nat Moore of Florida, Greg Pruitt of Oklahoma, Woody Green of Arizona State, Bob Hitchens of Miami, Ohio, Puddin Jones of Houston, Billy Meyers of Richmond, Carlester Crumpler of East Carolina and Ernie Dubose of Tampa.

—Flanker Danny Buggs of West Virginia.

—Defensive backs Bruce Henley of Rice and Neville Files of South Carolina.

Southern Cal On Top

(AP)–Unbeaten Southern California and Alabama, 1-2 in The Associated Press poll, are idle this week while pointing to tough traditional closing opponents but lively shakeups are possible among the other top-ranking college football teams.

The only other major unbeaten power, Michigan, rated No. 3, plays ninth-ranked Ohio State at Columbus, Ohio, Saturday for the Big Ten title and a bid to the Rose Bowl while No. 4 Oklahoma and No. 5 Nebraska clash at Lincoln, Neb., in a battle of Big Eight giants.

Penn State, No. 6, meets comeback Pittsburgh; Texas, No. 7, is host to Texas A&M; Louisiana State, No. 8, plays Florida while Auburn, No. 10, is idle, preparing for the big game with Alabama on Dec. 2.

Southern Cal's final date in Los Angeles, also Dec. 2, is with always formidable Notre Dame, with a young team that is just beginning to mature.

There will be another poll after the Dec. 2 games with the final poll to determine the national championship scheduled after the New Year's Day bowl games.

Powerful Southern Cal remained a solid favorite as the No. 1 college team in the country this week after an impressive 24-7 shellacking of UCLA, seen on national television.

The Trojans collected 44 of the 50 first place votes cast by a national panel of sports writers and broadcasters and led with 988 points. Points are awarded on a graduating 20-1816, etc., basis.

Alabama, which like Southern Cal has 10 victories without a defeat, continued in second place with four first place votes and a point total of 744. The Tide smashed Virginia Tech last week 52-13.

The other first place vote went to Michigan, which held third place despite a narrow 9-6 victory over Purdue. Rounding out the Top Ten were Oklahoma, Nebraska, Penn State, Texas, Louisiana State, Ohio State and Auburn, in that order, with Notre Dame, Tennessee, Colorado, UCLA and North Carolina standing ready at positions 11 through 15 to move in when one of the leaders falters.

Delaware No. 1

NEW YORK (AP) — Delaware won its fifth straight Lambert Cup as the top Division II college football team in the East, the selection committee announced Tuesday.

The Blue Hens, who finished their season with a 10-0 record, were the unamimous choice for the honor, as they had been in all eight weeks of preliminary balloting.

Delaware, which has won the Cup eight times, received a perfect 80 points from the eight-member panel.

Bridgeport, which also had a 10-0 season and 20 straight victories in the past two years, was second with 72 points. Middlebury, 8-0, was third, followed by Williams, Amherst, Bucknell, Northeastern, West Chester, American International and Trinity and Vermont which were tied for 10th.

Hull Sits, Attorneys Appeal

HOUSTON (AP)–Bobby Hull's attorneys filed an appeal Tuesday of a Circuit Order barring Hull from playing with the Winnipeg Jets of the World Hockey Association, but Hull sat out the Jets' game at Houston Tuesday night.

Circuit Judge Francis T. Delaney in Chicago issued an order Monday restraining Hull from playing with the Jets until the WHA posts a $2.5 million bond with the U.S. District Court in Philadelphia.

Lawrence Eiger, one of Hull's lawyers, asked the Illinois Appellate Court Tuesday for an emergency hearing to have the order issued by Delaney dissolved.

Hull announced shortly before the Winnipeg-Houston game that, "In view of the fact the appellate court of Illinois will probably take action tomorrow, on the advice of my attorney, I find it best for all concerned not to participate in tonight's game..."

Hull jumped from the National Hockey League Chicago Black Hawks to the WHA Winnipeg team in July. He reportedly signed a $2.75 million contract. However, he missed the first month of the initial WHA season awaiting a ruling on several lawsuits filed concerning his status and the status of other former NHL players.

Then, two weeks ago, U.S. District Court Judge A. Leon Higginbotham cleared the way for Hull to play. However, Higginbotham ordered that a $2.5 million bond be posted by noon Monday by the WHA to protect the NHL Chicago club against any damages resulting from the loss of Hull in the event Higginbotham's ruling was overturned.

Delaney's ruling, based on an appeal by the Black Hawks, did not overturn Higginbotham's decision to let Hull play. His ruling was that the league had failed to comply with the bond requirement.

NFL Countdown
4 Weeks To Go

WASHINGTON (AP) — "George Allen built the Redskins around fellows he could count on," veteran Washington linebacker Jack Pardee was saying. "Some of us just happen to be a little too old."

Pardee is a battle-scarred 36. The 15-year man from Texas A&M came along in 1971 when Allen moved east from the Los Angeles Rams to return the Redskins to power.

"Many of us have played on both winning and losing clubs," he said. "We learned way back that winning is more fun."

Washington whipped Atlanta 23-14 Monday night for its seventh straight, the most extended Redskin streak since 1942 when capital town won its last National Football League title.

The 'Skins erased a 10-0 Falcon lead on two touchdown bullets by Billy Kilmer, age 32, to stay one game ahead of world champion Dallas with a 9-1 record.

"Now the pressure's on Dallas for Thursday," said Allen. "We'll just sit back and watch."

The Cowboys, 8-2, can't seem to catch up in the National Conference Eastern Division despite having the third best NFL record behind the Redskins and those 10-0 marvels from Miami.

Dallas faces NFC West co-leader San Francisco, 5-4-1, in a Thanksgiving Day matchup at Texas Stadium. The same day, the New York Jets, 6-4, try to stay alive as the American Conference wild card against the Lions, also 6-4, at Detroit.

Washington's next barrier is Green Bay, a 7-3 club that leads both Detroit and rampaging Minnesota by a single game in the NFC Central. That comes Sunday at Robert F. Kennedy Stadium.

Miami had locked up the AFC East, clinching the first of eight NFL playoff slots, but the other five divisions remain highly competitive with four weeks remaining.

In the NFC East, it's strictly a Washington-Dallas showdown with their head-on meeting scheduled Dec. 9 at Texas Stadium.

In the NFC Central, Green Bay's 7-3 mark is best, but the Vikings have won four straight with the coming week offering the chance of another divisional scramble.

If Green Bay loses to Washington, the Lions and Vikes have a chance to make it a three-way deadlock. Minnesota, however, faces a tough number on the road at Pittsburgh.

In the NFC West, Atlanta lost its 24-hour lead Monday night. The Falcons, 5-5, are a scant half game behind Los Angeles and San Francisco with the Rams meeting New Orleans this week while Atlanta plays Denver and the 49ers take on Dallas.

Miami's runaway gang plays for fun against St. Louis next Monday night. The Dolphins have a chance to become the first unbeaten club since the 1942 Chicago Bears.

In the AFC Central, Pittsburgh and Cleveland are tied at 7-3 with the Steelers hosting the Vikings and the Browns at home against Buffalo.

In the AFC West, Oakland has an unusually fat 1-1/2 game bulge on Kansas City.

Wes Retires

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Wes Parker, Golden Glove first baseman for the Los Angeles Dodgers, announced his retirement Tuesday to "lead a more settled life."

Parker, who was 33 on Nov. 13, signed a letter requesting the Dodgers to place him on the voluntary retired list, left on a holiday trip and asked the National League club to release a statement, which said in part:

"My main reason for concluding my career is to allow myself time to enjoy the many interests which I have in life while I'm still young. The desire to lead a more settled life is another contributing factor."

Boston College Comes West...

By EARLE BARROLL

Perhaps the best way to describe what UMass and Boston College is all about would be to reprint the verbal barbs of the Eagle journalists on one side of the line and then talk to a UMass student. Censorship of course would be the preferred form of action.

It's no secret, and actually it has been out in the open in one form or another that there is no lost love between these two schools, especially this year when the New England polls have stirred up the dander of the Eagles, B.C. is 3-6 with their national schedule, and UMass has been making more noise than usual with a 7-2 record and a bid to the Boardwalk Bowl.

But, alas, all these words and emotions can finally be laid to rest on Saturday as verbiage turns to action at Alumni Stadium when Boston College comes to battle the Minutemen with the emphasis on battle. Game time is 1 p.m.

Already, ticket manager Wally Novak is expecting upwards of 18,000 plus for this game and with a long range weather forecast that calls for excellent conditions that figure could soar as high as 20,000. The Stadium record is 18,900 and the largest turnout this season was 17,500 at the UConn game.

Head football coach Dick MacPherson has a great deal of respect for Boston College as does his Minutemen.

"This is definitely the finest football team we'll play all year," said MacPherson in referring to an Eagle team that has played the likes of Penn State, Air Force, Navy, Tulane and Georgia Tech.

"Our program is geared to the New England level of competition whereas B.C.'s is geared to a national level," Mac went on to say, "And like the Harvard game this is the type of game that the students of UMass would gladly pay to come out and see."

When one speaks or reads of Boston College the names of Gary Marangi, Mike Esposito, Phil Bennett, Mel Briggs and captain Dave Bucci comes to mind. They represent the Eagle offensive machine (400 total yds. vs. Penn State). Their efforts concentrate mostly within the confines of Esposito (over 100 yards vs. Penn State) and Bennett running at the Minutemen and Marangi throwing to Briggs (9.3 speed) and Bucci.

For the Minutemen, "We'll have to play our game," MacPherson emphasized, which probably means an effort superior to that at Harvard game.

But, Mac was quick to point out on a final note, "The most important thing about this game is that as a head coach this one is easy to coach, because our people want it so bad. The motivation is built in."

And less you forget, the date was October 17, 1972 and this is what the Eagle Eye had to say about the UMass football team and the entire University:

"Will the New England sportswriters know what to do this week? Will they continue to hail the University of Massachusetts as the region's top football team or will they start to look at the results of records and rightfully tab Boston College as the cream of New England? We kind of doubt it though. The New England football poll is an absurdity anyway. You can't rank B.C. with small-time colleges that play football in NE. It looks like the Aggies will stay undefeated until their windup clash with BC up in Amherst."

Undefeated, no. But motivated, yes.

...As Minutemen Accept Bowl Bid

By MARTY KELLEY

For the first time since 1964, the University of Massachusetts football team will attend a major small college Bowl. Chancellor Randolph Bromery, representing the Executive Committee Board of Trustees, informed Athletic Director Frank McInerney by phone at 11 a.m. yesterday that the Trustees had approved and had accepted Monday's Bowl bid.

UMass will meet an opponent to be named later in the 1972 Boardwalk Bowl at Atlantic City, New Jersey, Dec. 9th. Top candidates to oppose Massachusetts at Atlantic City, will either be Delaware University, the nation's number one small college team and Mid-Atlantic champs with a 10-0 record or Tennessee Tech, 10-1.

"Accepting this Bowl bid, said Athletic Director Frank McInerney, fulfills one of the many goals of sports. It provides the students with a rallying point around their team. We can all go to Atlantic City and have some fun. Now we have an opportunity so that friends and the surrounding community can all share in our pride."

One of the reasons that figured quite prominently in the University's acceptance was the fact that the school will be assured of breaking even concerning Bowl finance. "We're not going to make money, but under no circumstances will we lose money," said McInerney.

Assistant Athletic Director Bob O'Connell, who has been working feverishly the last few days computing costs assured that a break-even point will be reached. Said O'Connell, "Based on the last couple of years and the fact that the TV package this year is greater than that of last year, we feel very confident that the net receipts will be sufficient to offset the costs."

Last year the Television package for the small college Bowls amounted to 180,000. This year there is TV increase to 240,000 which increases the amount of profit since the TV rights and the gate receipts of the four Bowls (Boardwalk, Pecan, Grantland Rice, and Camellia) are thrown into a pool and the eight participating schools as well as the NCAA get proportioned shares.

It is not known the exact cut allocated to the NCAA, but the eight participants are all given alike shares. Two years ago the divided share for all the participating teams came to $17,123.92. A year ago, although official statistics in the "Annual NCAA Reports" won't be published until January, it is a known fact that equal share came to $18,537. With the increased TV revenue and with average or better gate performances at the four Bowls this year, the University of Massachusetts stands an excellent chance of perhaps being cut in on a Boardwalk share of near 20,000.

Frank McInerney went on to say that the Bowl Committee supplies a low fixture for transportation, meals, and lodging, and although it is difficult to estimate our financial cover, he did say that "we just don't have the money to pay the bills that would exceed our share."

If Delaware is not selected and per chance Tennessee Tech is, then a monetary problem that would detract from University profits from the Bowl would then be created. It would cost the Boardwalk Bowl Committee more to transport say the Tennessee team to the Boardwalk than it would Delaware, a native New Jersey team. Since the transportation money takes away from the balance for the eight participating teams, UMass would lose money. The closer the team to the Bowl site, the better the profits for all participating teams.

"Now we have no way of estimating what our share will be," said O'Connell. "We have no idea how the other Bowls are going to sell at the gate. All we know is that the TV package for all the games this year will be $60,000 fatter."

"Now we have no way of estimating what our share will be," said O'Connell. "We have no idea how the other Bowls are going to sell at the gate. All we know is that the TV package for all the games this year will be $60,000 fatter."

Such an ideal financial situation for the Boardwalk Bowl Committee was created last year. With nearby Delaware meeting C.W. Post, the transportation costs were quite minimal.

The last time a sporting event really aroused the university campus was back in 1970, when in March of that year Julius Erving marched the Redmen and 7,000 students to the balconies of Madison Square Garden for the first of two NIT bids in the new decade.

Massachusetts will finish its regular season this Saturday at Alumni against Boston College for the New England Championship. If the Yankee Conference champs defeat the Eagles, a possible shot at the nation's number one spot for small colleges could very well be at stake in the December 9th Boardwalk Bowl at Atlantic City.

The attraction before a probable crowd of 12,000 will be staged indoors at Convention Center, with the odd fact that the contest will be played not only before an Eastern Regional ABC TV audience, but on regular grass as well.

Gone, But Not Forgotten

Carlton fisk's unanimous selection as American League Rookie-of-the-Year made me think of Don Schwall, the Sox' last Rookie phenom. Trying to trace Don's path as he went from the Sox to Pittsburgh to God only knows where got me thinking about some other once immortal Sox. Where have you gone.....?

RIP REPULSKI--I rmember when Rip came to the Sox in 1960 and in his first time at bat hit a pinch grand slam. His next time up he hit a pinch two-run homer. He then became a regular. Tom Yawkey gave him a raise and he was never heard from again.

PUMPSIE GREEN--The first black man ever to play for the Sox. Pumpsie was the first in a long line of no-hit, no-field second baseman the Bosox tried before coming up with Chuck Schilling. Last time anyone heard from Pumpsie he was pouring cement in Tel Aviv.

ED CONNOLLY--The pride and joy of Pittsfield, Ed's a UMass grad. Was the 93rd in the succession of "new Mel Parnell's" the Sox used until they came up with Dick Stigman. He wasn't as bad as his 4-11 record in 1965 would indicate. Is alive and hiding in Nicaragua (waiting for McMahon and Flanagan).

LU CLINTON--Achieved baseball immortality in the early sixties when he became the only man ever to kick a ball into the stands for a home run. Was trying to make a shoestring catch at the time. Last punter cut by Pats before they acquired Pat Studstill.

BOB TILLMAN--Gained fame in mid-sixties by gunning a throw off the forehead of John Wyatt, who at the time was pitching for the Sox. He was allegedly aiming for second base. Wyatt was unhurt. Tillman is now a professional skeet-shooter.

GENE CONLEY--Really not a bad pitcher, but he had an annoying penchant for travel. Also played pro basketball for the Celtics. He now runs a rent-a-car service in Tel Aviv.

GEORGE SMITH--Another in the long line of second basemen after Chuck Schilling. George once hit a grand slam homer in a game the Sox won 10-0. He was 3-4 opening day of the 1966 season, 3-400 after that. He now makes cough drops in Poughkeepsie.

BOB SADOWSKI--Bob was acquired from the Atlanta (or was it Milwaukee?) Braves along with Dan Osinski for a new tarpaulin and a bag of lime. Bob once pitched a five-inning shutout but was forced to leave the game with a tired arm. When last heard from he was teaching penmanship in Paraguay.

ROMAN MEJIAS--Roman is everybody's favorite trivia name. Came from Houston sporting a .285 average, but his averages for two years with the Sox didn't add up to that much. Won a toboggon at Cape Cod day once and thought it was a picnic table. Roman is now a lumberjack in Arizona.

RUSS NIXON--Another one of the Sox' great catchers, Nixon was traded from Cleveland in 1960 for Sammy White. As he left, Russ told the fans, "You won't have Nixon to kick around any more." But White refused to report and Nixon had to go back to Ohio. Two months later he was back with the Red Sox. Russ is now a real estate magnate in the Key Biscayne area.

HERB PLEWS--The worst ballplayer the Red Sox ever owned. Herb played one inning for the Sox way back in the early sixties, making three errors and striking out with two men on base. Herb is slated to direct the war effort in Vietnam after the truce is signed.

RAY BOONE--Greatest pinchhitter in baseball history until he came to the Red Sox. Ray was the man the Sox used to insure Mike Higgins he would be able to beat the late afternoon traffic. Boone was the originator of the term "rally-stopper". Ray is now in a rest home.

MIKE FORNIELES--Mike kept 'em coming back for more. Was one of the few relievers in baseball who could take a five run lead and turn it into a seat-squirmer. In his later years, when his arm got weak the Sox turned him into a starter. At last word Mike was pitching in the Boston Park League.

MIKE HIGGINS, BILLY JURGES, JOHNNY PESKY, BILLY HERMAN ad nauseum--All these great names helped immeasurably to build the Boston Baseball tradition. Higgins is now dead after serving a jail term for running down four construction workers. Jurges is now a baseball executive in Greenland. Pesky is the nation's most famous cheerleader. Herman is professional pitch and putt player.

Mandatory Language, Rhetoric Out Of Favor

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

UMass undergraduates favor the abolition of the rhetoric and language requirements by a 3 to 1 margin according to a Project Pulse poll released last week.

209 undergraduates, randomly selected by computer were contacted by Project Pulse, the campus polling organization on Tuesday, November 14, eleven days after the Faculty Senate defeated a motion from their Academic Matters Committee to abolish the rhetoric requirement.

Of the 209 students selected only 141 were actually contacted. Three of those declined to cooperate. Pulse asked the students six questions, two about the rhetoric requirement and four about the language requirement.

61% of those contacted did not want the rhetoric requirement, 24% did and 16% had no opinion.

The breakdown on the language requirement question was much the same; 4% "strongly favored" and 16% "somewhat favored" its retention. 36%, "somewhat opposed" and 33%, "strongly opposed" the requirement. 13% had no opinion.

50% of the students polled who had taken rhetoric courses said they did not feel it had improved their writing or speaking abilities; 35% thought the requirement had, 7% didn't know and 15% hadn't taken any rhetoric courses.

51% felt the language requirement was not a benefit to their education in the long run, 39% felt it was and 10% had, "no opinion at this time".

Only 8% thought the language requirement should be continued in its present form. 43% felt it should be "altered to become less stringent". 3% thought it should become more stringent and 38% thought it should be dropped altogether. 9% had no opinion.

28% said their opinion about the language requirement came from personal experience, 15% said their opinion was formed from, "ideas about the principles under which the requirement operates". 43% said their decision came from a, "mixture of these choices," 6% were not sure and 9% had no opinion.

The proposal for a survey of students on the rhetoric issue was submitted by Nick Apostola, Chairman of the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee. The questions on the language requirement were added by Pulse because, according to their report, "of their related nature."

The drive by Apostola's committee to end the rhetoric requirement began in February of 1972 with a meeting between the committee and according to Apostola, "a member of people directly involved with the Rhetoric Program." These people included Malcolm Sillars, head of the program, and Joseph Frank, Head of the English Department.

That meeting led to an evaluation of the program, issued by the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee in September, which recommended ending rhetoric as a requirement and the creation of optional writing and speech labs.

The Academic Affairs Committee voted to abolish the requirement, as did the Student Senate. The report then went to the Faculty Senate Academic Matters Committee, which voted in October 14-0-1 to end the Rhetoric Requirement.

However, the Faculty Senate, after an hour and a half debate decided, on a voice vote, to overturn the Academic Matters report and keep the rhetoric requirement.

The issue is being appealed to the Board of Trustees Committee on Faculty and Educational Policy by Larry Ladd, Student Government Association President and a member of the Board of Trustees.

'Aggies' Show Eagles

By EARLE BARROLL

Unless you were in some other world on Saturday (and then again maybe you were), the utter shock, but intense pride of UMass' stunning (???), yet brilliant 28-7 humiliation of the Boston College football team is still with you today. If not that, then perhaps the hangover from the celebrations thereafter.

But, whatever it was or is, it happened. And so for the good people of Delaware who turned down a Boardwalk Bowl game with the Minutemen for reasons ranging from boredom to the opposition's inferiority, you get a UMass-B.C. game film (in black and white of course) to ask yourselves "why?".

And for the good people of Chestnut Hill you have the privilege of living for the next year at least with the thought of some "Aggies" from Western Mass not only knocking off your freshmen rather handily, but also the varsity to boot. (P.S.—For the Eagle's Eye, crow is pretty cheap in Beantown).

To measure the impact of this victory the first of UMass in 60 years, in dollars and cents, recruits and things of this nature is out of the question--for now. Rather, emotions and intangibles, that's what it's all about.

For retired UMass A.D. Warren McGuirk, who incidentally was captain of the B.C. squad of 1928, it was being carried off the field by the Minutemen. For President Robert Wood, Chancellor Bromery and speaker of the House David Bartley (former UMass hoopster of the late 50's) it was joining the team in their moment of jubilation in the UMass lockerroom.

And for the legions of UMass fans who stormed en masse to Alumni Stadium (the attendance was a record 20,000 plus) it was beating B.C. and for them that was more than enough.

As head coach Dick MacPherson said after the game, "Our students wanted this one so bad. The team just went out and got it for them and that's what we're in the business for."

It wasn't just the mere fact that UMass defeated Boston College that has spawned this reaction. It's the manner in which they neatly dismantled the Eagles, that has. It was a complete, unadulturated domination by the Minutemen that period by period destroyed the mystique of Boston College.

"I could say so much to the Boston people," linebacker Tim Edwards demanded after the game. "And no matter what they say in the papers, we did not eke out a victory over B.C. We beat them period.

"They might say things about

Jones Is New Superintendent Of Belchertown State School

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

BELCHERTOWN--Dr. William Jones, 38, will take over today as the new superintendent of the troubled Belchertown State School in the wake of three separate fatal accidents at the institution.

Jones, of Norwalk, Conn., is the fourth superintendent to serve at the school in two years, and is a successor for Dr. Roland A. Nagle, who announced his resignation as superintendent on June 12 effective Sept. 2 after serving for a year in his capacity.

The latest death at the school occurred Friday night when Christopher Adams, 18, choked to death of asphyxiation due to food inhalation.

Earlier last week a young woman wandered away and died in the woods on the school grounds from exposure and later a man was reported to have bled to death after swallowing an open safety pin.

In another incident, a 16-year-old resident of the state school suffered a broken leg when he fell 18 feet from a second floor window in G building.

There are no screens on any of the windows in the building despite the fact that the Belchertown Friends Association have been pressing for screens since last May when a resident fell from a second floor window in D building and suffered a broken pelvis.

Benjamin Ricci, president of the Friends Association, said: "The recent tragedies point out once again that there is a complete lack of staff and money" for the institution.

These recent incidents at the school, he said, will be implemented into the parents' court suit against the state as further examples of the "incompetence and unresponsiveness" of the Dept. of Mental Health.

Ricci is the father of a resident at the school, and is the leading figure of a suit that was filed last February in U.S. District Court charging the Dept. of Mental Health with negligence in the care of residents at the school.

Boston Atty. Beryl Cohen, the attorney for the parents in their suit, said: "It's just shocking to believe that we described these situations a year ago, and there just hasn't been any administrative action taken for the well being of the 1,000 residents at Belchertown."

Meanwhile, Ricci has asked Commissioner John Keogh of Public Safety for an investigation into why the search was "called-off" for Miss Linda J. Buchanan, 25, who was found dead of exposure Monday at 8:40 a.m.

State and local police called off the search for Miss Buchanan at 10:30 p.m. Sunday because of what they termed bad weather conditions. Miss Buchanan is believed to have wandered into the surrounding dense woods at 12:30 that afternoon.

Jones was appointed superintendent after the Board of Directors of the Belchertown Friends Association endorsed his candidacy under two provisions.

The two provisions, which were accepted by the Dept. of Mental Health included:

1. "The shoddy selection process that presented the lone candidate Jones and was conducted in a crisis atmosphere in a desultory manner, shall never again be permitted in Massachusetts."

2. Superintendent-elect Jones shall be evaluated yearly according to established, objective and subjective criteria."

Voters To Decide Future Of Boltwood

By MDC STAFF

The future of the Boltwood Walk Plan, the proposed redevelopment area in the center of Amherst, will be decided by town residents in a special vote today.

Polls will be open at all Amherst precincts from 12 PM until 8 PM today.

Boltwood Walk is a plan proposing the construction of a multi-purpose complex near the corner of Main and Pleasant Streets in Amherst. The plan currently includes three multi-story 150 unit condominiums primarily for the elderly, a new nursing home, several commercial facilities, a community health center, a senior center and a recreational facility with a double gymnasium.

The Amherst Redevelopment Authority, sponsors of the plan, have held a number of meetings in recent weeks with area businessmen and others who are objecting to the plan. The ARA currently plans to tear down the Boys Club Building, along with a few private businesses as part of the Boltwood construction. The Boys Club will supposedly be relocated somewhere within the Boltwood Walk Complex.

All registered voters in Amherst are eligible to vote today. Precinct 1 is located in the North Amherst Parish Hall, Precinct 2 (SW dorms) at the Fire Station, Precinct 3 (Central, Quad, Orchard Hill) at Odd Fellows Hall, Precinct 4 at the Masonic Hall, Precinct 5 at the Old Junior High, Precinct 6 at Munson Memorial Library, and Precinct 7 (Sylvan) at the Auction Gallery on Rte. 116.

Questionnaire To Evaluate Bus Service

By ERNIE ROTMAN

There is relief in store for those commuters now spending vast amounts of money in the process of driving to classes.

UMass now has funds coming in to be used for bus transportation. A new bus system for people residing in the Amherst-Sunderland area will be in service by February. This system will run continually each weekday.

Since this service is mainly for student use, it has been deemed wise by those in charge to get student and faculty opinions on how the buses should be run. A questionnaire will be given by telephone to a random selection of staff faculty and students in an attempt to acquire and evaluate enough information to make the new bus service a useful and efficient one. The questionnaire will be both factual and opinionated. Examples of what is to be asked include: "What is your present pattern of getting to class from home?", "Would you change this pattern if buses were conveniently located and operated?". The results of these responses will be used to set up the bus schedule and the locations of the bus stops.

With this new system, it is hoped that commuters won't have to go through all the parking and driving hassles.

The telephone questionnaire will be given from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. on November 28 and December 5.

WMUA To Examine Amherst Town Government, Students

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA's "Focus" program will examine the structure of the Amherst town government and its relationship to the large bloc of students registered to vote in the community.

Ken Mosakowski's guests on tonight's live, 60-minute program will be members of a newly-formed coalition of students and non-students who feel that town government can be improved and made more responsive to the concerns of all residents.

The group, which calls itself the "New Politics Coalition," is seeking to run candidates for the 1973 Town Meeting and possibly some town-wide offices. At present, only three of Amherst's 236 town meeting members are full-time students, although students now make up about 20% of the town's registered voters.

RSO Office Break A Mystery

By ROBERT SCHEIER

An unknown person or persons broke into the RSO (Recognized Student Organizations) office sometime over the weekend, but RSO authorities say it's too early to tell what (if anything) was taken.

"The money and keys that were in the office are still there," said Bud Demers, RSO accountant located in the basement of the campus center.

A brief check of the area showed no typewriters or other equipment missing, he said.

Tiles in open rooms outside the closed RSO offices were broken or pushed aside, with roof tiles inside the offices pushed in. Fragments of the tiles both inside and outside the RSO offices lay on the floor and on desks.

Members of the Security Department were photographing the area and taking fingerprints Sunday night.

Demers said Stanley Burns, night supervisor at the Campus Center, called the Security Department about 4:15 Sunday afternoon about the break.

"It could have happened anytime between Saturday afternoon and Sunday afternoon," said Dan Quinlan, building supervisor for the campus center.

A Security Dept. spokesman said the intruders had attempted to crawl through one spot where they forced entry through the roof files, but were stopped by a pipe.

They then apparently forced entry at the second spot and crawled into the office, he said.

Quinlan said there was a "slim chance" the night supervisor (who sits at the front desk of the area to provide information about activities in the campus center) was on duty when the break occurred.

"People have done this sort of thing just to get their coats," he added.

Paul Hamel, chairman of the student senate finance committee, said the intruders may have wanted to use the RSO phones to make long distance phone calls.

If You're From Mass. And Proud Of It...

By BOB SCHEIER

For anyone who is proud of Massachusett's record of being one of two jurisdictions in the country that voted for Sen. George McGovern for President, a UMass senior has the perfect gift: a bumper sticker saying so.

Robert A. Marchand, a senior and business major living in Amherst, is selling bumper stickers which say "McGovern-We Voted For Peace,", "McGovern-President of Massachusetts," and "Massachusetts-Nixon's Penal Colony."

Marchand says he printed about 700 of the stickers, and sold 400 of them in two days in the Campus Center.

"I have access to a press," he said, adding that he would not disclose where the press was. "One of my trades is that I'm a printer."

The stickers sell for 35 cents each, or three for a dollar, which Marchand makes for about a three cent profit per sticker.

"It's not much, but it adds up if you sell a lot of them," he continued.

He says "if the interest is there," he will print up more when the current batch runs out.

Almost all of the stickers he has sold have been bought by students, he estimates, "but a few older people have bought them, too."

Earlier this month, the student senate considered a motion to print 25,000 bumper stickers and buttons saying "I voted in Massachusetts and I'm proud of it."

The motion was defeated as supporters claimed the stickers and buttons would be collectors items in ten years, a pitch Marchand also uses with his customers.

Marchand says he made up the sayings himself, and claims he came up with the idea on his own, not as a result of the senate debate.

"It's just like selling wallets or anything else people sell here," he added, waving a hand at tables selling jewelry, wallets, belts, and other products in the campus center. "I'm trying to make enough for tuition next year."

The next bumper sticker he says he will print would be intended for home use and would read, "Massachusetts-We didn't vote for that son-of-a-bitch."

International Smorgasbord At Hampden

In a departure from previous policy, the Southwest Dining Commons has agreed to permit the International Club's smorgasbord to take place in Hampden Dining Commons from 5:30 to about 7:30 next Saturday evening, December 2. As reported in the Collegian editorial page on November 22, the smorgasbord will permit ticket-holders to sample foods from countries including Peru, China, Venezuela, Nigeria, India, Ethiopia, Armenia and Denmark.

Glenn Mangurian, Recreation Coordinator for Southwest, explained that "we really wanted to see this event happen, and have been able to negotiate with the Food Services people an arrangement whereby UMass professional cooks will supervise the food preparation by volunteers from different countries, to make sure that no one gets hurt using the massive equipment and that the food content in various dishes meets UMass standards."

In addition to the food being offered at $1.50 per person, the December 2 event will include other music and entertainment, possibly a live Armenian band and international folk dancing led by Steve Rausch of Amherst College, an organizer of the regular Friday night folk dances at Smith College.

Mangurian commented that if the December 2 smorgasbord is a success, other such events might be held every couple of months in Southwest after the January intersession.

According to the International Club's Provisional Board, which is sponsoring the gastronomic event in Hampden Dining Commons together with Mangurian, admission on Saturday night will be by pre-sold ticket only.

Tickets are available all week at the Foreign Student Office (Whitmore 239), and at a table in the Campus Center lobby from 10 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. Monday through Friday. Tickets cost $1.50 for four servings from the array which will include fish, chicken, beans, plantains, bread, salads, soup and pastries - prepared in ways not usually found on the UMass campus.

Children 12 and under will be admitted for a dollar.

Time To Tell Score?

WASHINGTON (AP) - The interruption in the Paris peace talks may mean the United States has decided to tell South Vietnam no more concessions can be gained on its behalf, some administration sources say.

If the talks between Henry A. Kissinger and Le Duc Tho had reached an insurmountable barrier, the negotiations would have been broken off indefinitely as in the past, not rescheduled for Dec. 4, the sources stated Sunday.

They listed several factors leading to the conclusion that the interruption was sought by Kissinger in order to pass the word to Saigon that nothing more is left to be done.

*The White House has said repeatedly and publicly that further consultations with Saigon are necessary before a final agreement can be signed.

*A main problem in the Paris talks was Saigon's demand for a formal North Vietnamese pledge to withdraw all its troops from the South.

*Kissinger is said to be convinced that Hanoi is unmoveable on this point. That is why the tentative agreement disclosed Oct. 26 made no mention of North Vietnamese troop withdrawals.

*Kissinger is said to be convinced also that other protections built in to the agreement-prohibitions against major resupplying and manpower replacements-are enough to bolster a cease-fire.

*Even so, in the face of unexpectedly determined demands by South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu, Kissinger agreed to seek on Saigon's behalf more concessions on the troop issue.

*The fact that Tho did not return home for consultations indicates the main problem is between the United States and Saigon.

"Putting this altogether," one official said, "it could very well mean Nixon has decided it is time to tell the score" to the South Vietnamese.

Nixon Meets Kissinger

NEW YORK (AP)--President Nixon, described as confident of the "right kind" of Vietnam peace settlement, resumed conferences on the recessed Paris talks Sunday with his chief negotiator Henry A. Kissinger.

Nixon and Kissinger met for almost an hour Sunday morning at the Waldorf Astoria, where the President and his family were spending the weekend. It was the second meeting since Kissinger returned from Paris late Saturday night after he and North Vietnamese negotiators agreed to break off the talks for nine days.

Nixon was scheduled to return to his mountain top retreat at Camp David, Md., later in the day, while Kissinger was expected to go on to Washington. The two will confer again Monday at Camp David, a White House spokesman said.

Ronald Ziegler, the presidential press secretary, also said Nixon and Kissinger would meet this week with Nguyen Phu Duc, an emissary of South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu. The exact time of the meeting was not set.

The meeting was requested by Thieu last week and has been seen by some observers as an effort to bypass Kissinger, who has been criticized by the South Vietnamese for not paying enough attention to their objections to the peace proposals.

The Paris meetings between Kissinger and Hanoi's Le Duc Tho were suspended until Dec. 4 on Saturday amid some speculation that serious difficulties had arisen. American officials would not comment on the cause of the interruption, which came after six sessions.

South Vietnam's special observers at the talks were reported to have told Thieu that negotiations were "virtually deadlocked over North Vietnamese troop withdrawals." A Saigon newspaper controlled by Thieu's Independence Palace quoted a "high source" as saying no optimistic signs had been seen in Paris.

Kissinger and Tho refused comment on a Washington Post story that said the talks were deadlocked by an American refusal to honor the tentative agreement reached last month. However, Ziegler, when asked if interruption of the talks indicated serious problems, said:

"I'd be very cautious about that kind of speculation." He said the break would allow further consultations with South Vietnam.

Tho was scheduled to remain in Paris until the talks resumed.

The White House said Kissinger planned to return to Paris on Dec. 3.

Nixon's meeting with Kissinger came during what was described as a family weekend of sightseeing and shopping in New York. The two appeared grim-faced Saturday night while talking in view of photographers. Ziegler described the session as "a good meeting."

Following the meeting, Ziegler said, "We are proceeding with a constructive attitude." He said Nixon felt it was important "to achieve a settlement not just for the short term, but for the long term." He said the President is prepared "to take the time necessary to achieve that kind of settlement."

In Brief...

Traffic Death Toll Is 607

The nation's traffic death toll jumped to 607 Sunday as motorists began heading home from the long Thanksgiving holiday weekend.

Rain, snow, fog and high winds made travel hazardous over much of the nation, and up to three inches of snow across the Great Lakes region snarled traffic.

Rap Brown to Stand Trial Today

NEW YORK (AP)--H. Rap Brown, the mysterious black power figure, is scheduled to stand trial Monday on robbery, attempted murder and gun possession charges. But the long-stalled case may be further delayed by legal arguments over a magazine article.

The trial was to have started in State Supreme Court on Oct. 23, but was delayed by the withdrawal of Brown's lawyer. It was rescheduled for Monday after a series of other delays, including an unsuccessful effort by Brown's new lawyers to have the case moved to federal court.

Shootout Staged To Free Commander

DUBLIN (AP) - Gunmen disguised as priests and doctors staged a blazing shootout with Irish detectives inside a Dublin hospital Sunday night in a vain attempt to spring ailing Sean MacStiofain, reputed commander of the Irish Republican Army's guerrillas, from police custody.

Police said four persons were shot and wounded in the bid by eight gunmen to free MacStiofain from the Mater Hospital, where he was confined after being sentenced Saturday to six months in jail.

The casualties were one gunman, one policeman and two bystanders, all reported "slightly injured."

A police spokesman said two of the raiders were dressed as Roman Catholic priests "and must have carried guns beneath their cassocks."

Troops were alerted throughout Dublin after the attempt to spring MacStiofain, who has been on a hunger and thirst strike since his arrest eight days ago.

"The gunmen, some disguised as doctors and hospital workers and two of them as priests, got in by mingling with the civilians.

"No one would think of stopping a priest, would they?

"Our men were in an office leading to the ward where MacStiofain is detained. The gunman had to pass them and the gun battle took place in a narrow passage leading to the ward.

"Shots were flying everywhere. One policeman and two bystanders were hit. So was one of the gunmen. The others made off down the passage and got away in waiting taxis.

"Shortly before the bid to free MacStiofan, his lawyer, Myles Shevlin, told newsmen: "I believe he could die today or tomorrow." But a hospital statement insisted: "Regardless of information to the contrary, the medical condition of Sean MacStiofain is remarkably good and there is certainly no cuse for anxiety at the present time."

In Belfast, capital of British-ruled Northern Ireland, a major gun battle erupted between troops and guerrillas in the Roman Catholic Ardoyne district.

The army reported possibly hitting four gunmen in an hour of violence in which more than 100 rounds were exchanged.

It was not immediately clear whether the Belfast shooting broke out in reaction to MacStiofain's conviction and sentence, but IRA sympathizers had promised massive protest demonstrations.

The Dublin government steeled itself for an explosion of rage over the jailing of the 44-year-old, English-born MacStiofain. He was convicted for membership in an illegal organization - the IRA. MacStiofain is widely regarded as chief of staff of the IRA's militant Provisional wing, which is waging a bomb-and-bullet campaign to drive the British out of the North.

MacStiofain vowed in court he would continue his fast in prison. Having secured his conviction, the Irish government can now order him to be force-fed with vitamin and glucose injections without the permission of his wife, Mary.

B52s Attack Both Sides Of Demilitarized Zone

SAIGON (AP) - U.S. B52 bombers attacked both sides of the demilitarized zone over the weekend as South Vietnamese marines and paratroopers reported increased enemy shelling while they tried to advance their northern front.

The big bombers flew 14 missions against North Vietnam's southern panhandle and near the front lines of the South Vietnamese forces in Quang Tri province.

The government troops reported taking more than 1,400 rounds of shellfire in 24 hours as North Vietnamese forces apparently used ammunition they had been storing up during the period when a cease-fire appeared imminent.

Latest reports on the northern fighting listed 18 enemy killed at a cost of three government soldiers killed and 26 wounded.

Reported ground action elsewhere in South Vietnam was on a small scale and scattered.

Bad weather continued to hamper U.S. fighter-bombers over North Vietnam. The U.S. Command reported only 30 strikes Saturday and said it had no report of significant bomb damage.

Why wait for tomorrow?

If you think the Seminary is a place of study and meditation, you're right. But there is so much more.

As a Paulist you become involved from the start.

We were founded with the belief that each man has a place. Each man has a job. Sometimes, many jobs. And each contributes his own unique talents and is given the freedom and the support he needs to achieve his goals.

The Paulist is a man on the move. His mission is to people, particularly the people of North America. The issues and problems we face today—injustice, poverty, peace, war—must be the concern of the Church.

Wherever the Paulist student serves the Christian Community—in a parish or an inner city school, a youth center or a campus, or in communications, he is concerned. Involved. Right now.

When you commit yourself to the Paulists, it isn't a someday thing. It's today.

Utopia Is A Long Way Off

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) - Americans and Europeans have begun to lay the foundations of a Europe where they hope the only wars will be price wars and the Soviet Union will obey the same rules as the republic of San Marino on an Italian hilltop.

This utopia is a long way off.

Diplomats from 34 countries, unless they preferred to explore the chilly lakes and woods outside Helsinki, were still laboring over the weekend at a system for choosing their deputy chairman.

Three days of meetings and a lot of preliminary work besides had not brought them any farther than that in their preparation for a conference on security and cooperation in Europe.

More important to the rest of the world was the way clashes were shaping up: not so much East against West, but little countries against big ones.

The first incident had elements of both conflicts. The Finnish organizers set up a big six-sided table for the meeting on the dance floor of the student organization building at Helsinki's University of Technology. To each of 30 countries they gave two seats. The United States, the Soviet Union, France and Britain - the victors of World War II all rated three seats.

The United States, Britain and France each occupied only two of their places. The Soviets used all three so the opening session showed Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian Zorin in the unpleasant role of big brother.

Predictable protests were heard from smaller countries and next day the Soviet Union used only two seats.

"We like things like that," said one Western diplomat.

Since then, the loudest voice at the meeting has come from Romania, where the Communist government likes to show its independence on foreign affairs.

Public attention focused on Romania, diplomats say, makes it harder for the Soviet Union to do anything that would bring it back into line-like the Soviet action in Czechoslovakia in 1968 and in Hungary in 1956.

Hussein Escapes Assassination

BEIRUT (AP) - King Hussein of Jordan narrowly escaped assassination earlier this month when a rebel Jordanian air force pilot fired a rocket at the monarch's helicopter on the palace grounds and blew it up, the Lebanese newspaper An Nahar said Sunday.

Earlier in the weekend, the leftist newspaper Al Moharrer reported that a coup engineered by 300 dissident air force and army officers had failed after word of it was leaked to Hussein.

There was no official word from Jordan on the reports of the attempts at a coup and assassination.

Hussein, who was about to board the helicopter, escaped with a minor shrapnel wound in the thigh, An Nahar reported.

The paper added that several loyal air force pilots took off in jet fighters and shot down the attacking plane. The rebel pilot, identified as Talal al Khatib, was reported killed, An Nahar said.

The 37-year-old king was admitted to the armed forces hospital the same day, ostensibly for treatment of irregular heartbeat caused by fatigue. He left the hospital two days later. The attack occurred during the weekend of Nov. 18-19 according to the paper.

Al Moharrer reported that the officers behind the coup wanted to overthrow Hussein and proclaim a republic in Jordan.

The attempt was financed by Said Dajani, a Jordanian banker, who allegedly received $20 million from Libyan leader Muammer Kadafi for the coup, Al Moharrer said. Kadafi has previously called for the overthrow of Hussein.

The plan to oust Hussein was laid down six months ago and the conspirators wanted to stage the coup by the end of November, but Hussein got word of the plot and quickly squashed it, according to Al Moharrer.

Dajani and several officers were reported arrested, but the air force officers still decided to act. Al Khatib had his jet fighter equipped with rockets and then tried to kill Hussein, An Nahar said.

It was not known how serious the king's wound was. But reports from Amman said Hussein chaired a Cabinet meeting Saturday.

Local reports also said he personally interrogated Col. Rafei Hindawi, an infantry officer accused of masterminding the conspiracy.

First word about an attempted coup came on the Syrian state-controlled Damascus radio Nov. 15, but this was denied in Amman the same day.

Some Arabs, including Kadafi, have assailed Hussein because he has shown a willingness to make peace with Israel.

400 Attend Service For Slain Students

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — A memorial service for the two black students slain at Southern University drew 400 people to the steps of the state capitol on Sunday as two independent commissions prepared to begin full-scale investigations of the Nov. 16 police student confrontation at the school.

State officials and school administrators, meanwhile, countered threats of continued turbulence with pleas of calm as they prepared to resume classes at Southern's smaller New Orleans branch for the first time since the tragedy 90 miles to the north.

About 400 blacks assembled for the hour-long rally. Leaders said it was in memorial for the two dead students. John E. Brown, who told the crowd he had organized the event, said, "The very existence of the black race today is threatened."

Brown said several national civil rights leaders had been invited to speak, but he said none was able to attend.

Focal point for the activity was the 30 minutes of violence on Nov. 16 which exploded as officers chased students from Southern's administration building. Denver A. Smith of New Roads, La., and Leonard Douglas Brown, Bilbert, La., both 20, were sprayed with buckshot and died of head wounds. Authorities contended at the start that officers fired nothing but tear gas. Later, however, they conceded that an officer could have mistaken a shotgun cartridge for tear gas cartridge.

Only the 12-member commission appointed by the state's general, William Guste, could boast legal status and at least access to subpoena powers.

But organizers of the Black People's Committee of Inquiry, outwardly skeptical of the official investigation, said they, too, would make their findings available to authorities.

The Baton Rouge campus was ordered closed through the first of the year to let tempers cool, but state and school officials decided to reopen the New Orleans branch after a 10-day break, despite threats of "some hell down there."

How To Spot Alcohol Problem

The alcohol problem on the UMass campus has been continually overlooked in the past, not only by the authorities, but even more important, by the students themselves.

The cultural and social acceptability of the use of alcohol in this country, as well as the very discrete action of the drug itself plays a major role in this condition. Practically everyone has heard the phrase "Well, my friend's a drunk, but he doesn't have a drinking problem." This may very well be true. The dangerous part comes in when this friend continues to be a drunk for another year or more. If he wasn't a problem drinker or an alcoholic to begin with the chances are extremely high that he is now.

Alcohol is an addictive drug physically as well as mentally. However, it is not addictive to each and every individual who drinks, whereas a drug like heroin is. If you shoot heroin everyday for six months straight, you are going to get addicted. But if you drink steadily for long periods of time you're not necessarily going to become an alcoholic. This is what is called the discrete action of the drug. Some people become alcoholics while others don't, even when sharing the same drinking habits.

Some signs of a potential alcoholic are as follows:

1. Having blackouts (amnesia of intoxicated period)
2. Gulping drinks one right after the other
3. Finding yourself drinking in the morning
4. Finding it hard not to drink for long periods of time
5. Finding yourself discussing drinking or getting 'bombed' more than your friends talk about it
6. Drinking to relieve anger, fatigue, depression or social discomfort
7. Having to deal with legal and/or medical facilities as a direct result of your drinking
8. Skipping classes due to a hangover, going to class drunk, or blowing off the day at the Blue Wall
9. Being a burden to friends and strangers due to drinking

Consider these things. They're probably a lot more legitimate than you think. If you have any questions or something to say, either come down to Room to Move or call 5-0400 or 5-0401.

Room Choosing For Spring Semester

Residence hall room choosing for the Spring Semester, 1973, will be held the week of November 27 - December 1. For students who wish to reserve space in a residence hall the following schedule has been set up.

Monday, November 27 - Students who intend to remain in their present room should notify their head of residence. Students who plan to vacate their present rooms must notify their heads of residence by this date.

Tuesday, November 28 - Students who wish to move to available space within their present residence hall may sign up with their head of residence on this date.

Wednesday & Thursday November 29 & 30 - Students who presently reside in a residence hall and who wish to move to another residence hall may sign up with the head of residence of the new residence hall on these dates.

Friday, December 1 - Students presently residing off-campus who wish to move to available space within the residence halls may sign up with the head of residence of the residence hall to which they plan to move.

This schedule may vary slightly from area to area, so contact the area where you wish to reserve a space for modifications of this schedule, if any.

Students Planning to Move Off-Campus

Students planning and who are eligible to move off-campus for the Spring Semester, 1973, must fill out the necessary forms for the return of the Security Deposit at the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore Building.

Students eligible to reside off-campus are students who will be:

1. Married
2. Seniors (Class of 1973)
3. Commuting from the home of parents within a 40-mile radius of Amherst
4. 21 years of age as of January 25, 1973

Students not covered by the above categories will be required to reside in a University residence hall and will be billed accordingly.

Students Planning to Withdraw

Students planning not to return to school next semester must inform the Registrar of their intentions so that the Security Deposit can be refunded to them.

CCEBS Goals

Meeting on a regular basis for over two months, an organization of CCEBS students has formed with a set of goals to be promulgated which would effect their academic life now and in the future. This tightly knit group of students represents cross disciplines, i.e., Engineering, Business, BDIC, Liberal Arts, Education, etc., yet many of the concerns to be addressed are mutual.

Many of the goals are visceral at present but continued meetings are planned to create effective vehicles for meeting the goals and needs.

Some of the goals articulated are:

1. The absence of or minute numbers of students in various departments on campus.
2. The sparcity of minority faculty in the hard sciences.
3. Courses and course content.
4. Career Counseling.
5. Academic performance as it relates to admissions and counseling.
6. University activities that complement the academics.
7. Housing, etc.

Third World Alliance Communique

3rd World Alliance Supports Chandler

At present there is the opposition to the candidacy of Paul Chandler into the School of Education graduate program.

In most games the referees are put in charge to see that all the people involved in the game play fairly.

But, we as Black people are involved in a game where the refs cheat in order to maintain their image as the pillar of fair play.

This situation has become acute at the School of Education, The students at the School of Ed., both Black and White realize that Dwight is dangerously Bullshit, but as long as that knowledge is not transmitted from one person to another, Dwight has no problem dealing with it. But like the rest of the opportunists of the world when their political contradictions are exposed verbally they are propelled to REACTION.

Such is the case against Paul Chandler. The chieftain of this opposition is none other than Dwight Allen. The reason not to accept Paul Chandler are based on his political posture.

The administration of the School of Ed. proports itself to be non-political, which is a boldfaced lie. Any institution in this country and especially the School of Ed., is a political institution and supports the given political philosophy and ideology of whatever system it is under.

Education is Paul Chandler's main area of study, and being in the graduate program in the School of Ed. will enable him to critically analyze the politics of using education as a means of suppression.

The Third World Alliance will not stand by while the members of our community are excluded from any areas of activity in this University Community.

Sarge Warns Of New Taxes

BOSTON (AP)—Gov. Francis W. Sargent said Sunday the legislature would have to approve his reorganization plan for state government or "we could need new taxes for state expenses."

Sargent told a television interviewer the second phase of reorganization calls for elimination "of entire agencies, programs and the combination of other agencies."

"If the legislature doesn't go along with us at least in principle, then we could need new taxes for state expenses," he said.

"We have got to have a more efficient state government," Sargent said. "The public is fed up to the teeth with taxes. They want more efficiency, and we're prepared to fight for it."

He said elimination of agencies and programs under reorganization would not mean "wholesale layoffs of state employes." He said there would be "more of an attrition. We'll be retraining those affected for other work."

The governor said his administration is examining ways to help local communities with their financial problems in order to help control property taxes.

"We'll have to find some new method to raise revenue to control local property taxes," he said. "I can't see how we can do it with the available revenues."

He said only two ways, neither very attractive, appeared available to get more revenue–an increase in the state sales tax or a hike in the state income tax.

"We don't want either option," he said. "Although we're considering them, we're not at all sure we would propose them."

Leisure Time Is Labor Issue

DETROIT (AP)—More leisure time is shaping up as an important union issue in bargaining on a new labor contracts with America's automakers next year. And, judging from its current stand, management probably will take a hard line.

"The question of more leisure time is certainly going to be an issue," a spokesman for the 1.6 million- member United Auto Workers Union said Sunday.

"Practically all of the union's officers have indicated in one way or another that more time off to allow the worker to be with his family is essential."

The spokesman said, however, that no formal general policy will be set on the question until after a collective bargaining convention next March.

A reduction of work time could take various forms, ranging from more paid holidays to sabbaticals tied to an accumulation of reduced work hours, the spokesman said. He said one proposal union leaders had tossed out as "food for thought" might involve setting aside 10 per cent of the work year for each production employe. Crediting an employe with four hours of leisure time a week–10 per cent of a 40-hour week–would give him 26 days at the end of the work year, or a week a quarter, the spokesman said.

The auto industry, running full throttle with a record demand for new cars, has become increasingly reluctant to shut down its multi-billion dollar production apparatus for holidays.

Idle capacity is costly in an industry in which the four biggest producers, General Motors Corp., Ford Motor Co., Chrysler Corp. and American Motors, turn out 36,000 cars and trucks on an average day.

That was the reason Ford gave in refusing to give its 160,000 hourly workers a four-day Thanksgiving weekend.

"Any impairment of management's ability to schedule the full use of these facilities–whether it is the result of absent workers, more holidays, work stoppages, four-day weeks, arbitrary limits on overtime, or some other cause, is enormously expensive," Ford said in its last annual stockholders report.

UAW Vice President Ken Bannon, in charge of the 1.6-million member union's Ford department, had asked Ford to shift a bonus holiday slated for Dec. 17.

Bromery To Address Third World Community

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery will be addressing the Third World Community this Wednesday, Nov. 29, 1972. It will be held during the Third World Alliance meeting, at the School of Business Administration in auditorium #120 at 8:00 P.M. sharp.

This is an extremely important meeting. It will be the first time in the History of this University that a Black Chancellor will be addressing the Third World Community.

Every brother and sister on this campus should compel each other, out of a sense of responsibility, to attend this meeting.

Guns And Harassment

There has been a great deal of controversy in the last few days over whether or not the campus police should carry guns. The shooting in Louisiana of two students has rekindled the cry across campus that the campus police should not be armed.

We disagree. If the campus police had only to deal with UMass students the carrying of arms in the course of their daily duties would be needless, but the fact is that the campus community is not the only group of people that the campus police have to deal with. UMass is open and easily entered by almost anyone who so chooses, and these people can be armed. The incident last year where a student was shot in his dormitory illustrates the fact that weapons are not absent from campus. The police have to deal with these problems occasionally and should be equipped to do so.

However, the police should not overstep their roles. The charges of police harrassment of students, especially minority students, should be seriously investigated. The Student Government Association has announced plans for a Security Policy Council which would review all allegations of harrassment and other complaints against the Security Department, and advise and assist the security director on security policy.

The Security Council idea is a good one, and we strongly support its creation.

Jews For Sale

The Soviet Union has been having economic troubles these days. Correction: The Soviet Union has ALWAYS been having troubles with their economy. Economic difficulties are bound to arise whenever a government assumes dictatorial controls over the economic endeavors of its citizenry. But now there is hope (for the economic commissars). President Nixon, who is anxious to usher in that "Full Generation of Peace" that he has been rhapsodizing about, is now willing to permit the Soviet government to come shopping in the capitalistic United States for the raw materials and technology which its system is incapable of producing.

But wait a minute. In order for the Comrades to come bargain hunting in U.S. markets, Congress must first give them the "green light" to do so. It does this by granting non-market (i.e. Communist) nations with the necessary "Most Favored Nation" tariff status. Since Congress is just as anxious as the President to see us move away from confrontation and toward negotiation, the Comrades should have little trouble in acquiring the "go-ahead" they so desperately need.

But wait just another minute. While the mood in Congress is highly favorable to the establishment of "Detente," that is, highly favorable to the establishment of better relations with the Soviet government, there is one major obstacle. That obstacle is none other than Senator Henry Jackson of Washington, who is trying to get an amendment attached to the Bill which grants the Soviets with the coveted Most Favored Nations status. This seemingly innocuous amendment could have potentially devastating effects on the future of totalitarianism in the Soviet Union. Senator Jackson's amendment would withhold MFN status from any nation which does not grant its citizens with certain fundamental human rights, specifically the right of any citizen to emigrate.

Senator Jackson's efforts in the Senate are not spontaneous. His stance is the culmination of the efforts of many courageous individuals, the most prominent of whom are the leaders of the Soviet Jewish community, who have for many years been struggling to emerge from a country which is determined to suppress their individuality. Senator Jackson is just one of the concerned citizens around the world who are demanding that the Soviet government grant its citizens with the most basic of human rights.

The Soviet government is now in a tremendous dilemma. Obviously, it has much to gain from improved trade relations with the United States. It also stands to gain from the lucrative "head tax" which it is levying on Jews wishing to emigrate, a veritable ransom which it believes can be extorted from Jewish charitable agencies in the non-Communist world. (Funny world. The Commies are the first ones to go into business of selling Jews on the world market.) But ultimately, the most crucial issue confronting the Soviet dictators is the issue of emigration itself. And not just for Jews. For the Soviet Union has had a long standing stake in keeping its borders closed. It has spent millions upon millions of rubles in a continuous effort to keep its citizens from escaping. It has erected Berlin Walls, put up thousands of miles of electrified barbed wire, and stationed armed sentries at every potential point of escape. It has been willing to open fire on children who have attempted to climb under the barbed wire. If the Jackson amendment is passed, and there is a strong possibility that it will, the Soviet government will be faced with an unprecedented threat to their totalitarian rule: those citizens wishing to emigrate from the U.S.S.R. will be free to do so. And there is no way of determining how many disenchanted individuals will take advantage of this very alluring opportunity. There is also no way of determining the potential drain on the supply of Soviet brainpower. Will the Soviets compromise one of the foundations which holds their entire system of totalitarianism in check? Without this very basic authority, the walls of totalitarianism may just come tumbling down. The Soviet government may undergo the hemophilia of emigration which could have more devastating effects on their economy than a lack of trade with the United States.

FAILURE OF A MISSION

Why did the U.S. go to war in Vietnam?

For exactly, we have been told, the same reason we previously went to war in Korea--to afford these Asian people the right to self-determination, to permit them to choose their own form of government.

As of last month, South Vietnam was under martial law ruled by Gen. Nguyen Van Thieu. South Korea was under martial law ruled by Gen. Park Chung Hee. Cambodia was under martial law ruled by Gen. Lon Nol. The Philippines was under martial law ruled by Ferdinand Marcos. Thailand was a military dictatorship under Field Marshal Thanom Kittikachorn.

Self-determination?

Guns To Protect Who?

Historically, every time that a government wishes to institute facist laws, i.e., more guns for police, no-knock, no right to demonstrate, suppression of the press, etc., it always does so under the guise of "protecting" the people. The pigs at Orangeburg were there to "protect" the people. The troops on Kent State were there to "protect" the people. The pigs that murdered Fred Hampton (in his bed at 4 a.m.) used no-knock and over one hundred bullets to "protect" the Black community from Panther rule and influence. The troops that stormed Attica were there to "protect" the guards, who were being held captive by prisoners (how many guards were butchered by the troops?).

Demonstrators in Chicago, D.C., New York, California, etc., etc., etc., had their skulls smashed in so that the "American Dream" might be "protected". (Did you know that more than three people on a corner can be considered a demonstration by a "law" enforcer?) The guards at Southern were called out to "protect" the school. Daniel Ellisburg will be lynched, and the press will continue to be attacked by top government officials so as to "protect" the people from the truth. Thousands of tons of bombs and napalm are dropped on Vietnam in order to "protect" the Vietnamese people from Communist rule. The pig in Harlem shot a thirteen-year-old boy in the back in order to "protect" the lives of innocent people. Yes, and cops on UMass campus carry guns in order to "protect" the attending students. Then, we hear that no UMass cop has ever shot a student on this campus. SO WHAT??!!!

No pigs shot students in the back in Orangeburg before 1969. No troops had killed students at Kent State before 1970. No pigs had killed students on Southern before 1972. No troopers had killed guards (who cares about prisoners) at Attica before 1971. No no-knock laws before 1966. And the list goes on!!

There is a frightening calm in the nation. Almost anything can happen, and no one raises a finger! More bombs than ever fell on Vietnam, but the "peace" demonstrations are few. Pollution is yanking away at the air, but few make demands on the industrial powers. Two Black students get killed, and a rally doesn't even bring out a crowded auditorium. This list, too, goes on and on.

Is it that people don't care any more? I choose to hope not. Is it that people are afraid to speak up? If so, shouldn't we be questioning the "free" society that we're supposed to be living in? When do we start to ask questions and demand answers of and from those who are supposed to be "protecting" us? When do we, as students and concerned human beings, wake up and realize that the shot "not yet" fired can happen tomorrow? Do we wait for two, three, five students to get killed before we demand the disarming of the campus police? Who and what is really being "protected" by the police wearing guns? Do we wait, as the world did when Hitler carried out his persecution of Jews, until the weapons start to pierce our skin? I say no! The present is the time to take action. Tomorrow may be too late! Only through the complete disarming of the police can they begin to serve and protect us. Only through [illegible] willingness to struggle and seek the truth can we really win!

Liberation [illegible] the perpetual Peace

Elitism And Pretentious Consciousness

To The Editor:

Last Tuesday's edition of the Collegian was an appalling example of the capacity of an emotional mob to coerce an otherwise free press. I would have rather had the Collegian staff live up to its responsibility to the entire student body and seen no Collegian on Tuesday than to have had them compromise their guiding ideal in presenting the news.

The justification for such coercion was that the Collegian does not adequately present the black perspective, especially with regard to the shooting of two students at Southern University in Baton Rouge. With the exception of an occasional editorial by Bill Foster few, if any, black students have ever manifested a working interest in the Collegian.

This brings up another point. The editorial page has always been an open forum for the expression of grievances, real or imagined, concerning the campus community. Why haven't there been more letters complaining of alleged police oppression or racist attitudes? Better still, why weren't such abuses reported to the Head of Security immediately after they occurred? Why wait for the crisis at S.U.?

The point is that the shootings at S.U. have provided an emotional focal point for black members of this academic community to identify with the slain students and each other. From this heightened sense of group solidarity and emotional sense of threat demands have been made of the Security Police and the community in general to abandon racist attitudes. Attitudes at the University and society at large will not be altered by the coercion of a newspaper, living in all black corridors or houses or waiting for crisis like S.U.

I am personally affronted by black elitism and pretentious black consciousness. I am no less affronted by similar white racist attitudes. If we as human beings continue to isolate ourselves from each other then the sad consequences are inevitable.

G. Joseph Vinskey

Spoiled Children

To The Editor:

The rally that took place Monday Oct. 20, 1972 in protest of the murder of two black students was attended by a crowd insignificant in size when the population of the university is considered. Those there were predominantly black.

They were there because of an awareness of the gravity of the situation. Although it was one among many, that made it no less intolerable.

The event at Baton Rouge was an example of racism, militancy on the part of the police, and injustice if no strong action is taken against those responsible for the crime.

The event in the Student Union Ballroom was an example of concern and action on the part of those who participated.

But another event of equal if not of more significance took place all over the University of Massachusetts campus. That is Apathy on the part of the students who no longer find it fashionable to concern themselves with anything that does not directly affect them.

We are the spoiled suburban children of a corrupt society and we don't make waves.

Viet-Nam, South America, Baton Rouge, Kent State, President Nixon, George Wallace, and the rest all appear far away when stereos, t.v.'s, pot, etc. take precedence over reality.

It seems acceptable that the student movement that existed so strongly in the '60's, change or evolve, but not that die.

If there is no protest of the iniquities that so blatantly surround us, then they will continue to grow and there will be little hope for our society.

We'll Take It

To The Editor:

Referring to the article on Commuter spending in Tuesday's edition of the Collegian, let me make some suggestions on using the money. First of all, the parking lots are in rather poor condition. From potholes to four inches of mud, you can expect a good test for your shock absorbers. Secondly, the campus roads are not in much better shape either. These are also filled with bumps and potholes. After this problem is alleviated, then we may be ready to give the money away.

Letters To The Editor

As in previous years the MDC will continue to print letters to the editor. The only requirements are that they be typed at sixty spaces, double-spaced and no longer than two pages in length. All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone number must be included. Letters will be accepted from organizations, but a name and a telephone number must be on them. Please note this change in policy. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without a signature.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgement of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

Editorial Points

The Boston College newspaper is fond of calling UMass the Aggies. Well, we have a new name they can call us: conquerors.

Speaking of football and nicknames, how about calling the Patriots the New England Patsies? How about the California Patsies? We shouldn't have to admit that they're ours.

Why is there always a light on in Machmer Hall at night? Could it be that the people in Mental Health are waiting for the crazies in the Collegian to finally, permanently blow their cool?

Belchertown

To The Editor:

A meeting of the Belchertown Friends Association was held at Belchertown on Sunday, Nov. 19. The guest speaker was Beryl Cohen, attorney for the Friends in their suit against the Mass. Dept. of Mental Health. His presentation outlined the progress of the suit to date and future actions before the court.

The suit was filed on Feb. 7, 1972. A forty-seven page document enumerated inadequacies in physical plant, services, programs, staff, sleeping facilities, sanitary facilities, bathrooms, kitchens, dining halls, diet composition, medical care, etc.

The defense (DMH) responded by saying that the charges were false; inadequate, unsanitary, unsafe, unhealthy, and inhumane conditions did not exist. And in fact if they did exist it is not within the rights of the residents to initiate legal action against the state. "A constitutional right to treatment cannot be predicated upon a system of voluntary admissions." In other words if one is voluntarily admitted to a state institution under the direction of the DMH one has no constitutional right to demand treatment. This reasoning was rejected by the court as was a motion by the defense to dismiss the case.

As a result of this hearing six preliminary court orders were issued: 1. Admissions were halted, 2. Transfers and releases were halted, 3. Staff hiring procedures were altered, 4. Medical examinations and evaluations were ordered for all residents within 30 days, 5. Comprehensive treatment plans were ordered for each individual resident, and 6. Plans for rehabilitation of physical plant were ordered to be drafted.

On May 8, 1972 contempt of court charges were filed against Peter Goldmark, Sec. of Human Services, for failure to ensure medical evaluations were conducted, and treatment plans were submitted after he was granted a 60-day extension to comply with the court order. To date these examinations have not been completed nor have treatment programs been filed with the court.

Mr. Cohen requested access to medical, psychiatric, and educational records of all residents to show conclusively the inadequacies of the programming at Belchertown. He is guaranteed this right by Mass. statue as an attorney, however, he has been denied that right by DMH which submitted that the records are "privileged information" and will not be released without a specific court order and written permission of parents who likewise are not allowed access to this "privileged information". Once more the DMH suggests that the presentation of these documents would constitute a "burden upon the state".

In June the DMH presented a program "Plans for Belchertown" under the combined authorship of Peter Goldmark, Sec. of Human Services, Dr. Milton Greenblatt, Comm. of Mental Health, and Dr. James Nagle, ex-superintendent of the Belchertown State School. This 150-page document outlined plans for rebuilding, and refurbishing building, hiring of additional staff, and purchasing of additional supplies and equipment which would up-grade the conditions to minimum standards which have been ignored over the years. This plan would cost $5,280,000. in addition to the annual budget.

After the retirement of Judge Ford, who had conducted the initial hearings, and after the promotion of Judge Campbell to US Court of Appeals who conducted hearings during the summer the suit was assigned to Judge Manuel Riel, who had come to Mass. from Calif. for a 30-day period to help clear the overloaded docket of the Boston District.

On Nov. 10 before Judge Riel, Peter Goldmark referred to the document "Plans for Belchertown" which he had submitted to the court in June, as "CRAP" and unequivocally indicated that it would never be implemented for lack of necessity and funds. At that time he submitted a plan which in the words of Mr. Cohen "not only watered down but washed away any meaningful changes". In addition the defense then asked the court for a summary judgement inasmuch as the conflict no longer existed and assured the court that the DMH would make their "best effort to attempt change". Mr. Cohen responded to this request on Mon., Nov. 20, with resounding disagreement and petitioned for further litigation.

As part of the new plan the DMH proposes to deinstitutionalize the retarded at a rate of 750 persons/year for the next 5 years. However, no community centers, no programs, no staff, and no plans exist for this program.

In 1966 the Mass. Legislature passed the Community Mental Health Act which was to establish 38 Community Mental Health Centers across the state, today only five are in operation. The facility located in Springfield is housed in an old wooden framed building which fails to meet minimum safety standards.

Mr. Cohen questions the credibility of such plans and offers that significant doubt might be raised in even the most credulous observer after examining the placement records of those who have left institutions for the retarded in Mass. The record shows that placement includes admission to rest homes, finding jobs, return to family or community, and deaths. The tally shows that more people are placed in graves than in any other placement programs. This significantly indicates the effectiveness of past placement programs, and should engender some doubt concerning the quality and overall effectiveness of the Dept. of Mental Health.

The court suit is now ten months old but little progress has been made and less change has taken place. It is the resolve of Mr. cohen and the parents of retarded residents of the Belchertown State School to continue court action to force the DMH to furnish desperately needed services and to provide human living conditions which approach decency rather than the zoo-like environment which daily surrounds the lives of the retarded.

Students Offering Support is an organization at the University which is helping to finance the lawsuit and create a statewide awareness of the plight of the retarded in Mass. If you wish to help the retarded, join with us!

Mau-Mau Spirit

By ROCHELLE CHANDLER

The world stopped and looked when students at Kent State were murdered. Parents of the fallen students were interviewed on the various media, and an immediate investigation was launched to see who was at fault for it all. (Who held any questions about who was to blame?) Page after page of newspapers and magazines was used to tell the story and express the concern of different people nationwide. Many schools held a day of mourning, and most students dropped a tear or two in moments of sincere identification with the dead Kent State students.

Then, someone happened to ask, "What about those kids at Jackson State College?" (Somehow it wasn't quite as upsetting. After all, Black folk been dying for years, ain't they?) Not once was a Black mother or father of one of those Jackson students interviewed on national t.v. and asked, "How do you feel?" (Who cared anyway??)

Then along comes Southern. And niggers trying to get into headlines again! So what if two had been shot to death -- BLACK FOLK BEEN DYING FOR YEARS!!

So, UMass, the nation, the world doesn't stop for one moment. No prayers, no tears, no moment of silence, no dedication - no thought!! The School of Education marathon went on! University classes continued!! Traffic jams the same! And smiling faces smiled but the more! After all, why not??? Only two more niggers had died!

So insignificant were the deaths of my two brothers, that the Collegian didn't deem it necessary to send someone to cover the entire rally that was held Monday, Nov. 20, in their honor. So insignificant were the deaths of my two brothers, that when a group of Black students asked that three pages of the Collegian be dedicated to these brothers, they were turned down. So insignificant were the deaths of my two brothers, that when the students demanded that the Collegian give up the space, Mr. Matt Tackeff termed it a Mau-Mau takeover. (His ignorance of African history, and his television mentality, i.e., a mentality that defines Geronimo, Nat Turner, Ho Chi Minh as the scoundrels, villians, dirt of history, and the Lone Ranger, General Custer, and Thomas Jefferson as the princes and heroes of history, is appalling!!....like the Mau-Mau were some negative force! Was Patrick Henry 'negative' when he pulled his gun and said, "Give me liberty or give me death!" ? Please, Mr. Tackeff, and associates, prior to using African terminology in order to describe something, check out its history and understand its true significance. Better yet, stick to things that you're sure to know about - why not call it the "Patrick Henrying of the Collegian"? Black folk with any degree of consciousness are just as proud of the Mau-Mau as you are of Ole' Pat!!!)

Well, regardless of how the majority of white people feel about the deaths of two more Black students, Black folk deem it very significant. Baton Rouge ain't that far away! And we're not about to let the Nixons, the Agnews, the Capt. Johnsons, the Shapins, the National Guards, the D.W.A.'s, and the Matt Tackeffs do whatever the hell they want with and to us!

And no, Mr. Tackeff, we wouldn't want your guilt feelings. Guilt don't raise the dead! Guilt don't fill the stomach! Guilt don't kill rats! Guilt don't empty prisons! And guilt don't stop bombs!! However, it's good to know where you're coming from 'cause it's far easier to confront the ignorance of a diehard conservative than to see where a "weak-kneed" liberal is really at. One might give the illusion of friendship, whereas the other leaves no room for doubt. And in war (remember we didn't declare it, ya'll did!) anything goes and everything is clear!

Yes, the spirit of the Mau-Mau still lives. OUR BROTHERS DID NOT DIE IN VAIN!

Pakistan President Wants 'Just Solution' To Deadlock

RAWALPINDI, Pakistan (AP)-- President Zulfikar Ali Bhutto said Sunday he wants the Pakistani and Indian army chiefs of staff to find a "just solution" to the deadlock in control-line negotiations, but insisted Pakistan would not compromise its stand over the one and a half square miles standing in the way of an agreement.

Winding up an 11-day tour of the Northwest Frontier Province with a speech before a large crowd in the provincial capital of Peshawar, Bhutto said the problems of the one and a half square miles could be solved since the rest of the line running through disputed Jammu and Kashmir territory had been completed.

He also said Pakistan no longer would be responsible for trying to make the situation in the subcontinent normal if the U.N. General Assembly adopted a resolution supporting the entry of Bangladesh without also passing one calling for the return of 91,000 Pakistani war prisoners held in India.

He referred to a Yugoslav resolution scheduled for debate Monday in New York calling for the admission to the United Nations of Bangladesh, whose application for membership was vetoed last August by China.

Bhutto said that if the General Assembly adopts the Yugoslav resolution without acting favorably on another resolution calling for the return of the prisoners, Bangladesh would not gain entry, even in the face of a 100 per cent General Assembly vote. He said China would continue to use its veto until its and Pakistani conditions for Bangladesh admission were met.

Argentina, Tunisia, Iran and Turkey have put up a resolution seeking the return of the prisoners. Bhutto said this resolution was "interconnected" with the Yugoslav motion.

Bhutto said if the two resolutions were treated separately, Pakistan would consider the action "foreign interference."

He added that Pakistan wants to solve the problems of the subcontinent without foreign interference.

Nazi-Hunter Claims He Can Find 'Angel Of Death'

HAIFA, Israel (AP) - An Israeli Nazi-hunter claims he knows the general whereabouts of Dr. Josef Mengele and could capture the notorious Auschwitz "Angel of Death" if he had financial backing.

"I would get another passport and fly to South America," says Tuvia Friedman. "Yes, I'm positive I could find him - and bring him to justice."

Since World War II, Friedman, working first out of Austria and later from his Haifa Documentation Center, has figured in the capture of 250 Nazi war criminals, including Adolf Eichmann.

Friedman refused to be pinned down, however, on another missing Nazi war criminal, Mrtin Bormann, Hitler's deputy.

"To me, he is dead," he said. "I want to think him dead. If he is alive, he is a dead man anyway, running in fear of his life, looking over his shoulder all the time. Don't forget he is over 70 now."

He conceded that if Borman is alive he "is probably in South America," in Argentina, Paraguay or Uruguay.

He said there should never be another Eichmann-type trial in Israel.

"Besides costing Israel one million dollars the Eichmann trial was terrible for our people too. Many of them could not bear to relive those horrible years in the camps," he explained.

The 50-year-old native of Radom, Poland, spent five years in Hitler's camps, where he lost most of his family.

"Where is Mengele? We understand he is living freely in Paraguay under the protection of rich German Nazis and corrupt officials." The Israelis hold special hatred for the chief doctor of Auschwitz who has been quoted as saying: "Here the Jews come in by the door and go out by the chimney."

Mengele, who would now be 61, performed inhuman medical experiments on camp inmates and was responsible for making the final selection of those who were to die in the gas chambers.

Friedman introduced one of Mengele's former patients, Reuven Hersch, 41. The man had been filling out some papers until he heard Mengele's name. He stiffened suddenly.

"He and his brother were part of Mengele's infamous twin experiments," Friedman explained.

Mengele was obsessed with the subject of twins and learning their secret of birth. "He wanted German mothers to have more fair-skinned, blond Aryan twins," Friedman said.

Hersch, who emigrated from his native Hungary to Israel in 1958, said he and his twin brother were transported to Auschwitz with other Hungarian Jews during the war.

"Mengele would take spinal taps from me and my brother every month," Hersch said. "There were other things, too."

Friedman said that as president of the World Jewish Federation of Victims of the Nazi Regime he was trying to get a small pension for Hersch from West Germany.

Hersch said his twin was in an insane asylum.

Hayakawa: College Campus Has Changed

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) - The political climate on American college campuses has changed greatly since 1968, says language analyst S.I. Hayakawa.

Hayakawa, who recently resigned as prsident of San Francisco State College, visited Minneapolis Saturday to speak to the annual convention of the National Council of Teachers of English.

"We have to realize that we now have a whole new generation of students," Hayakawa told a news conference. "Since 1968, many students have graduated, some have 'reformed' and others have gone to law school."

Hayakawa said four years ago hysteria resulted when leaders used slogans such as "Power to the People!"

"If you started hollering 'Power to the people!' today, you can't get a parade going," Hayakawa said.

"Students have become disillusioned with extremist tactics."

Hayakawa said he doubts very much if any words will arouse students this year.

Students now have to spend much more time studying and are being more serious about studying because of society's serious problems, such as ecology, Hayakawa said.

In the 1960s, he noted, there were students in college with no academic goals-there to escape the draft. There is to some extent a connection between the decrease in young activism on college campuses and the decrease in the draft, Hayakawa claimed.

Hayakawa said, when asked about his future plans that he intends to write a book on his version of the San Francisco strike and a critique of general semantics.

Demonstrators Will Hunt For Gov. Sargent

BOSTON (AP) - Demonstrators who marched through Boston Saturday seeking support for religious observance of Christmas in public schools say they will meet with Gov. Francis W. Sargent on the issue Monday even if they have to go hunting for him.

The governor was reported to be planning a hunting trip Monday.

One of the leaders of the demonstration, Mrs. Rita Warren of Brockton, said, "If he goes hunting, we'll go hunting for him."

About 100 demonstrators marched through the Boston Common area Saturday to protest state Board of Education guidelines recommending elimination of religious observance of Christmas in public schools.

Mrs. Warren said the marchers had asked Sargent to meet with them Saturday, but when they arrived at the State House they were told the governor was not there.

University Presidents Share 5 Goals

THE DURHAM DECLARATION OF THE PRESIDENTS OF THE PUBLIC UNIVERSITIES OF NEW ENGLAND

The Presidents of the six land-grant public universities of New England, meeting in Durham, New Hampshire, for their fourth formal session of the year, have continued their efforts to broaden and strengthen their established pattern of regional cooperation.

We recognize that mounting demands for public higher education of high quality find New England at a crossroads. Generations behind most of the United States in its realization of the need for support, the region has made impressive strides in its public universities and colleges in the last decade. Expanded enrollments, improved facilities, better faculties, greater service to our states are among our genuine accomplishments.

Those advances have required increasing investments of tax money. Today, there is a proper and growing public concern that our universities are effective institutions--creating knowledge, imparting knowledge, reaching out to those who need us most. There is also proper concern that university programs are well-planned, well-managed and well-coordinated with one another and with the private institutions of higher education that are so rich a resource in New England.

As Presidents of the six public universities, we believe we carry a special obligation to organize our progress so that we strengthen the overall pattern of higher education in our region, public and private alike.

Accordingly, each of us has been engaged in our own states in participating in consortia and other collaborative arrangements. For many years we have been partners with our private colleagues in the New England Board of Higher Education. We are proud of the outreach and special educational activities of this New England Center here in Durham. We believe we have built a sensible, outreach and special educational activities of this New England Center here in Durham. We believe we have built a sensible, wholesome, intramural athletic program. Now we believe it is time to take another major step forward a common planning and coordination in our academic and public service areas. Specifically, we believe we can better our educational offerings and improve our cost effectiveness if--

First, we plan the course of our graduate school developments together. Universities by the very nature of their calling, must carry on graduate education of high quality. But we believe we can shape together an overall program that gives each institution sufficient strength and depth in faculty and research challenge and at the same time avoids duplication and destructive competition.

Second, we will continue to examine similarly our common capacity for region-wide professional schools located at a single site. For some time, proposals for various New England professional schools, such as in undertaking new field of health services, have been under popular discussion. We believe that we should now determine the genuine needs for such undertakings, and if they are demonstrated, initiate them together. We should also evaluate the ways our present professional schools and colleges can be made to complement one another.

Third, we will undertake to strengthen, streamline, and rationalize our extension and continuing educational programs. The New England region is compact; our six states taken together fit comfortably within the borders of Texas. We think we can devise a genuine regional extension capability that can help our communities and improve the status and morale of the faculties and staff involved.

Fourth, since New England with the rest of America, looks increasingly toward shared activities with out other nations, we believe we can develop further common international programs. The recent New England-Japan Trade Conference here at the New England is a good example of our potential. The international study exchange programs for students and faculties are another. We believe that we can systematically develop relations with universities across the world that can yield enormous economic, cultural and social benefits to our states at no significant increase in cost to taxpayers.

Finally, the concept of an open university easily available to all who desire has excited the professional educator and citizen alike. We have the obligation to explore the concept on a regional basis and already proposals exist in several of our states to use public television, regional centers and special courses to that end.

Given our conviction that these five areas of collaboration hold high promise, we have asked Don Nicoll of Maine, a distinguished New Englander with a long record of public service to our region, to analyze how we can realize our academic and service aims and to make specific recommendations as to organization and procedure.

We hope to have the Nicoll study before us early in 1973 and to be able to present to our boards of trustees and executives, and through them to the people of our states, a realistic plan of action next year. Our expectation is that we can establish arrangements that will dramatically improve the combined value of our institutions and the effectiveness with which we work.

In the meantime, we will continue our existing endeavors in athletics and continuing education. We ask all New Englanders concerned with the future of their region and their children to support us in our work.

About EMS
Our professional staff members are avid cross-country skiers. When you visit EMS you get assistance, advice and years of experience, not a sales pitch. We'll help you select the finest equipment available to suit your budget and needs. Being the country's largest retailer of cross-country skis, we're naturally concerned with the tendency of prices to rise in this field. We're interested in keeping the cost of outfitting you with touring equipment as low as we possibly can. Our feeling is this winter recreation should remain distinct from its super-commercialized down-hill sister.

Baha'i Faith Week

The week of November 27 to December 1 will be a Baha'i Proclamation week. Events have been scheduled for the entire week by the UMass Baha'i Association in order to make information about the Faith readily available to the entire University community.

An unusual media display containing information at a glance, as well as free literature, will be located in the C.C. concourse-level each day. On Monday thru Thursday, evening talks/discussions will be held in room 177-8 at 8:00 P.M.

The public is invited to see "DAWNING", a multi-media musical show presented by students of the 5-college community. The performance will begin at 8:00 p.m. on Friday Dec. 1, in room 169 in the Campus Center Complex. (No admission charge.) It is a sometimes serious, sometimes lighthearted dramatic presentation of what the performers believe are concrete solutions to the pressing problems of our country and world. The theme of the presentation is the teachings of BAHA'U'LLAH (The Glory of God) the Prophet-Founder of the Baha'i Faith.

Jewish Issues To Be Examined

Concerned Jewish Students, a five college organization, is initiating a weekly lecture series. The Henry M. Gordon lecture series will offer three lectures this semester, and will continue throughout the spring term. Professors and students from the five-college area will address themselves to contemporary Jewish issues. Following each lecture there will be a discussion and a social hour.

The first lecture will be given by Dr. Haim Gunner on Wednesday evening, November 29th at 6:30 p.m. in the Governor's Lounge of the S.U. Dr. Gunner will lecture on "Issues in the Middle East". Dr. Gunner is presently a professor of Environmental Science at the University of Mass. This past year he spent his sabbatical year in Israel where he was a consultant to the National Research Council of Israel and the Knesset (the Israeli parliament). He also was a professor at Tel Aviv University. Dr. Gunner, who is well known on this campus, has an extensive background and intimate knowledge of Israeli and Mid-Eastern affairs. He has lived in Israel for many years and was a member of Kibbutz Sasa for six years.

The second lecture will be given by Moshe Gileadi on Wednesday evening, December 6, at 6:30 p.m. in the Governor's Lounge. Mr. Gileadi's topic will be "Collective Education in the Kibbutz Movement". Mr. Gileadi is the executive director of ORANIM, the famous Israeli Teacher's College Institute. He has been a member of kibbutz MIZRA for thirty years. He is presently spending one year at the UMass School of Education.

The last lecture of this fall's series will be given by Dov Gordon on Tuesday evening, December 12, at 6:30 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge (S.U.). Mr. Gordon's topic will be "A Farewell to American Jewry". Mr. Gordon, who is a senior at the University, will be making ALIAH to Israel this December. He has been involved in many facets of American Jewish life, especially in the youth college movements. During his freshman year he was chairman of the student-faculty committee for a Judaic Studies Program at UMass. He spent his sophomore year at Hebrew University in Jerusalem. Last year Mr. Gordon founded and chaired the Western Mass. Student Struggle for Soviet Jewry and this past year he organized Concerned Jewish Students. The lecture series is named in memory of Mr. Gordon's father, Henry M. Gordon, who during his lifetime was actively involved in American Jewish Communal life.

During this spring's lecture series there will be a number of panel discussions and guest lecturers. Any professor or student who would like to participate in the lecture series is asked to call Isaac Seigel, 6-4087.

Chinmoy To Talk On Vedas

Sri Chinmoy, Indian spititual master, will give two talks on the Vedas (sacred scripture of India) at Smith and Holyoke colleges on Tuesday, November 28.

Sri Chinmoy conducts weekly meditations at the United Nations and has lectured at over 100 universities throughout the world, including Oxford, Cambridge and the Ivy League schools. Since his arrival in the West in 1964, Sri Chinmoy has established centres for meditation throughout the United States, Canada, the Caribbean, Europe and the Far East. He is a world-recognized authority on yoga and spirituality, having had a number of books published by Harper & Row, Herder & Herder and others.

The first lecture, on Tuesday, November 28, will be at Holyoke College at 6:00 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium. The second lecture later that evening will be at Smith at 9:00 p.m. in McConnell Auditorium. Admission free.

Bilingual-Bicultural Teacher Workshop

In response to the need for qualifed Bilingual-Bicultural teachers, the School of Education held the first in a series of workshops for Bilingual-Bicultural teachers on Saturday, November 18. Participating in the workshop were members of the public school system of Lynn, Massachusetts, other teachers, and students interested in Bilingual-Bicultural education.

Ralph Robinett, program manager of the Miami based Spanish Curriculum Development Center led the discussion on the recently developed curriculum for elementary school Spanish speaking students.

He noted that the Washington Community School in Lynn was the only field trial center in Massachusetts for the Spanish Curriculum Development materials.

Special mention was given to the cultural aspect of the curriculum. It is tailored to suit the needs of the different Hispanic groups; a Puerto Rican orientation for children of the Northeast region, a Mexican American orientation for the children of the Southwest region and a Cuban orientation for the children of the Southeast. The materials, designed to teach language arts, social science, fine arts science and mathematics in Spanish, give special consideration to the needs and interests of the culturally different child.

James Leonard, Principal of the Washington community school spoke about the Lynn school's interest in the materials and in working with the Bilingual-Bicultural Center. Mary Lopez coordinator for the School of Education Bilingual-Bicultural Center and the Lynn School presented a method for the implementation of the program into the already existing Bilingual classrooms and Henry Casso, Coordinator of the School of Education Bilingual-Bicultural Program, noted that the newly established Massachusetts Transitional Bilingual Law was a landmark effort for educating children of different language and cultural backgrounds in their native language. According to Casso this Law is going to have an enormous impact on Education in the state of Massachusetts.

Montgomery At Amherst

The James Montgomery Band and Flight will appear on the Amherst College campus at 8 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 30 in the Amherst College Alumni Gymnasium.

Described by Stu Fine of the Providence Journal as "the finest ensemble from the Boston pub and coffeehouse circuit since the early days of the J. Geils Band," the James Montgomery Band features a "polished rhythm and blues repertoire," as well as some of their own original pieces. Chris Hamel of the Boston-based entertainment-information paper The Phoenix adds: "Their spontaneity and musicianship hint at headliner potential."

Presented by the Amherst College Entertainment Committee, the concert is open to the public. Tickets, at $2, may be purchased at the door.

By SYDNEY OMARR

In purchasing gifts for Capricorn, be aware of labels, of quality, durabi , and guarantees. Capricorn appreciates a gift that can be used, that has staying power. Stocks and bonds would be ideal so would practical clothing, accessories and leather bound books. Socks and hosiery also would please and so would sweaters. Check or gift certificate could solve shopping problems where Capricorn is concerned. Selecting for Capricorn may take time but results should prove worth any inconveniences.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Don't go too far afield. Stick to what is familiar. Check details. Be thorough. Accent is on work, service, basic matters, including health. Leo and Scorpio persons figure prominently.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Emphasis is on change of scenery, a variety of experiences. Stress creativity. Young persons argue, attempt to involve you in dispute. Key is to maintain neutral stance. Gemini, Virgo persons are likely to be in picture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): People are not seeing the real you. Those who refuse to accept you as you are may not have your best interests at heart. Know it and shed superficial relationships. You are due to come face to face with reality.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Hold off on journeys. Don't write letters in anger. Forces are scattered. You need time to perceive situation as it really exists. Study Gemini message. Relatives are confused and trying to get you that way, too.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Acting on impulse now can be costly in financial and emotional areas. Pull back; give logic chance to exercise. Heed one who speaks with authority based on experience. Review facts.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): More persons respond to your efforts. Timing improves. You can be at right place at right time. Key is to get rid of deadwood. One who takes and never gives is not worth additional sacrifices.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Don't build case on conjecture. Rumors do not suffice. Examine evidence in realistic manner. Then you begin making progress. Leo, Aquarius persons are likely to be in picture. Accent versatility.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Following hunch can provide answers. But current procedures could prove costly. Take inventory. Be sure you are going in right direction. One who taught you in past could make reappearance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Maintain aura of glamor. Don't reveal all. Keep something in reserve. Bargaining position improves if you utilize after natives. Avoid the obvious. Expand horizons. Learn lessons and apply knowledge.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Obtain hint from Sagittarius message. Take ring roads rather than obvious path. Gain shown through special study course. Be aware of apparent minor points. Check details. You could make valuable discovery.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emotions fly high nothing appears to happen half way. Mate, partner expounds on financial situation. Be receptive. Don't push or attempt to force views. Change will be beneficial. Go with tide.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Time now is on your side. You can profitably play waiting game. Let others, including mate or partner, take initiative. You do best by observing, planning. Avoid direct confrontations. Be diplomatic.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a natural student, hungry for knowledge, drawn to the arts, drama and interested in medicine. You have recently traveled, evaluated your position and now are ready to settle down and move toward goal. In December, there is reunion with family member.

Fisk Heads Rookie Team

NEW YORK (AP) — Boston's Carlton Fisk and the New York Mets' Jon Matlack head the Major League All-Rookie team announced Sunday.

Fisk, the Red Sox' slugging catcher, was the leading vote-getter with 445 in a poll conducted by Topps Chewing Gum Co., maker of baseball trading cards.

Voting was conducted among major league players, managers and coaches. The Indians placed three men on the 10-member team with five men chosen each from the American and National leagues.

Matlack was picked as left-handed pitcher and Dick Tidrow of the Cleveland Indians was named as the best first-year righthander.

Tom Hutton of the Philadelphia Phillies was selected at first base, Jack Brohamer of Cleveland at second, Dave Roberts of the San Diego Padres at third and Dwain Anderson of the St. Louis Cardinals at shortstop.

Outfielders named were Garry Maddox of the San Francisco Giants, Don Baylor of the Baltimore Orioles and Buddy Bell of Cleveland.

Saturday's Heroes

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dartmouth reigns as Ivy League champion, Yale once again can boast for domination over Harvard and Massachusetts offers proof it can play with the iron. So just who is New England's No. 1 college football team in 1972?

Dartmouth, top-ranked last week's Associated Press poll, rallied from a 14-point deficit to defeat Penn 31-17 and clinch a fourth consecutive Ivy League title Saturday.

The Big Green finished another fine season under Coach Jake Crouthamel with an overall record of 7-1-1. They were 5-1-1 in the league.

Yale, ranked second in New England, spotted Harvard 17 points and then stormed from behind on the running of senior halfback Dick Jauron for an impressive 28-17 triumph. The Elis wound up with a 7-2 record. They trounced Dartmouth, but finished one-half game behind the Big Green in the Ivy League race with a 5-2 conference mark.

Massachusetts, headed for the Boardwalk Bowl against the University of California at Davis on Dec. 9, finished its regular campaign with a fabulous victory over Boston College.

The Minutemen, ranked third in New England, whipped the Eagles 28-7 to hike their record to 8-2. Boston College, ranked fourth last week on the basis of a rugged schedule, suffered its seventh defeat in 10 games, with the traditional New England windup with Holy Cross set for Saturday.

Beating BC

It Was A Lot Of Different Things

By BILL BALLOU

Beating Boston College meant a lot of things to a lot of people right down the line from the Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives to the people who sold hot dogs under the stands. Most of all it was people. It was:

20,000 people, the largest crowd in UMass football history, who despite the normal coldness of a large university shared the thrill of beating a team who for so long had thought that UMass' chief product was cow manure, not good football.

It was Chuck Hamaty roaring down field on a kickoff like a tank in high gear, practically outrunning the football, breaking into the open and then overrunning the ball carrier, picking himself up and chasing the BC man back upfield and missing helping out on the tackle by about a foot.

It was a much-criticized line coming up with the game of their lives to give Pennington all the time he wanted and to spring Paul Metallo loose on sweeps and open up the inside for Dick Cummings.

It was Tom Mullen, a member of that line, standing in the locker room after the game with his face split into the most ridiculous study in contrasts–his eyes pouring out tears and his mouth open with a grin you could stuff a football into.

It was reserve kicker Bill Davidson, standing in the locker room with me and using one of the oldest lines in comedic history. I looked over at him and said, "Christ, Bill, is it noisy in here". "I can't hear you," he replied, "it's too noisy in here." At the time it seemed funny.

It was defensive backfield coach Larry Pasquale hugging Paul Hansen after it was over and saying "Paul.... Paul....Paul", and saying more with those three words than he could have in a 10 page term paper on what it was like to beat BC.

It was head coach Dick MacPherson hollering amidst the din, trying to get everyone's attention. "Wait a minute, men," he kept saying until someone cried out, "Is that supposed to be a pun?" MacPherson realized what he was saying and smiled. There was no such thing as a bad pun in that locker room after that victory.

It was manager Mike Brophy carrying off about 200 pounds worth of benchwarmers while the rest of the university was out on the field celebrating the win. It was unquestionably action above and beyond the call of duty.

It was the team en masse leaving the locker room after the awarding of the game balls to go out and "meet the people". It was probably the most typical thing that this team could do, for this was the season that football came back to this campus. This team, if they did nothing else, made Fall Saturdays fun again.

Giants Win; Pats Lose

Giants Roll it Up

By BOB ESTELLE

The New York Giants set a new team scoring record yesterday by smashing the hapless Philadelphia Eagles 62-10.

The Eagles never had a chance. After receiving the opening kickoff, they were forced to punt. Giant cornerback Pete Athas ran 49 yards to the Eagle 14. The first of ten New York scores came on the very next play. It was a Norm Snead-Bob Tucker pass that got things started.

Moments later, Giant linebacker Pat Hughes recovered an Eagle fumble on the Philadelphia 40. A defensive holding call put the ball at the 35 and, from there, Giant halfback Ron Johnson ran the ball in to make the score 14-0. Keep in mind that all of this happened with less than five minutes into the first quarter.

The Eagles started to move when rookie quarterback John Reaves uncorked a long bomb to Harold Jannon. The play put the ball at the Giant eight yard line. But New York held and the Eagles were forced to settle for a 13 yard field goal by Tom Dempsey.

A fumble recovery by rookie Charlie Crist, playing in place of the injured Spider Lockhart, set up the third Giant score, a four yard pass from Snead to rookie Joe Orduna, which started the second quarter. Seconds later, another rookie, John Mendenhall, recovered another fumble which set up a 25 yard field goal by Pete Gogolak.

The next Giant score came on a six play-57 yard drive which ended with a 29 yard Snead-Tucker touchdown pass.

The Eagles were then able to get one touchdown on the board. It was in the form of a 77 yard pass from Reaves-Jackson. But the Giants put on a 57 yard drive to score yet another TD, a one yard plunge by Ron Johnson. This ended the first half with the score 38-10 in New York's favor.

The third quarter started off rather slowly but a Willie Williams interception set up another Gogolak field goal, this one from the 28.

Giant coach Alex Webster then substituted liberally but the Eagles couldn't even stop the substitutes. An interception by linebacker John Douglas at the end of the third quarter set up a 31 yard touchdown pass from Randy Johnson his second touchdown pass of the day.

Only one more score came, a three yard keeper by Johnson which ended a 73 yard drive. Thus, the final score: New York 62 Philadelphia 10.

Pats Blanked

BALTIMORE (AP) - Marty Domres tossed three touchdown passes, two to Sam Havrilak in the first half, as the Baltimore Colts thrashed the New England Patriots 31-0 Sunday in a National Football League game.

The victory for the resurgent Colts, 4-7 after winning three of their last four, ended a six-game losing streak at home.

Domres, who has a 3-3 record since replacing veteran John Unitas at quarterback, completed 11 of 26 passes for 98 yards and suffered his first interception of the season on Baltimore's first offensive series.

The Colts, in rolling up their second highest point total of the year, scored two touchdowns in less than 90 seconds of play midway through the third quarter.

A fumble recovery by tackle Chuck Hinton set the first drive in motion, with Domres tossing four yards to Tom Mitchell for the scores.

Two plays after the ensuing kickoff, linebacker Mike Curtis grabbed a Jim Plunkett pass and ran 21 yards into the end zone.

Plunkett, who completed 11 of 26 passes for 101 yards, was intercepted three times-increasing his season total to 22.

Rookie Lydell Mitchell, who had carried the ball only twice previously for the Colts, was Baltimore's leading ground gainer with 82 yards on 14 attempts. Don McCauley picked up another 62 on 16 carries.

Rookie Jack Mildren, who played some at safety on defense, made his debut as a Baltimore quarterback with 4:04 remaining and ran one option play from the wishbone offense he directed at Oklahoma.

Wednesday's sports head was Ken Sanders, ex-reliever for half the teams in major league baseball, now with the Phillies.

Skins Beat Pack, 21-16

WASHINGTON (AP)–Billy Kilmer's two touchdown passes lifted Washington to a bruising 21-16 National Football League victory over Green Bay Sunday.

Kilmer's second scoring aerial, a five-yard shot to Charley Taylor, ended a 78-yard, 10-play drive in the fourth quarter to nullify a Packer score that closed Green Bay to within one point at 14-13.

Earlier, the Redskins' quarterback connected with tight end Jerry Smith on a 25-yard TD pass.

Scott Hunter, who was unable to move the Pack, gave way to rookie Jerry Tagge, whose long bombs trickled off the fingertips of would-be receivers.

Green Bay took an early 3-0 lead on Chester Marcol's 51-yard field-goal in the first period. Marcol's first effort, from the 33, was blocked by Washington defensive end Ron McDole.

Kilmer immediately hit Taylor with a nine-yard pass and Charley Harraway, with Green Bay keying on Larry Brown, broke through on a 24-yard romp to the Packers' four.

Three plays later, Brown swept around the left end for two yards and the scor

Mar s 37-yard field-goal on the final play of the first half closed Green Bay to 14-6.

MacArthur Lane's dive into the end-zone from the five narrowed Washington's lead to 14-13. But Kilmer's passes again spelled the difference on the game-winning drive.

Steelers Win, 23-10

PITTSBURGH (AP)–Rookie Franco Harris rushed for 127 yards including a 61-yard jaunt that set up the winning touchdown in the final period Sunday as the Pittsburgh Steelers defeated the Minnesota Vikings 23-10 in a key National Football League game. It was the sixth time in seven games that Harris surpassed the 100-yard mark, and the 230-pound fullback also scored Pittsburgh's first touchdown on a 12-yard run in the opening period.

The winning touchdown, which insured Pittsburgh at least a share of the lead in the American Conference Central Division, came with 7:37 remaining on a one-yard sneak by quarterback Terry Bradshaw.

Bradshaw's run made the score 16-10 and Pittsburgh added another touchdown in the waning minutes of the game. The Vikings, who entered the contest one game behind Green Bay in the National Conference Central Division, had tied the game at 10-10 earlier in the final period on a five-yard touchdown pass from Fran Tarkenton to Stu Voigt.

the field being muddy, but we went down to Bucknell and they did it to us good on a muddy field and we didn't make excuses. We just said they beat us bad."

Take a look at the stats. UMass had 473 total yards, B.C. only 204. Enough? How about the individual battles that were forecasted before the game, but ended up as no contests."

Quarterback Peil Pennington (15 of 26 for 215 yards and two td's) vs. Gary Magangi (11 of 33 for 143 yards and one td). Halfback Paul Metallo (146 yards) vs. Mike Esposito (54 yards). And end Steve Schubert (9 catches for 133 yards and a td) vs. Mel Briggs (3 for 84 yards and one td).

OK? OK.

UMass led after the first half 28-0 and many viewers felt they were watching the wrong game. After halting two early B.C. drives the Minutemen marched for four consecutive touchdowns in a span of 14-odd minutes.

Metallo took off on a 51 yard jaunt to the B.C. 30 on the first play of a drive after holding the Eagles on four downs behind the lead blocking of fullback Dick Cummings. Four plays later Metallo took it in, again behind Cummings (69 yards rushing on the day) but the point after was missed.

In the second quarter the story was all UMass as the Minutemen rolled to 229 yards in total offense and 22 points as B.C. could only manage 9 yards and no points of their own.

A defense of three men down and four linebackers utilizing Rich Cronin as the "rover" along with a tight secondary stymied the Eagles while Pennington and company were able to operate at will behind an offensive line that performed as they never had before.

Pennington drove the Minutemen 58 yards after B.C. was stopped on fourth down, culminating his efforts with a 15 yard strike to Schubert, who had a field day at the expense of an Eagle secondary that couldn't contain him with double and triple teams.

UMass went for two on the conversion. Pennington took the snap and walked unmolested into the endzone. 14-0. There was a strange feeling that seemed to engulf the stadium at this time. Could this...?

Four more downs that went for zilch by the Eagles and one punt later, Metallo had his second touchdown of the game when he followed guard Jim Queeney on a sweep and busted several tackles before outrunning the Eagles on a 73 yard score. It was now 21-0. Could it...?

And just for good measure before the half UMass drove 70 yards on seven plays covering the final 40 on a pass from Pennington to Tim Berra who caught the ball at the B.C. 20, spun away from two Eagle defenders and waltzed the rest of the way. Yes, it could...

UMass was held scoreless in the second half, but B.C. could do only one touchdown better when Marangi, who was consistantly overthrowing Briggs all day, finally hooked up with his flashy receiver for 42 yards at the 13 minute mark of the third quarter.

The Eagles did threaten twice thereafter, once after blocking an Andy Dutkanicz punt (after a poor snap from center) that was recovered on the UMass 12 yard line early in the fourth quarter and again on their very next possession when a hard rush caused a short kick.

But Ed McAleney tipped a Marangi pass that was intercepted by Edwards ending on the first threat and Cronin sacked Marangi twice for 23 yards to negate the second.

And now the Eagles will have to accept an 0-3 fall season with the Minutemen–soccer, cross country and eegad!! football.

PAUL METALLO (44) plunges through a pack of humanity to score his first touchdown in Saturday's 28-7 win over Boston College. Metallo later scored on a 76-yard run. (MDC Photo by Steve Smith)

SPORTS

TEP Campus Grid Champs

Coach Bob Lindsay's powerful TEP football machine has taken the campus touch football championship for the first time since 1965. TEP took all the marbles when they defeated the defending campus champs Theta Chi Marauders, 24-9. The win gave TEP a perfect 9-0 season.

The championship game climaxed an amazing season which saw TEP outscore their opponents by a 260-24 margin.

A big factor in the team's success was the defense led by a front three of Ron Beaurivage, Gary Welterlen (who led the league in quarterback tags), and Joe Gauoni. This paved the way for the TEP secondary to average about four interceptions a game. Rick Scarpignato, Peter Backstrom, Dave Graham, Steve Torelli, and Dan Kelly were the chief thiefs in that secondary.

Steve Crimmin and Paul Torelli were also outstanding in brief defensive appearances and on the specialty teams.

Quarterback Tom McDermott led the league in passing and had several outstanding targets in Ed McMahon, league-leading scorer Kenny Stuart, Bob Warner, Beaurivage, Kelly, and Scarpignato.

McDermott had great protection all season long thanks to blocking backs Glen Campbell and John Griffin, as well as Steve Torelli.

TEP was to have played the champs from New Hampshire, but the game was cancelled because of poor weather.

Every year in football, expectations are high as to what we will do against the Boston College Eagles. Last year it was a long ride back from the Eagles meet as the season ended with a 35-0 demolition. Doubts remained until game time, then for the first time since 1912, it happened. The pigskinners before a near capacity crowd (20,000 plus) put on an unbelievable offensive show in the first round (28-0 at the half) and proceeded to let the defense have some fun. (At one point, BC qb Gary Marangi was sacked twice in a row.) Many of the fans were hoping that the Minutemen could eke out a win, but very few expected a route. It finally happened, the Minutemen emerged from the confusion over their name and took the name change in stride to also become a winner–a team that can beat more than Yankee Conference foes and is fast becoming a New England power. (There were even a few words in the NY Times about the momentous achievement.)

It seemed that throughout my four years here, that Alumni Stadium would never be filled. Saturday, that idea became outdated as the swarms came to town. Most of the seats were filled and for the first time, sections 11 and 20 had the filled look. The main arteries of Amherst were clogged as though the September hordes were returning to classes after the long summer. BC's loss is our gain and winning football has come to UMass.

Once the band was just a musical organization. Now, it has become a vital part of the UMass sports program. The halftime show is meant for the audience, but the rest is meant for the players. The emotion was high Saturday and it was especially evident after the game when the marching band, which is being threatened with extinction due to lack of funding, sounded off in front of the locker room long after the game had ended. The flaming batons once again went twirling through the air in a salute to the Minutemen and the pride of threatened group shown through.

The cheerleaders have changed. In past years, they have been often criticized. In the days of Julius, it seemed that they always put on the same halftime performance. Now, they are going big time. Along with the addition of male cheerleaders, there are some new cheers. Anticipation abounds in the audience as they wait for the words of wisdom which change week by week. More than just saying something different for a change, they are in tune with the band or the band is in tune with them. Either way, the support is there.

At one time there was a hope of a hockey-basketball complex. Talk is cheap without funds and it is being dissipated without any action being taken. The Cage is a nice place to play basketball and it is adequate until the cagers begin winning a few games, but the hockey situation is definitely inadequate. Sharing Orr Rink with Amherst College and the Amherst community does not allow for much practice time, and its being over two miles down the road does not encourage the not-less-than-diehard fan from attending, especially when the thermometer drops to about zero. The idea of a new facility is dying. Rather than a light of hope in the future, it has become a desperate hope at the end of an endless tunnel.

The UMass basketball program is growing, with games against West Virginia, Penn and Syracuse, it has come a long way from the days of Bowdoin and Bates. New England basketball is also growing. Providence last year stunned Southern Cal and now this year will play the perennial number 1 power, UCLA. Add this to the new Civic Center in Providence, it is no longer small-time basketball.

Just when we're getting used to a small squad, there has to be a change. This year hoopsters are taller with the smallest being 6'1, Rick Pitino and with four over 6'6. Last year, the big man was lacking and caused front court problems against the bigger teams. Now, maybe the guards are too big (for the opposing teams).

Once Ara Parashegian, the Notre Dame coach, was thought to be on the list of top coaches. Now, after seeing him in numerous commercials and hearing him attack Bear Bryant for not playing Nebraska, he has retrogressed to being just another human with opinions. After seeing Nebraska lose on Turkey day and Texas walk over Texas A&M, his statement that Alabama chickened out by not accepting a shot at the Cornhuskers does not hold water. Texas, record-wise, now looks like the better team.

Bailey Proposes Court Reforms

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

Famed trial lawyer F. Lee Bailey yesterday said the average citizen would be better off today to be tried in a military court as opposed to a civilian court.

Bailey told 200 people here in the Public Health Auditorium that the odds of getting acquitted in a military court of a crime not committed are 98-99 to 1 compared to the 9 to 1 odds in the civilian system.

The 39-year-old Waltham native said his proposal for reforms in the civilian courts would be one of "more rules that go for truth and less rules for form."

The conviction rate in the military system is higher than that of the civilian system, he said, since the military attempts to screen out innocent persons before they are entwined in the court system.

A detailed "investigation is performed in the military system before any final charges are leveled," he added.

Military jurors, he continued are invariably a "cut above" the average civilian jurors, who are on the most post "middle of the road Agnew types."

According to Bailey, the ability of jurors to question defendants and the witnesses at any state of the trial is a "tremendous and valuable asset in the search for truth."

He added that this procedure brings not only into motion questions that the defense attorney and prosecutor did not think of, but also questions that they would not dare to ask because of a possible negative answer.

The defense attorney also questioned the procedure of the jury system saying that a 75 per cent guilty verdict vote is enough for acquittal in the military while a non-unanimous verdict in the civilian system only results in a hung jury.

"The hung jury is of no use in the system, and economically is a back-breaking experience" for the defendant involved, he said.

The military uses the polygraph and lie detector tests to greater advantage, he continued, in sifting out phony witnesses and innocent suspects.

"I only know of two cases in the military where the defendants passed a polygraph test and were still brought to trial, but both cases contained political overtones," he said.

On the court situation in Massachusetts, Bailey said this state has one of the worse systems in the country.

"If you should commit a homicide in this state," he told the audience, "be prepared to drag the body across the state line in any direction."

Bailey said that while he favored the recent constitutional amendment to retire judges at 70 in Massachusetts, he would rather have liked to see a system that would have appointed judges at 70 on a limited basis depending on their mental and judicial ability.

Asked for his view on capital punishment, Bailey replied that "no one has ever shown that it does any good," but added that he would "only want it if someone did something to me."

He said he is against the idea of grand jury investigations since he considers them "useless" and plus the fact that they are presently being abused by the federal government.

A ROTC spokesman said his sponsoring organization did not publicize the engagement in advance since they felt that the facilities at the Public Health building were not adequate to accommodate the large influx of students that would have been attracted by advance publicity.

Bailey graduated from Boston University Law School and was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar in 1960 and the United State Supreme Court in 1964. He is chairman of the American Trial Lawyers Penal Reform Committee and co-chairman of the American Trial Lawyers Association Criminal Law Section.

F. Lee Bailey, in an appearance on campus yesterday, recommended to those who are about to commit a homicide in the state, to "be prepared to drag the body across the state line in any direction." (MDC Photo by Steve Smith.)

Grad Sen Discusses English Club Funding

By ROBERTA MARTONE

A motion concerning the funding of a new Graduate English Club was the highlight of last night's Graduate Student Senate meeting. Most of the motions on last night's agenda were tabled until next week.

The main purpose of the English Club would be to discuss the professional problems of the teaching Assistant (TA), focussing in their problems with the job market and the problem of the TA morale.

Another purpose of the English Club would be to reunite the English Department which was split because of a political organization formed last year.

The sum requested is $150.00 which would be used primarily for a newsletter and certain colloquies. John Mueller, graduate Senate vice president, who was in favor of the motion said, "I have never seen so many Comparative Liturature students in one place at one time. They can really identify as a group." He said the formation of the English Club would be a good "pilot project".

Others felt that the funding should be done by the English Department itself. The motion was moved to the next meeting.

The next motion of new business concerned whether the treasurer of the Graduate Senate should receive a salary. The treasurer asked for a sum of 25.00 per week on the basis that he spends a lot of time on extra committees.

However, the question was raised as to whether the amount of work warranted the amount of money. Most of the members were adverse to the allocation of a salary on the grounds that all Senate members participate on committees. This motion was moved to the next meeting.

A motion concerning the advertising budget of the Graduate Senate for 1973, was then brought forth. A sum of 600.00 has been requested as compared to last year's 150.00. The money is needed primarily for publicity and a newsletter. Mike Zisser, of the Graduate Senate said, "The money would increase the viability of the Senate as a student functional body. It might make us more real on the outside of this room, which apparently, we are not."

Under old business, the problem of the image of the graduate student as part of the University was again discussed. It was decided that the best move would be a lobbying effort in Boston on the part of the local Congressmen.

Final discussion last night centered on the organization of a Graduate Senate party. Because of lack of agreement on how to spend the funds, the motion was tabled.

WMPIRG Continues Legal Fight Vs. Western Mass. Electric

By MDC STAFF

(Boston) — A transfer of judges was the only new development coming yesterday in the legal battles between the Western Mass Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) and the Western Mass Electric Company (WMECO).

No decision came on the WMECO motion to have the WMPIRG case against the Department of Public Utilities (DPU) and WMECO dismissed from Federal District Court as the whole matter was passed from Judge Garrity to newly appointed Judge Freeman.

Freeman did indicate yesterday that he would try to role on WMECO's point of dismissal sometime before the end of the week, according to WMPIRG lawyer Ronald Bogard.

The WMECO motion of dismissal followed on WMPIRG's suit against the DPU and WMECO filed October 13th. The WMPIRG suit asks the federal government to place an injunction on the $5.7 million dollar rate increase requested by WMECO.

WMPIRG claims that Massachusetts consumers are not being represented in current DPU hearings on the rate increase, which are presently going on in Boston. They hope the Federal Court will recognize that "property rights" of consumers are being violated by virtue of the fact that they are not being represented in the hearings.

Australian Women Organize

SYDNEY, Australia--Australian women, long considered a passive element in the largely male-oriented political scene here, have emerged suddenly as an organized and formidable factor in the campaigning for the elections to the House of Representatives next Saturday.

Candidates throughout the country have gone through the new experience of being expertly questioned on their attitudes toward social causes by teams from a new political group called the Women's Electoral Lobby, or WEL.

The questions cover sensitive topics ranging from equal pay to abortion.

Veteran Cabinet officers in Prime Minister William McMahon's Government, now fighting for its life against a strong challenge by the Labor party led by Gough Whitlam, have appeared "very frightened" under the questioning, according to Mrs. Katie Richmond, a founder of WEL and a sociologist at La Trobe University in Melbourne.

Mr. McMahon has sought to appease the women with a pledge to set up a royal commission on the status of women if his Government is kept in office. The gesture made a minimal impression.

"Royal commissions have never meant much in Australia," Mrs. Richmond said in a telephone interview.

Political analysts say that women, who constitute slightly more than 50 per cent of the Australian electorate, could tip the balance in a close election. This also appears to be the view of WEL, which seems in favor of Mr. McMahon's opponent, Mr. Whitlam.

In the quiz devised by the women's group, Mr. McMahon scored only one point out of a possible 40, against 33 for the Labor party leader.

Mrs. Richmond said Mr. McMahon lost points by saying "see my secretary" in response to many questions. She said those answers were scored as zero.

Labor candidates had an advantage, she said, since many of the answers were part of the Opposition party's platform.

At least 85 per cent of the 535 candidates have taken the test, according to the women's group. Their ratings have been widely distributed in their constituencies as a guide to women voters.

The project was conceived, according to leaders of the organization, when an article on rating candidates in the American feminist magazine Ms. attracted the attention of a leader of women's causes in Melbourne, Mrs. Beatrice Faust, who passed it on to women in the Melbourne academic community.

The organization has grown to include 2,000 members in all six state capitals and such provincial towns as Alice Springs, in sun-baked central Australia, and Darwin, a seaport on the north coast.

Not all Australians are sold on the strength of the feminist movement in a society that has been traditionally male-dominated since its 18th century beginning as a British penal colony.

Rep. Craven Receiving Double Salary

BOSTON (AP)--State Rep. James J. Craven of Boston, an influential member of the House Ways and Means Committee, has been accruing the full benefits and much of the salary of a top official in the Department of Corporations and Taxation for a number of years while also drawing full pay as a legislator.

Craven goes on the department's payroll after the legislature adjourns each year, according to reports at the state comptroller's office. The same records show that he currently is making $344.50 per week as the department's first assistant chief of bureau.

Records at the state treasurer's office showed that the Democrat from Boston's Jamaica Plain section received full compensation--$11,400--as a legislator during the past session.

According to the records, Craven began his most recent annual leave from the Department Jan. 5 and returned to the department's payroll July 9, just after the legislature prorogued.

Craven first served in the House during the 1949-1950 session and has served continuously since 1957. He was reelected again this year.

He first began employment in the Taxation Department in 1950, according to the records, but details of his employment dated back only to 1959. At that time he was an assistant chief of bureau and received a weekly salary of $164.75.

The records showed that Craven became the first assistant chief of bureau in 1966. The promotion put him a salary grade ahead of the other assistants.

A spokesman at the department, who asked not to be identified, said that although Craven spends most of each year as a member of the legislature, he is entitled to four weeks vacation and about 15 days sick leave annually whenever he returns to the payroll.

Craven already has taken his vacation time this year, the spokesman said, and he is now taking sick time.

The representative, the spokesman said, has been on sick leave "for a considerable time," and a doctor's excuse was reported to be on file.

The doctor's note was not made available to The Associated Press Monday, but a spokesman in the House Ways and Means office said Craven had been in that office Monday morning and he had been in last week.

The Taxation Department spokesman said Craven generally takes most of the vacation and sick time he has accrued after he returns to the payroll each year. This, he said, applies even if the legislature meets most of the year.

Craven could not be reached for comment Monday.

There also is some apparent confusion as to what Craven does for the department.

State Tax Commissioner Nicholas Metaxas said each type of tax imposed by the state is assigned to a department, or bureau, and there are bureaus covering such things as personnel and planning. There are 16 bureaus in all, he said, and each has a bureau chief and one or more assistant bureau chiefs.

Craven, Metaxas said, works in the Bureau of Administrative Services, which is responsible for personnel, and is involved in "whatever work they have to assign to him."

The chief of that bureau, however, said Craven's position is located in the Bureau of Planning and Research, although he was assigned to the administrative services office last year.

Third World To Hear Bromery Speech

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery will be addressing the Third World Community tomorrow. It will be held during the Third World Alliance meeting, at the School of Business Administration in auditorium #120 at 8:00 P.M. sharp.

This is an extremely important meeting. It will be the first time in the History of this University that a Black Chancellor will be addressing the Third World Community.

Every brother and sister on this campus should compel each other out of a sense of responsibility, to attend this meeting.

Profs. Appeal Dismissal

By JIM DEMPSEY

In a situation which began developing last semester it has recently come to the attention of several students enrolled in Italian courses that four professors from the Italian Department would not be returning to teach next September.

The curiosity of the students was aroused when they asked their professors what courses they would be teaching in the fall. It was then discovered that some professors' contracts were being terminated at the end of this academic year.

The four Italian professors who stand to lose their jobs are each currently working their ways through procedural channels in hopes that they will be reinstated.

They have requested anonymity because they felt it would be damaging to their cases to have their names publicized while they are going through the procedural channels.

Hoping to have the situation clarified and the reasons for the pending dismissals brought out, the students have called a meeting for tonight.

Associate Provost Zina Tillona and Dean Jeremiah Allen of the College of Arts and Sciences have been invited to attend the meeting with the hope that they may shed some light on the situation for the students.

Tillona and Allen have been asked to attend because they figure prominently in the procedural process the professors are now pursuing to have their dismissal decisions overturned.

There are three main channels through which such cases must travel for review.

The first level is the Department Personnel Committee. In the combined French-Italian Department this committee is made up of seven elected members, including six professors and one teaching assistant.

On this first level a case is reviewed mostly on the basis of its substance -- that is, the professor's teaching performance, his scholarship record and his service to his department and the University.

Beyond the Department Personnel Committee level, most cases are reviewed only when there has been a procedural error or a violation of due process. This is called the grievance process.

This process begins at Dean Allen's level. His advisory committee reviews each case and presents their recommendation to Dean Allen. He in turn issues his decision on the matter. Allen must present his recommendation to the department and to the professor involved before any action can be taken.

Should the individual still be displeased with the decision he can bring his case to the Provost's office. This is usually the final step in the process. Cases seldom continue on to the next level of the Chancellor's office.

Loyalty Oath Hearing Today

By MARK VOGLER

A court hearing will be held this morning in Middlesex County Superior Court to determine further action to be taken on a class action suit filed two weeks ago by three University of Massachusetts-Boston faculty members in opposition to the state's loyalty oath.

The group, represented by Att. Stephen Oleskey, was granted a temporary restraining order November 15 by Judge John W. Coddaire.

The pending order restrains the university personnel offices of all three campuses from dismissing anyone employed by the university between October 29, 1969 and September 21, 1972 who refused to take the oath.

September 21 was the date that a letter was addressed from the employing agencies of the university campuses to all university employees (faculty, staff, and students employed by the university) informing them of the Nov. 15 deadline for signing the oath and the possible consequences for failure to do so.

The loyalty oath had been under a three-year period of ajudication until April 18 of this year when the Supreme Court ruled that the law requiring any state employee to sign a loyalty oath was constitutional.

The Supreme Court's decision arose from a case which Att. Oleskey had lost before the higher court. Oleskey had won the case in the lower courts when an employee of a state hospital filed a grievance against the employees oath. However, the case was appealed by the state, and subsequently led to a reversal.

--There is a strong indication that the two UMass cases and the one involving the Berkshire plaintiffs in opposition to the oath will be combined and heard in the Middlesex court.

--No employees left unprotected by the recent class action suit have been officially terminated, but one professor at the Boston campus was denied employment.

--UMass President Robert Wood has looked unfavorably upon the recent court actions taken by university opponents to the loyalty oath. Wood said that issue brought to court would solve nothing.

--The possibility that a foreign student employee will file a class action suit on behalf of all foreign nationals is under close scrutiny. This has added another dimension to the issue at hand.

Att. Oleskey and Att. William A. Norris of Cummington--the legal counsel for the Berkshire and UMass-Amherst groups, have both agreed of the likelihood of the merging of the three separate cases into one to be heard in the Middlesex court.

Oleskey made no comment as to his immediate reactions to this possibility, but Norris had earlier expressed disapproval of the move.

"I might look into some way of contesting it. The cases should be kept separate to insure equal representation for all three groups," Norris said.

Kenneth Ford, a UMass physics professor and a spokesman for the three plaintiffs in Boston, reported that one professor had recently been barred from employment for failure to sign the oath. Ford noted that although the personnel offices of the university have not cracked down on those vulnerable to dismissal, the oath is being administered strictly on employees currently seeking employment.

Ford's refusal to sign the oath is based on a matter of conscience and belief. According to Ford, "I see it as a symbol of repression, a desire to encourage blind allegiance and discourage dissent."

Ford added that he had sent a letter to President Wood in October stating that he would not sign the oath and that if he were dismissed, he would consider it as having been fired.

President Wood said the question of the loyalty oath could not be resolved by court injunctions. He said he believed the requirement did not prohibit academic freedom and he called the recent court action "a Don Quixote effort by faculty members."

John K. Jessup, Foreign Student Advisor at the Amherst campus, said the foreign student who is considering a class action suit against the oath on behalf of all foreign nationals, has consulted a lawyer from a Boston legal firm.

Jessup said that the lawyer is checking to see whether the foreign student is adequately covered. If legal action is necessitated for the protection of foreign nationals, the suit could be added to the case of the Boston three, or it could be pursued on its own merits.

Jessup added that there was a chance of the American Civil Liberties Union entering the case from the foreign national angle.

Elsewhere, in regard to the Loyalty Oath Issue, several other developments have occurred:

Motive For Break Unknown To RSO Officials, Security

By BOB SCHEIER

RSO (Recognized Student Organization) officials and the UMass Security Dept. say they are still in the dark about the motive behind this weekend's break into the RSO office in the basement of the Campus Center.

Det. Sgt. Frank Nazzei of the Security Dept. said the fingerprints taken at the site of the break-in are being sent to the FBI in Washington for identification.

He said the department had not received any identification of the prints yet and that he had no idea when they would be received.

RSO supervisor Bud Demers said he knew of one piece of equipment which may have been stolen, but it may have been borrowed by someone with a right to do so over the weekend.

Demers said he was trying to get in touch with that person.

He declined to specify what the equipment was, and said nothing else had been discovered missing.

A report of the break-in, which was made through roof tiles into Demer's office, was estimated by a building supervisor to have taken place between Saturday afternoon and Sunday afternoon.

Romney To Leave HUD

WASHINGTON (AP)--Secretary George Romney said yesterday he will leave the Department of Housing and Urban Development to create a concerned citizens' coalition because of what he called the limitations in the nation's political process.

Romney, 56-year-old former Michigan governor and head of American Motors, told a news conference that the greatest need in America "is to strengthen its voluntary and private aspects including our political process."

He said the American public must be informed on the real political issues which he described as those concerned with "life and death." He said the real issues were not discussed during President Nixon's successful race for re-election because both the President and his Democratic challenger Sen. George S. McGovern, feared it would cost them votes to do so.

Romney said the basic function of the political parties and their candidates is to compete for the responsibility to govern which means that they must win elections.

"To do this they tend to avoid specific positions concerning, and discussion of, life-and-death issues in their formative and controversial stage for fear of offending uninformed voters and thus losing votes," he said in his letter of resignation to President Nixon.

Romney said he did not discuss the issues in depth as surrogate for President Nixon "because in this election, you didn't have to."

Romney's resignation was expected since he said last August he wanted to leave and remained at Nixon's request.

Hurt by bomb - a young girl injured by bomb blast which ripped through the foyer of late-night Dublin movie house is brought out of the theatre. The blast, caused by a mine, injured at least 30 film-goers. Police blamed the Irish Republican Army, whose alleged Chief Sean Macstiofain was jailed by a Dublin court only hours before. (AP)

Lynch To Curb IRA

DUBLIN (AP)–Prime Minister Jack Lynch's government sought new emergency powers Monday to end the bomb and bullet terror campaign of the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

Then the administration ordered a major security clamp-down and braced for a violent challenge for IRA extremists.

Police leaves were canceled and reserve forces were ordered out to contain possible trouble in the capital. Special guards were mounted on Cabinet ministers and around government buildings.

Authorities also acted swiftly to remove from the capital one source of possible confrontation between the IRA and government security forces.

Sean MacStiofain, reputed chief of staff of the IRA guerrillas, was whisked by helicopter from a Dublin hospital to an Irish army hospital at Curragh under a heavy guard.

MacStiofain, serving a six month sentence for being an IRA member, has been on a hunger strike to demand his release.

He was treated at Dublin's Mather Hospital. The hospital has virtually been under siege by hundreds of people since Sunday, when an IRA band made a vain attempt to help MacStiofain escape. His removal from the capital was expected to ease the security task in Dublin.

A new justice bill to be debated in the Dail, the Irish parliament, Wednesday, would give Irish police and special courts vastly increased powers to jail suspected IRA terrorists.

Instead of the government having to prove a man was an IRA member, the new laws would shift the onus onto the suspect to prove that he was not.

No longer would the government have to get evidence of illegal possession of firearms, produce incriminating documents, witnesses or other proof of a suspect's IRA affiliation.

Instead a special court would accept as evidence the unsupported statement of a police superintendent that a man belongs to the IRA.

If the new justice bill is passed and rigorously applied it could be more important than the arrest of MacStiofain in defeating the IRA in both parts of Ireland.

Nixon, Kissinger Confer

CAMP DAVID, Md. (AP)-President Nixon conferred twice yesterday with Henry A. Kissinger on Vietnam peace talks but the Camp David White House gave no clue as to what points were discussed.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler limited himself to cautioning reporters anew against drawing pessimistic conclusions from the current recess in the Paris talks.

Kissinger, Nixon's assistant for national security affairs, will fly back to Paris Sunday to renew talks the next day with Hanoi negotiator Le Duc Tho.

Nixon has held at least four meetings with Kissinger since the negotiator returned from the French capital Saturday night. Ziegler said Nixon will meet Wednesday with Nguyen Phu Duc, who is bound here from Saigon as a special representative of South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu.

The South Vietnamese had sought the meeting and the White House had indicated from the outset that there would be consultations with the Saigon government following Kissinger's most recent Paris trip.

Ziegler said Nixon will meet Duc either at Camp David or the White House.

In Saigon, South Vietnamese sources reported that the Thieu government has demanded that North Vietnam negotiate directly with it before any breakthrough can be made at the Paris talks.

Hoang Duc Nha, Thieu's closest adviser, will head a team of South Vietnamese negotiators dealing with Kissinger when the talks resume, the sources said.

If North Vietnam agrees, the sources added, Nha would be available to join the secret talks directly.

U.S. Backs Conference Plea

HELSINKI Finland (AP) - The United States and its West European allies threw their weight Monday behind a plea from the Romanian government that the Soviet Union agree to disregard military alliances in preparing a 34 nation conference on security and cooperation in Europe.

The Soviets say the statement is unnecessary. There could be a backlash if they insist.

Sharp differences came to the fore despite the cordial diplomatic atmosphere. The Western powers-and Romania-would like to see the main conference end with a strong statement that would make the Soviets think more than twice about military operations against their allies, like that of 1968 in Czechoslovakia.

The scene of Monday's differences was the student meeting hall called Dipoli, set in the pine and birch woods of the outskirts of Helsinki.

U.S. sources said Val Peterson, head of the delegation, announced he could support Valentin Lipatti, who speaks for the Romanians. Lipatti asked Friday that the rules of procedure pledge all countries to take part on a basis of equality and independent, regardless of military alliances. Romania belongs to the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact, but likes to act on its own.

Delegates reported additional backing for Romania from France, Britain, the Netherlands, Greece, Turkey, Spain, Ireland and Switzerland. Yugoslavia, another maverick Communist country was also said to be sympathetic.

Hungary, Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria supported the Soviet Ambassador Viktor Maltsev said a reference to military alliances would have no legal value-that an alliance does not limit a country's independence.

Arms At Airport Traced To Arabs

ROME (AP) — Four attache cases filled with arms found in the departure lounge of Rome's Fiumicino airport have been traced to four Arabs who flew on to Cairo, police sources said Monday night.

The Arabs arrived Saturday from Tripoli, the Libyan capital, and flew to Cairo that night, the sources said.

A police spokesman said each Arab had a ticket for a different European location but exchanged them at the airport here.

The sources, elaborating on the official statement, said the tickets were for flights from Rome to Madrid, Paris, London and Belgrade, Yugoslavia. The tickets were bought in Tripoli on Nov. 18.

Each attache case contained a loaded machine gun, loaded pistol, two hand grenades and a fire bomb.

Police theorized that the owners abandoned them rather than go through a metal detector and other anti-hijacking security measures before boarding their flights.

Police first noticed the abandoned attache cases around midnight. They called in bomb experts who opened the cases two hours later.

Cambridge Jail Death Inquest Ends

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)–The inquest into the death of Lawrence Largey, 17, of Cambridge ended Monday in East Cambridge District Court after 12 days of closed door hearings. Largey died in a Cambridge police cell after being arrested for breaking a window.

During the hearing Judge Morris N. Gould said he would issue a report soon. He heard testimony from a Boston University law professor who conducted a private inquiry into the death of the youth.

Voiceprints To Be Used As Evidence

BOSTON (AP)–Voiceprints–spectographic impressions of the recorded voice–were taken for the first time Monday in a Massachusetts court.

Judge James C. Roy ruled Nov. 13 in Suffolk Superior Court, requiring seven of eight persons on trial on gambling charges to have their voices recorded to be used as voiceprints.

U.S. Trade Deficit Narrows

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's trade deficit, a key barometer of U.S. competitiveness abroad, narrowed visibly in October, the Commerce Department reported Monday.

The department said that the value of goods imported into the United States exceeded the value of American exports to other countries in october by $415 million, down from the September deficit of $513.2 million.

Although it was the 13th consecutive monthly deficit in the nation's trade accounts, the amount was the smallest since January, when it was $318.8 million.

A Commerce Department analyst, Asst. Secretary Harold C. Passer, said in a statement that the nation has reversed the trend toward larger trade deficits.

The trade deficit adds to pressure on the dollar overseas and makes it difficult for the United States to correct its balance of payments problems. Organized labor has said also it is contributing to a loss of jobs. Such a deficit is not necessarily bad for consumers who have a wider choice of merchandise.

Passer said that the big currency changes put into effect last december are beginning to restrain foreign imports into the United States and stimulating American exports.

S. Viets Expand Front In Quang Tri Fighting

SAIGON (AP)-South Vietnamese paratroopers claimed victory Monday in fighting to expand their front in the northernmost province of Quang Tri.

The airborne troops reported killing 31 enemy with the help of artillery and air strikes in the third straight day of sharp action in foothills southwest of Quang Tri, the provincial capital. Government losses were put at one man killed, seven wounded.

The U.S. Command reported six B52 heavy bomber strikes were aimed at enemy concentrations in the battle area eight miles southwest of Quang Tri. It said Navy jets destroyed a truck and set off six secondary explosions at an enemy truck park two miles closer to Quang Tri.

Government forces in the far north have been making slow, steady progress in retaking territory lost in a matter of days last spring.

However, driving the North Vietnamese back to the DMZ in the lowlands still would leave a long bloody fight ahead to root out North Vietnamese forces from the mountainous western half of the province.

The North Vietnamese had long contested and controlled large areas of the mountain sector even before their invasion March 30 across the DMZ.

The Saigon government insists that any cease-fire agreement must provide for North Vietnamese withdrawal and re-establishment of the DMZ at the 17th Parallel.

While peace talks remained stalled over that issue, U.S. B52s flew more than 40 strikes against war supply buildups in the DMZ and in the southern panhandle of North Vietnam.

Most of the raids were concentrated along the road that leads from North Vietnam through the Bathelemy Pass into the Plain of Jars in Laos. U.S. officials said Hanoi has launched a massive resupply effort for its troops in their annual dry season offensive on the plain.

U.S. Command spokesmen in Saigon said American troop strength in South Vietnam dropped to 28,000 as of last Thursday and now is near the Dec. 1 target of 27,000. There has been no official word on any further troop cuts.

Reports on Bormann Checked

BUENOS AIRES (AP) - The federal police said Monday they are checking published reports that Martin Bormann is living secretly on an Argentine ranch.

The spokesman added that police doubt the report is true. Spokesmen for Argentina's military government, the Argentine army intelligence service, and the West German Embassy declined comment.

Bormann, was one of Adolf Hitler's closest advisers in World War II, was last seen in Berlin in the final days of the war. Some say he was killed in the fighting, others that he died a prisoner in Russia and others that he escaped to South America. If alive, Bormann would be 72.

Nearly every six months published reports surface that Bormann has been found in Argentina or another South American country. The latest appeared in the Daily Express of London.

Argentine newspapers treated the story on Monday as if they had doubts about its accuracy, printing brief dispatches quoting from the Daily Express story.

The account says Bormann entered Argentina Oct. 5 as Ricardo Bauer and went to the 12,000-acre Rancho Grande in northern Argentina, owned by Arndt von Bohlen-Halbach of the West German Krupp family.

The Rancho Grande office in Buenos Aires said Mrs. Waltraut Burghardt purchased majority ownership of the ranch in 1967 from Krupp. Mrs. Burghardt is a sister of the late Alfried Krupp.

A spokesman said she and her husband, are visiting West Germany, and their palatial home at Rancho Grande is closed. The spokesman added that the Daily Express story is wrong.

Adm. Links Navy Racial Strife To Lack Of Manpower

HARTFORD (AP) - Recent racial flareups aboard Navy ships might have been prevented if the Navy had additional manpower, a top naval official said Monday.

Rear Adm. Thomas J. Bigley, special assistant to the chief of naval operations, told a Hartford news conference that the racial incidents involved frustrated, overworked sailors on long-term sea duty.

"These kids are overworked and they're tired," Bigley said. He said those participating in disturbances on the Kitty Hawk and the Constellation had been subjected to 18-hour works days in support of Vietnam combat.

If additional personnel were available, Bigley said, crewmen could be rotated more frequently in and out of pressured sea assignments.

He suggested a "one in three' rotation system, under which sailors would serve six months at sea and then rotate to other assignments for at least a year before going back on sea duty.

Nixon To Announce Changes

CAMP DAVID, Md. (AP)-President Nixon, promising to begin announcements of sweeping Cabinet changes today, ruled out yesterday a new federal job for his former Treasury secretary, Democrat John B. Connally.

Talking to a dozen newsmen at his Camp David retreat, Nixon disclosed also that Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird will leave government service. Laird had made no secret of his plans to vacate his Pentagon post but there had been rumors he was in line for some other high position.

Nixon said that as he works to reorganize the federal bureaucracy, the biggest personnel cuts will come in the White House staff.

Saying that his personal entourage should set an example, he said the White House establishment "has grown like Topsy."

The chief executive said that many of the personnel cuts in the White House will be achieved by assigning what had been White House functions to members of the Cabinet.

This seemed a broad suggestion that his reorganization program envisions a new organizational chart that would tie Cabinet members more directly to the presidential office.

Nixon, who did not permit newsmen to question him, volunteered that neither Connally nor Republican Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York will be joining his second-term administration.

He said each has told him he would prefer "not to take a permanent job at this time." He said Connally and Rockefeller would be available for temporary assignments.

Becoming philosophical, Nixon said that in a second term, "the tendency is for an administration to run out of steam and coast-generally downhill."

He said that, historically, the tendency in thin this direction is more pronounced after a president wins re-election by a landslide.

Nixon declared that he is determined to counter complacency, saying he does not regard his own landslide win of Nov. 7 as an endorsement of the status quo.

He said he will seek progressive change domestically as well as in international affairs.

Nixon, who has spent much of his time at Marine-guarded Camp David since Nov. 7, told reporters that whenever big decisions are pending he will use the mountaintop retreat with increasing frequency in the next four years.

He said:

"I find...that getting away from the White House, from the Oval office... gives a sense of perspective."

In discussing personnel changes, Nixon disclosed that Caspar Weinberger, director of the Office of Management and Budget, will be leaving that post. However, he said Weinberger will get another top position.

The President said he hopes to make all announcements of major personnel changes by Dec. 15.

Calley Appeals For Clemency

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP)-Lt. William L. Calley, Jr., sentenced to 20 years imprisonment for the deaths of 22 Vietnamese civilians at My Lai, appealed for clemency Monday in a private meeting in his apartment with an Army Clemency and Parole Board panel.

The three officers-a lieutenant colonel and two captains from the Army disciplinary barracks at Ft. Leavenworth, Kan.-walked rapidly from Calley's apartment after their meeting of nearly two hours with the rusty-haired infantry lieutenant.

Newsmen were given no chance to ask questions.

As the officers left, a face could be seen peering out through the blinds in Calley's living room window. Calley's apartment is in a one-story building, part of a complex housing military families. His front door was heavily curtained.

George W. Latimer, Calley's chief civilian lawyer, said earlier in a telephone interview from his Salt Lake City home that Calley was to be interviewed and asked questions.

"He can state, anything he wants," Latimer said before the hearing. "I've advised him to be prepared to make the best showing he can."

"Surely he will make a plea," said the lawyer.

Under ordinary circumstances, a Clemency and Parole Board panel would have considered parole for Calley after one-third of his 20-year sentence had been served. The hearings generally are held at Ft. Leavenworth where, if he were not under house arrest, Calley would be serving his sentence.

An Army spokesman said "Calley is not in prison and normal provisions don't apply to him."

Calley, a former platoon leader, was sentenced March 31, 1971, to life imprisonment for the murders of 22 Vietnamese civilians killed during a combat sweep through My Lai on March 16, 1968. The life term later was reduced to 20 years at the first level of the automatic review process.

President Nixon personally ordered Calley released from the stockade and placed under house arrest the day after the lieutenant was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment. Nixon also said he would review the final disposition after the Army's legal procedures are over.

Calley is the only soldier convicted of any criminal responsibility for the My Lai deaths. Of 25 men once charged, six stood trial and five were acquitted. Those acquitted included Capt. Ernest Medina, who commanded the company in which Calley was an officer.

Calley's confinement officers have called him a "model prisoner."

Sidky Says Egypt Ready For War

(AP)-Egypt's premier said on Monday the nation is ready for war with Israel and has provided its army with all its needs.

Addressing the People's Assembly in Cairo, Aziz Sidky said: "The government has given the armed forces priority over all other sectors in the budget allocations."

Making his second policy statement since his appointment as premier last January, Sidky reiterated Egypt's position of rejecting any partial settlement in the Middle East, and stressed that Egypt will not give up a single inch of the lands occupied by Israel in the 1967 war.

In New York, Foreign Minister Mohammed Hassan el Zayyat arrived at the United Nations for the Middle East debate in the U.N. General Assembly.

The Egyptian diplomat met for more than an hour with Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim. Zayyat described the 65-minute talk as a "courtesy call."

The foreign minister told a reporter he expects to meet with Gunnar V. Jarring, special U.N. envoy for the Middle East, while in New York. Zayyat is scheduled to address the General Assembly on Wednesday, the opening day of the Middle East debate.

King Hussein of Jordan, in an interview with a Lebanese newspaper, confirmed reports of an unsuccessful coup attempt, and charged the Libyan leader, Muammar Kadafi; Palestinian guerrilla chief Yasir Arafat, and one of Aragat's top aides of organizing the plot.

Farr Jailed In Manson Case

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Newsman William Farr was jailed for the second time in two weeks Monday after six Charles Manson trial attorneys swore they were not the source of information for a story Farr wrote.

The newsman refused to reveal his source for the story, as the judge had ordered. He stated that although the six attorneys said under oath that they were releasing him from a promise not to talk, two of them had told him privately to keep quiet.

Farr, 37, was whisked away to jail after a heated 3-1/2-hour court session in which the judge accused him of seeking martyrdom.

In a last statement before he was ordered back to jail, Farr told the judge he considered such a comment "a personal slur" and stressed that his refusal "remains a matter of personal conscience and professional ethics."

He told the judge, "This is based on a disagreement on legal matters between you and me." Judge Charles Older, who has pursued the Farr case for nearly two years, became angered when Farr refused 16 times under oath to answer any questions about his source for a story on the Manson murder trial.

"It appears to the court at this time that Mr. Farr has a strong desire to become a martyr and that he wants to go to jail," the judge said.

"Either that or...you have made some kind of an under the table deal with these persons..."

Both Farr and his attorney objected strenuously before an indefinite term for contempt of court was imposed.

Before Farr's questioning, the six defense prosecution attorneys who participated in the trial of Charles Manson and three women codefendants testified that none of them was the source of a story Farr wrote about a secret statement of a prospective witness. The story, written while Farr was a reporter for the Los Angeles Herald Examiner, told of Manson clan plans to kill Hollywood celebrities.

The judge refused to grant a defense request for a stay of sentence until Tuesday morning, and ordered Farr immediately to jail. Farr's attorney, Mark Hurwitz, indicated he would ask the California Supreme Court, which currently has a Farr appeal before it, to release Farr from jail.

Farr was first jailed Nov. 16 for 3-1/2 hours but was released while the 2nd District Court of Appeal considered a new appeal filed by his attorney. Three days earlier, the U.S. Supreme Court had declined to hear Farr's appeal of the contempt conviction.

Cities' League Opens Meeting

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (AP) — In a surprise move, a National League of Cities committee voted Monday to take the nation's largest group of urban officials out of the business of lobbying for state or federal gun control legislation of any kind.

The action came as the league, representing 15,000 cities, opened its four-day annual meeting here with consideration in committees of the NLC's 100-page booklet of national policy decisions.

The booklet serves as the lobbying guideline of the league's Washington staff.

In another action, a committee criticized the Nixon administration for refusing to spend some urban aid money voted by Congress. The practice of not spending the money is known as impoundment and is defended by the administration as necessary to its fight against inflation.

A third committee added clearer language to the league's call for using some federal highway trust fund money on mass transit in cities. The money, $5 billion a year from a 4-cent tax on every gallon of gasoline and several taxes, is now reserved for building highways.

The public safety committee deleted language added to the policy booklet for the first time last year, which advocated federal laws prohibiting interstate sale of all firearms to individuals and mandating a minimum 10-year sentence for the use of a firearm in any federal, state or local crime.

The language had been a watered-down version of a gun-control resolution offered last year by Detroit Mayor Roman Gribbs, a former sheriff and the man most likely to be chosen the league's next president at this meeting.

Gribbs was chairing the public safety committee when the vote was taken.

The committee also voted down a substitute resolution calling for national legislation against manufacture, importation, sale and private possession of handguns except for use by law enforcement personnel, military and sportsmen's clubs, and a national handgun registration law.

Trains To Be 100% Safe

LONDON (AP)–Space travel has brought nearer the day when it will be 100 per cent safe to speed by rail over any distance in any weather, Jane's World Railways says.

Henry Sampson, editor, in a foreword to the 590-page annual survey of world rail operations and equipment, wrote: "Unlike aircraft and road vehicles which have to be individually controlled as to speed and direction, allowing a possibility of collision due to human error, railways have the unique advantage that, as lateral movement is governed by the rails, control needs to be exercised in one direction only, the linear, to ensure complete securi[illegible]ather...

"Searching [illegible]ve examination would surely show that a highly automated [illegible]ized rail system could bring cumulative benefits to the wh[illegible]unity in increased speed, capacity and safety, with economi[illegible]ability, with minimal environmental disturbance and pollution.

"Such a system should be capable of accomplishment in the not too distant future by a planned program of investment and adjustment..."

Sampson said the success of the safety-in-space equipment would assure "the comparatively inexpensive application to one-dimension rail travel...between control centers."

He contended that if the world allows its railroads to decay until they are extinct in the face of road and air competition, "an almost identical form of guided transport--another railway, in fact," would have to be built.

"There would be a marked difference between the present railways and one reborn a decade hence," he added.

Pipeline Workers Get Shaft

MOSCOW (AP) — The state set aside a tract of land in the mountains of sun-kissed Soviet Georgia where pipeline workers could build modest weekend cottages, grow a few vegetables and relax.

Before long the cooperative tract was swarming with imposters who had never been near a pipeline and 989 of the cooperative's 1,499 members "had built or were building no small cottages but huge mansions," Pravda reported Monday.

The biggest mansion of all was occupied by K. Montselidze, chief of the repair trust for the Transcaucasian Gas Pipeline.

According to Pravda, the house was "of fantastic dimensions and beauty". It had a large marble terrace, private use of a forest area and was surrounded by a high wall.

"Numerous other workers of the trust followed the example of their chief," Pravda continued.

Many people got into the cooperative by bribing officials to get them jobs with the gas line trust and then quit the jobs after getting a building plot.

The private building was done by commandeered labor brigades with "the most modern materials and equipment" diverted from state projects.

After an exhaustive investigation, Pravda said, Montselidze and seven other mansion builders were dismissed from their prestigious jobs and expelled from the Communist party.

Pravda's exposure of the mansion builders was the latest of a series of critical press reports on Georgia that have coincided with widespread political shakeups in the Caucasian republic, where illicit free enterprise is a way of life.

The Central Committee of the national party looked into the situation early this year and in March issued a scathing decree calling for reform and accusing Georgia of being a hotbed of embezzlement, profiteering, bribery and idleness.

Dozens of persons have accumulated large fortunes there.

Canada May Fill U.S. Energy Needs

NEW YORK (AP) — The premier of Nova Scotia said Monday Canada could play a key role in helping to fill the energy demands of the Northeastern United States through the harnessing of Bay of Fundy tides.

Speaking at Nova Scotia's annual New York investment luncheon, Gerald A. Regan said the Northeast could be served by the pollution free power of the Fundy tides as economically as by nuclear or thermal units.

"The relentless advance of technology, the continuing depletion of fossil-based fuels, and North America's ravishing and seemingly unquenchable thirst for electrical energy makes the development of our vast tidal power reserves highly attractive and inevitable," he said. "The only real quesion is when."

Part of the determination of when, Regan said, must be made by the people of the Northeastern United States.

"It is obvious that the Fundy tides will produce immeasurably more energy than conceivably used in the Maritime Provinces, and, therefore, its development relates directly to the electrical needs of New York and New England," he said.

"The citizens of these states, as well as the utilities, must determine whether they wish to opt for the development of this tremendous reserve of pollution-free power as a more palatable alternative to the establishment of ever more nuclear power plants and pollution-laden thermal plants in their communities," Regan said.

Once Wicked City Of Sodom Now A Very Dull Place

SODOM, Israel (AP) — Centuries before pornography and nude movie scenes turned sinning into ho-hum family entertainment, this part of Israel was the swingingest wicked city in the world.

Nowadays Sodom is dullsville.

From the dedicated sinner, the closest thing to an illicit thrill is picking up a lump of salt littering the empty landscape, bleaker than Death Valley.

Sodom in 1972 is a nature preserve, although just what the Israeli government is trying to preserve is difficult to imagine.

There's nothing here except salt crystals, lying around like snow, but a sign proclaims them "protected natural assets" and swiping them qualifies as a sin, or at least a crime.

In Old Testament days, Sodom must have made Las Vegas seem like a kindergarten. Along with Gomorrah, which has vanished from the face of the earth, Sodom got top billing in the Bible for unsavory repute. God destroyed them both.

The scriptures don't make clear exactly what was going on, but Genesis says: "The men of Sodom were wicked, great sinners...The Lord rained on Sodom and Gomorrah brimstone and fire...and He overthrew those cities...and lo, the smoke of the land went up like the smoke of a furnace."

That's pretty much the way it is even now, much to the disappointment of tourists looking for a little inequity in the Holy Land.

The fire and brimstone and the smoke are still there, as a matter of fact, only they belch from the chimneys of the Dead Sea Works potash factory a few miles away.

To a sinner looking for action it's sort of tedious, but it's nice dollars and cents for the Israeli government. This vast mineral abyss, the lowest spot on earth at 1,292 feet below sea level, yields 3 per cent of the world's potash for fertilizer.

Nine dredger ships churn through the Dead Sea - so salty that no fish can live in it but a swimmer can sit in 20 feet of water reading a newspaper - each spewing up 800 tons of carnallite mineral salt per hour.

Not that there are many swimmers. With water like gooey kerosene and temperatures soaring above 100 most of the year, Sodom and the Dead Sea valley are too hot for most holidayers. Sinning in the days before air-conditioning came along must have been sweaty work.

For a tourist attraction at Sodom, there's a column of salt hidden behind a mountain. Guides say it recalls the wife of Lot, who was turned into a salt pillar for daring to look back as she fled from the brimstone raid on the city.

Central Academic Plan Developing

The Central Area Academic Affairs Committee again invites all students to join in developing a master plan for academics in the Area. The Committee this year has been supervising the newly-instituted Colloquia program and has established a task force concerned with long-term academic policy and programs.

This is an opportunity for students to involve themselves with a concept that will surely develop into an integral part of the University education. If you have any questions, or are interested, please contact Ross Benjamin at Central Student Affairs, 5-2041.

Course For Minority Teachers

Several CCEBS undergraduates (sophomores, juniors, seniors), who are School of Education majors have petitioned Dr. R.A. McCoy, newly appointed CCEBS Director, who responded expeditiously with all available resources to develop and implement a special methods course for prospective minority teachers. This course to be the first in a series is coordinated by Ms. Muriel Wiggins, the CCEBS Academic Counselor, supported by Carol Maranda a Graduate Assistant (also graduate student in School of Education) and Dr. Barry Kaufman a recent graduate of the School of Education. The course is held in New Africa House twice per week.

This effort is not spontaneous rather the manifestation of several months of frustration and anxiety. The first dilemma is awareness that these prospective teachers are ill equipped to teach especially minorities since their training has not addressed the needs of their possible constituents--the urban child. The second dilemma is their awareness that some of the preceding CCEBS graduates have not been able to obtain placement and given the excess of possible teachers they have not distinguished nor differentiated training that will assure them the opportunity to teach black pupils.

Dr. McCoy stated this is a rewarding phenomena for now students are making demands on the educational structure for needs to be addressed that previously were overlooked and denied. Further no one should see this movement as anything other than the first step in a beginning process of complete review of CCEBS students' educational pursuits. If students have reached this level of sophistication it will be one of many major priorities to support and escalate this and similar programs in the University as well.

Efforts are underway to provide an intensive and substantive series of methods courses hopefully with credit from the School of Education supported by other activities as a second language, diagnostic skills, etc.

'Strategic Analysis' Lecture

Donald Brennan of the Hudson Institute will speak on "Main Lines of Strategic Analysis" at Hampshire College tomorrow. The lecture is sponsored by the Science and Public Policy series, and will be held at 8 p.m. in the main lecture hall of the Academic Building.

A senior member of the Croton-on-Hudson, N.Y., "think tank," Dr. Brennan has researched technological and strategic policy, defending views often strongly opposed in academic circles.

Prior to joining the Hudson Institute, of which he was President in 1962-64, Dr. Brennan worked for nine years as a research mathematician and communication theorist at M.I.T.'s Lincoln Laboratory. He has served as a consultant to the Departments of State and Defense, the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, the Executive Office of the President, and to several research organizations.

Actively interested in arms control since 1957, Dr. Brennan has been responsible for summer studies on that subject held in Cambridge, Mass., under the auspices of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and has been a frequent participant in international conferences relating to arms control.

Dr. Brennan earned his B.S. and Ph.D. degrees in mathematics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He has lectured and published extensively in his fields of interest, and is a member of several professional and honorary societies.

Science and Public Policy lectures are open to the public without charge.

A Definite Need

The Student Senate Transit Service is planning to expand its off-campus bus service next semester, but at this time no one is sure where the new routes will go and how many there will be. Some possibilities for routes include the Route 9 to Hadley area and one which would go as far as Rolling Green Apartments. There is no plan for anything in the Route 116 area.

The service should be expanded to include as many routes as facilities allow. Not only is there a need for such service just as a convenience idea, but there is a definite need for the service on the grounds that the campus is being slowly choked to death by the present volume of traffic and the resultant parking problems. Something has got to be done, and this would be a good first step.

If there cannot be a large number of new routes added to the present service, then there should be a service that would include as many areas as possible, even if the stops are fewer at each respective area. There's no reason why any area should be left out of consideration for service, unless there is a commercial line which already has the rights to the area.

This service would be valuable both to the students who use it and to the students who will not have to cope with traffic jams, pollution, and overcrowding on campus any more. We support its creation, and hope it will work.

WE'LL SHOW THOSE POINTY-HEADED INTELLECTUALS!

Education: And The Press

The United States of America is the most powerful nation in the world in most people's opinion. We have political, economic or military interests in almost every country in the "free world." If the United States is to maintain its position of supremacy Americans must be aware of the affairs of other countries. If we are to use our foreign policy in a way that will benefit other countries we must be able to understand situations that arise in different parts of the world. Education must provide us with the systems of analysis and the press must provide us with the necessary facts.

The United States is supposed to be a democracy and the people are supposed to be the ultimate judges of any policy. They cannot judge a policy if they don't know anything about its effects. The government should not be the sole source of information on foreign affairs because it can produce slanted arguments designed for some special interests: benefits. The average American voter seems more interested in domestic affairs than international events. It is easier for him to judge the effects of an anti-inflation policy than a foreign policy. In 1968 the most important issue in most people's mind was not the war in Indochina but crime in America. This may have been because people were more interested in affairs that affect them directly but it might also have been because people did not know enough about Indochina and our policies there to be able to make an intelligent decision.

The American press does not devote much attention to international occurences. News from Indochina, the Middle East and Europe receives a good deal of attention in the press. If you scan through almost any newspaper you'll find between the ads little news that is not domestic or from one of the previously mentioned areas. There is hardly any news from Africa, Latin America or parts of Asia. News magazines are only a little better and TV and radio do not give extensive enough coverage to news in these areas to make a difference.

The big news out of South America this year was Peron's return to Argentina. It was reasonably well covered by the media. Even in their coverage of events in Argentina the news media revealed how poor its coverage of South and Central America Moscow. We do not see anything about the conflicts in Guatemala in the press. Yet this country could become a trouble spot for the United States.

News from Africa is also very sparce. Guerrilla movements in Guinea, Angola and Mozambique are not heard of by most Americans. Yet we are aiding Portugal in their fight against these independence movements. Before Uganda expelled Asians little was known about it. Little has been said about it since the Asians were expelled. Nigeria was in the news when she was involved in a civil war. Since then almost no news about Nigeria has been carried by the American press. The United States might have to make a major policy decision about these areas and the public would not have the background to be able to judge if the policy is advantageous.

Not many people had heard of the Dominican Republic before 1965. How could people be expected to analyze our intervention there? Before 1959 Cuba did not receive much attention in the national press. It became a major problem for the United States. Cuba now does not even receive much space in the news media. How can people decide if the United States has the best possible relations with Cuba or if Castro is really as bad as he is made out to be?

The education we receive must provide us with the framework for our analysis of world problems. It seems to me that it is more important to teach someone in high school how to understand world events and how to analyze them than it is to teach them the causes of the War of 1812. If students can be taught how to look at political processes critically we will be able to deal with situations like Vietnam much easier. The process of critical analysis must be taught in high school so everyone will benefit from it.

If voters are able to analyze a situation from a viewpoint different from the government's and are supplied with pertinent information by the press even before the crisis arises then we might be able to avoid tragedies like Vietnam.

really is. The news correspondent for some press associations was stationed in the Dominican Republic and he was supposed to cover the events in Argentina. That's like a newsman in London covering the news in

This Is Not A Junket

WASHINGTON–This is the time of year when our congressmen and senators are traveling all over the world "investigating" things of utmost importance to the United States. There are some spoilsports, also known as taxpayers, who consider these trips junkets and a method of our lawmakers taking their wives on a much-needed vacation. But they are wrong. Our legislators are dead serious when they take a trip abroad, and the nation receives great benefits from these overseas jaunts.

I was at the airport the other day and ran into Sen. Ezra Bickering who was with his wife and a group of other senators and their wives, waiting for a plane to take them to the Caribbean.

Sen. Bickering was holding an underwater face mask, flippers and a snorkel in his hand.

"Where are you going, Senator?" I asked.

"Well," he replied, "as you know, I am chairman of the Senate subcommittee on snorkeling, and we are going to investigate snorkeling conditions in our Caribbean Defense Area."

"I didn't know snorkeling was a serious problem in the Caribbean," I said.

"That's where you have been misinformed. We have information that the Cubans have been snorkeling in our waters."

"They have?"

"With Soviet equipment," Sen. Bickering said. "An underwater mask with a Russian trademark washed up on the beach at St. Croix three weeks ago. We intend to hold hearings at this beach and get to the bottom of it."

"But surely if this is true the U.S. Navy can deal with the problem," I said.

Sen. Bickering became a little huffy, "My committee is charged with drawing up legislation for snorkeling. The American people must be informed of the laxity of our snorkeling laws and they also must be alerted to the dangers of foreigners snorkeling in our waters. This is not a joy ride, boy. This is serious business."

"I can see that, Senator. If it is true that the Cubans have been snorkeling in American waters, what do you intend to do about it?"

"We're not certain," Sen. Bickering said. "That is why, after we hold our hearing at St. Croix, we're going on to Jamaica, Barbados and Martinique. We want to see how other countries are dealing with their snorkeling problems. Once we gather enough information we hope to draft a snorkeling treaty with all the Caribbean countries."

"It sounds to me," I said, "as if you're going to be pretty busy for the next months."

"There isn't a man on my committee who wouldn't rather have taken a vacation instead. But when I raised the question on the snorkel gap in the Caribbean and what it could mean to us in terms of the Monroe Doctrine, they all canceled their plans and agreed that this trip had first priority."

"But won't you have any fun at all?" I asked.

"I doubt it. We'll be snorkeling all day and holding meetings in the evenings. I may try to give the committee members a day off for shopping, but only if we get our work done."

"Why are you taking your wives?"

"They can entertain the wives of foreign snorkelers while we're in session."

"One last question. Will you hold any hearings on scuba diving?"

"No. Sen. Drakebill heads the subcommittee on scuba diving. He's there at Gate 24 waiting for a plane to take his committee to Tahiti."

Letters To The Editor

Organize A Boycott

To The Editor:
As William Coffin said recently, it's going to be interesting to watch the members of the American Bicentennial Commission prepare to celebrate the 200th anniversary of the American Revolution without once mentioning the word. We have come quite a way since 1776. Most people forget that the reason they get drunk, go to Bar-B-Qs, or watch fireworks on July 4 is that some time ago someone wrote, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem likely to effect their safety and happiness." That's part of the Declaration of Independence. Ever hear of it? Some North Vietnamese school children know it by heart. Quote it in some parts of the U.S. and you will no doubt be thrown in jail.

Let's pass over the implications of the above for our own country. In Africa, there are three nations, Angola, Mozambique, and Guinea-Bissau, living under the brutal hand of Portuguese colonial rule. For 500 years, the Portuguese have stolen the people's produce and labor, denied them education and medical care, inflicted a notorious secret police system on them, repressed all forms of freedom of expression, destroyed their culture and generally kept them living in squalor. There are people's liberation movements active in all three countries currently, attempting to drive out the Portuguese in order that they may govern themselves. They want now what we wanted then. Can we love freedom and deny them our help?

There will be a meeting on Thursday, November 30, at 2:00 p.m., in the UCF lounge on the third floor of Hampshire House, to organize a campus support group for these movements and a boycott of Gulf Oil, a major investor in Portuguese colonialism. Venceremos.

UCF Film Tonight

To The Editor:
Tonight Village by Village will be shown in Room 162, Campus Center, at 8 o'clock. This 30-minute movie was filmed in North Vietnam by friends of the Medical Aid for Indochina program. The films shows bombed villages in North Vietnam. There are interviews with people from these villages and with American prisoners of war in Vietnam.

This film is part of the Indochina War Series sponsored by the United Christian Foundation. Next Tuesday, December 5th, also in 162 Campus Center, The Americal Division will be show. This film is a 22-minute account of the winter soldier investigation in Detroit, 1971, by the Vietnam Veterans Against the War. We apologize for not bringing this film two weeks ago as planned. We really have it now. There will be a meeting of Young Friends (Quakers) and others interested in Peace and Social Concerns after the showing of The Americanal Division.

Anti-Student Bigotry?

To The Editor:
Far from being "an example of anti-student bigotry" Professor Spivack's memo (published in the November 21 MDC) is a witty parody of attitudes which are fundamentally condescending to students by virtue of assuming that gimmicky course descriptions and an extremely narrow conception of "relevance" will attract them. The same could be said of courses which seek large enrollments by making no demands on students. Rigorous course requirements make greater demands not only on students but also on teachers. They reflect respect for learning and for the intellect of students; they also assume a higher level of motivation on part of them. The opposite applies to "gut courses" and jazzy course descriptions, which are in fact much better approximations of "anti-student bigotry" than Professor Spivack's spoof.

Unity And Power

To The Editor:
The murder of two Black students in Louisiana is an incident already too familiar. Nixon's call for a new crackdown on Nov. 9th is an open call for an attack on the youth of the nation. In early May, 1970, Agnew made a call for an end of permissiveness. A few days passed and four students lay dead at Kent State University. A few weeks later there were similar murders at Jackson State University. Baton Rouge, the opening gun of Nixon's second term, is a rational act in a country that spends tax money for bullets rather than for books.

It was evident the day after the killing that the Daily Collegian was missing an important point, for the news of the killing was on page four. It remained off of the front page until students (Black and white) put it on the front page. And now Tackeff, Vinskey and company say the Collegian should not print what is in the interest of the students. As students continue to be shot while demanding better food, better dorm life, medical care, Tackeff and company demand business as usual. Students beware of such talk. Tackeff-Vinskey and company shout for freedom while remaining mute in the face of police and political harrassment of students on this campus and on campuses across the country.

But let it be known that a new day is coming. People no longer say yes sir and yes mam. Three hundred students at UMass and thousands of students across the country have a different idea. Monday's Rally should be a warning to Matt Tackeff and the other budding facists. Students shake off your chains of fear. To remain inactive during times of repression breeds more of the same. Action is needed not only in support of the students at Southern University but also here. Here there is the demand for no guns on campus and for student control of the police. Here we have the demand for Paul Chandler to be admitted into the School of Education. Mr. Chandler worked in the boycott of last spring's marathon and is currently having difficulty gaining entrance into the Graduate program there. Tackeff-Vinskey and company, with their cancer of twisted morals are standing mute to these student demands. The administration calls for education as usual. The band in Washington plays on. A viable education lies in student power, and student power lies in unity around our own self-interests.

Satisfied Stoneham

To The Editor:
It was with considerable satisfaction that I read the latest article in last Monday's edition of "The Daily Collegian", concerning the purported thefts from the Dining Commons by employees.

The reason for my writing this letter to you is to indicate my concern for the expose-reporting that intimated that all dining commons employees are thieves - the "ole" guilt by innuendo and unsubstantiated rumors. I think the injustice done to the two employees whose picture unfortunately appeared on the front page of your newspaper was completely needless and should never have been printed without first verification of exactly what the situation was. I do feel an apology is owed to these loyal and valuable employees for the discomfort that they have experienced during this investigation. I would hope that you would want to correct any injustices that were committed.

I would like also to stress that we will always cooperate with anyone who brings irregularities to us and investigate when necessary and justified. The adage that where there's smoke, there's fire is not always true, especially when the smoke may just be smog.

Ecology Minded

To The Editor:
yesterday i had the good fortune to drop into the restaurant on university drive named jimmies of savin rock. it is a quick-snack place much like macdonald's or hardee's. the thing that impressed me about the place was that they were ecology minded by intent or by mistake. whatever the reason, they were using pulp plates, and wooden forks. in addition, the condiments (mustard, ketchup, boiled onions, etc.) were served dining commons style, that is, from large containers, thus eliminating the cost and wastefulness of those tiny aluminum packets that are so hard to open and have so little in them. can you imagine? in this modern world of plasticity and convenience?

the food was good, too!

Thanks, UMass

To The Editor:
Wednesday and Thursday of this past week were spent on your college campus. Too often, I fear, you hear from visitors only when they have been unfavorably impressed. It's really fun to tell you everything, for us, was more than we expected. Even Mass. snow is beautiful when seen from the eleventh floor of the Campus Center.

Reading the DAILY COLLEGIAN was delightful. You develop an interesting cross section of State, National and Campus life.

It was our very good luck to read of the jazz concert on Tuesday night. That kind of music creates its own kind of 'high'. Fortunate you are to have talent like Fred Tillis and Max Roach on your faculty.

Perhaps your people are too close to see it, but kindness and concern is the atmosphere most apparent all about. Many students went out of their way to offer directions and small courtesies. We were indeed--impressed.

A Shaft Of Sunlight

To The Editor:
I have a niece attending your school. I shall not reveal her name for fear she will be scoffed at, called Priscilla Prude and Virginia Virgin and other such appellations.

However, she is one of the fortunate girls. She is immune to this hideous age and its scarlet values. Her long brown limbs and tender bosom will not be despoiled by some lusting lout out for a cheap night's adventure.

But what sort of age is this that permits institutions of higher learning to pass out birth control pills willy nilly, that allows students to cohabit without penalty? How long can our debauched society go on ignoring the mass distribution of films like Marjoe, pocket books like The Story of O, or more recently Dolinsky's Mind One. How long can obnoxious disc jockeys continue to play recordings nationwide extolling drugs and urging girls to "bang the whole gang."

Young people, I ask you to take a moment! Pause, reconsider your peril. Save yourselves. Turn your backs on the licentiousness around you.

And dear editor I ask you, please print my letter. Allow one shaft of sunlight to pierce the gloom of "the stone zone."

Decriminalize Dope

To The Editor:
In January or February the Massachusetts State Legislature will consider a bill that calls for the decriminalization of the use of marijuana.

We are now in the process of organizing statewide support for this bill and, in order to be effective, we will need the cooperation of the University community.

If you would like to get involved on behalf of this legislation please call either Cathi Skerrett 546-8587 or Steve Newman 586-3278.

Thank you.

Pianist Frager In Concert

Malcom Frager, reknowned pianist, will give a concert on November 30 in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College. Mr. Frager has played with all the major American orchestras, as well as with many major European orchestras.

On Thursday evening, November 30, the Smith College Department of Music will present a concert by pianist Malcom Frager, the third offering in the 1972-73 Concert Series. The event, which will be held in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College, is scheduled to begin at 8:15.

Malcom Frager is the first artist ever to have won two of the most demanding competitions in music: the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Piano Competition in Brussels, and the Edgar M. Leventritt Competition in New York. He has been in the forefront of the international music scene ever since this double triumph a dozen years ago.

Mr. Frager has played with all the major American orchestras and is regularly featured at principal festivals. He has been soloist with the Boston Symphony for seven consecutive seasons, with the Cleveland Orchestra and with the New York Philharmonic for three seasons, with the Chicago Symphony for five seasons, and twice with the Philadelphia Orchestra. In Europe, too, his success has been consistent.

Mr. Frager's gifts are by no means limited to music. In 1957 he graduated magna cum laude (Phi Beta Kappa) from Columbia University, having majored in languages (he speaks seven, including Russian). He has performed in over 40 countries, including the Soviet Union, and at the invitation of President Eiseuhower he performed at the White House for the King and Queen of Denmark.

Born in 1933, Malcom Frager gave his first recital at the age of six in St. Louis, and four years later played a Mozart Concerto with the St. Louis Symphony under Vladimir Golschmann. At 14, he moved to New York to continue his studies with Carl Friedberg, a pupil of Clara Schumann. He began to win prizes as early as 1952. The first was the Prix d'Excellence at the American Conservatory in Fontainebleau. This was followed by Top honors at the Geneva International Piano Competition in 1955, the Michaels Memorial Music Award in Chicago in 1956, and the Career Award of the National Society of Arts and Letters in Los Angeles in 1958. His participation in competitions is now from the other side of the footlights: lastyear he served as a member of the jury for both the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium and the Leventritt Competitions.

The program for Mr. Frager's concert will open with Beethoven's Sonata in D Major, Opus 10 No. 3, to be followed by two works by Mendelssohn, the Rono Capriccioso, Opus 14, and Fantasy in F Sharp Minor, Opus 28. After intermission, the concert will continue with Haydn's Sonata No. 13, in G Major, and will conclude with the Sonata (1926) of Bela Bartok.

Tickets may be obtained by mail from Concert Series, Sage Hall, Smith College, Northampton, Mass. 01060, or by calling the Department of Music, 584-2700, ext. 261 weekdays. They will also be on sale at the John M. Greene Hall Box Office one day before the concert, and on the afternoon and evening of November 30.

N.E. Center Open House

Interested in personal growth? Curious about Gestalt, encounter groups, meditation, transactional analysis, altered states of consciousness? You can find out more by attending an Open House to be held at the New England Center for Personal and Organizational Development, tonight at 7:30 to 11:30 p.m. In addition to providing an opportunity to talk with staff members and trainees of the Center about the various programs in personal growth currently being conducted, there will be a brief experiential session at 8:30 for those who wish to experience some of the approaches to personal growth employed at the Center. These approaches include Gestalt, Psychodrama, Transactional Analysis, Yoga, Psychosynthesis, Organic Cooking, Kundalini Yoga, Sensory Awareness, Altered States of Consciousness, Bioenergetic Analysis, TORI Community, Psychic Healing, Creativity and Body Movement.

The Center offers these programs in weekend, week-long, and on-going groups, a three month internship program, and various professional training workshops.

There will be a dollar fee for the evening's activities to cover the cost of refreshments. If you are interested in attending, please call 549-0886 to get directions and to let them know you are coming.

TURN IN YOUR YOUTH CARD FOR TWA's. YOU'LL GET A TOP LP ALBUM AND A WHOLE LOT OF THE WORLD FOR FREE.

It may sound funny to turn in your card for a free TWA card, but it's worth it. If you turn in your American or United or whatever other airline's youth card you have to your campus representative or any TWA counter (or pay $3 for a new one, if you don't have one to turn in), you'll get more than any other airline offers you. Maximum discounts on TWA and all other airlines, more free things and, on top of all that, a free album.

FREE ALBUM—FIRST 10,000.

First, you'll get a Record Club of America coupon good for your choice of a free top album worth up to $6.98. From a list of over 100 incredibles. Like Three Dog Night, Neil Diamond, Roberta Flack, Elton John. Plus a free lifetime membership in Record Club of America, with no obligation to buy any record. The offer's limited to the first 10,000, so you've got to do it soon.

FREE MONEY-SAVING COUPONS.

When you land in any of six cities (London, Boston, Paris, Los Angeles, San Francisco or Denver) with your TWA card, you'll get a brochure full of hundreds of dollars' worth of deals. And we mean deals. Like absolutely free or 50% off.

What we did was to talk to students in those cities and ask where they'd take their friends—not just the "in" places, but the spots that only the knowing would know about. And those are the ones we give you free dinners, drinks, club memberships or discounts in. Here are just some of the absolutely free things you'll get in London and Boston, as an example of what TWA has arranged for you in all the cities.

BOSTON FREEBEES.

FREE
A spaghetti dinner at the "Spaghetti Emporium, Inc.," just off Harvard Square.

FREE
Breakfast in the "Pewter Pot Muffin House" (14 locations) where many Harvard students stop first in the morning.

School Of Ed. Offering Flexible Curriculum Plan

The following list represents Education learning experiences that are now available under the School of Education's Flexible Curriculum. The purpose of the Flexible Curriculum is to provide alternative choices when developing a program of studies. By maintaining a modified record-keeping and scheduling system within the School of Education, which supplements the University's system, it is possible to have courses which break away from the three-credit, full semester standard.

Who's eligible: University Students (Preference to Education Students.)
Tuition:
1. No cost to undergraduates
2. No cost to graduates registered for more than 10 credits.
3. Graduate students with less than 10 credits will register and pay second semester/except for tuition waivers.
Credit:
1. 100 mods 1 credit
2. Graduate students with less than 10 credits will receive credit second semester
Registration:
1. Where: Room 121, School of Education
2. When: Prior to the second meeting of the learning experience.
3. Full time students may get forms to register for additional university credit in room 121.

Roy: Public Light Sculpture

UMass artist John Roy has been doing the unusual in art for some time now, ever since he turned from painting on canvas to working with the colors and patterns of light sculpture.

Now, he's carried it one step farther--public light sculpture. Beginning today, a pattern of lights designed by Roy will be visible to thousands of motorists on the Long Island Expressway when the Westinghouse Corporation lights up a new, computer-controlled neon sign in Long Island City.

The new sign contains no words or commercial messages, but flashes a series of intricate patterns in its three "Circle W" segments. Roy calls the sign a form of public light sculpture which enhances rather than detracts from the New York skyline.

Each "Circle W" trademark on the sign contains 12 controllable parts--a total of 36 for the three symbols. This makes it possible for the lights to form patterns 36 factorial ways (36 times 35 times 34 times 33 and so forth). The number of combinations possible is 100,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000.

Patterns of light on each of the trademarks are regulated by a black box that thinks like a computer. Each trademark is controlled by one unit and all are synchronized to act alone or together in response to any pattern desired.

Each solid-state unit contains more than 16,000 pieces of stored information. Light patterns can be designed to vary from eight minutes to more than one hour without repeating.

The new sign is located on the roof of ABCO Refrigeration Company of Long Island City, a Westinghouse Air Conditioning distributor. It was constructed by the firm that originated Broadway electric signs in the early 1920's, Artkraft Strauss Sign Corporation of Manhattan. The sign itself was designated by architect and industrial designer, Eliot Noyes, and graphic designer, Paul Rand.

John Roy is an associate professor of art at UMass on sabbatical leave this year. He is a native of Springfield with B.F.A. and M.F.A. degrees from Yale University. His paintings and light sculptures have been exhibited in major galleries in many parts of the country.

Candidates Ask Recount Halt

BOSTON (AP)-A scheduled recount of votes in several Boston wards and towns in the 9th Massachusetts Congressional District started Monday, but was postponed after election officials received requests from three of the four candidates to call off the recount.

Rep. Louise Day Hicks, on whose behalf the recount was originally requested, called officials Friday to ask that the recount be dropped. She was apparently defeated in her bid for a second term by Boston city Councillor John J. Moakley by just over 3,700 votes.

Under state law, she and the three other candidates in the race had to submit written requests to drop the recount.

Jack McElligott, a spokesman for the Boston Election Commission, said that two precincts in Jamaica Plain were counted Monday morning before written requests were received from Mrs. Hicks, Moakley and Jeanne Lafferty, the socialist Workers' Party nominee.

He said that Howard Miller, the Republican candidate, is out of the country, but a written statement is expected from him.

Nurses To Present 'Liberation' Program

"Nursing Liberation" is an audience participation program nurses and friends of nursing will want to attend tomorrow night at 7:00 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union at the University of Massachusetts. A panel of persons prominent in recent evolutions in nursing and health care will be presented by the School of Nursings' Beta Zeta Chapter of Sigma Theta Tau, the national scholastic honor society in nursing.

Moderator will be Ms. M. Lucille Kinlein, R.N. an independent practitioner of nursing in Washington, D.C. and a co-investigator of curriculum research and assistant professor at Georgetown University. "An office setting such as mine, says Ms. Kinlein,...has not been offered to any community by nursing, to the best of my knowledge. As I practice nursing in this setting, I see clients on an episodic or continuing basis, I make home visits, and I expect to be working with small groups....I have become professionally free," declares Ms. Kinlein.

Two other panelists will join the moderator, Ms. Linda Ceriale, of the University of Massachusetts School of Nursing faculty: Ms. Janet T. Swanson of New York State Nurses' Association who was involved in New York States' legislative changes in the nurse practice act.

The Massachusetts Nurses' Association has just declared its acceptance of its evolutionary definition of nursing practice. Ms. Catherine Tower headed the council which worked over two years on the statement.

Culturnatives

Clearinghouse To Hold Meeting

By GILBERT J. SALK

The Culturnatives Clearinghouse will hold its second meeting tomorrow night at 7:30 in 815 CC.

The Clearinghouse is gathering information on resources available within the university community which will be useful to people who are interested in alternative lifestyles, cultural alternatives, or related new ways of dealing with our society and its institutions. The information will be made available to any members of the community who are interested in it.

The Clearinghouse is also collecting names of people who are concerned about putting together prototype programs which will be trying out alternatives, in the hopes of being able to bring people with similar interests together to form work and/or support groups.

As it is currently in an organizational stage, the Clearinghouse is looking for people who are willing to put in time as interviewers. The interviewers will talk to individuals and groups about the resources, tools, knowledge, ideas, and skills they have which would be useful to the community. People are also needed to handle other parts of the program, such as publicity, office work, communications, brainstorming, and other things which may come up as the group starts to come together.

All members have been requested to try to bring three things to the meeting with them, and new members are asked to do the same. First, written-out questionnaires, both for individuals and for groups, are to be devised, and each member was asked to prepare his or her idea of what these should look like. The samples will be put together into a master form. Secondly, each person was asked to compile, out of the information they have, an initial list of people and groups which should be interviewed. Finally, each member was asked to write down his or her own skills, hobbies, and other resources.

The Culturnatives Clearinghouse was an idea which grew out of Gil Salk's weekly Culturnatives column in the Collegian, and works under the auspices of the Peace Action Task Force of the United Christian Foundation.

People who wish to help may contact either Gil Salk at 545-0813 or UCF at 545-2661, or come to the meeting in the Campus Center tomorrow.

Spring Semester Room Choosing

Residence hall room choosing for the Spring Semester, 1973, will be held the week of November 27-December 1, 1972. For students who wish to reserve space in a residence hall the following schedule has been set up.

Tuesday, November 28-Students who wish to move to available space within their present residence hall may sign up with their head of residence on this date.

Wednesday & Thursday, November 29 & 30-Students who presently reside in a residence hall and who wish to move to another residence hall may sign up with the head of residence of the new residence hall on these dates.

Friday, December 1-Students presently residing off-campus who wish to move to available space within the residence halls may sign up with the head of residence of the residence hall to which they plan to move.

Students planning and who are eligible to move off-campus for the Spring Semester, 1973, must fill out the necessary forms for the return of the Security Deposit at the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore Building.

Students eligible to reside off-campus are students who will be:

1. Married
2. Seniors (Class of 1973)
3. Commuting from the home of parents within a 40-mile radius of Amherst.

Voices Against Racism

By BILL HASSON

On Tuesday night, November 14, 1972 the voices and spirits of Africa were evoked and demanded that immorality, injusticed racism and even history make an account of itself. The Africa Chief, his Queen and their people, the discontented slave, the freedom fighter, and all of the original peoples of the Universe prevailed and proclaimed an even deeper commitment to the struggle for international liberation. This event was not just a group voices spirituals accompanied by a university band. The context of that presentation is much broader. Many people think that the slaves sang spirituals because that is all they at their disposal and the spiritual was a cooling out device. That is to say whenever the master saw the slave singing, he perceived the slave to be happy and content with his condition. Also the master could only see the song as a form of entertainment for himself. None of this is the real case.

Spirituals are a highly and complex form of communication. They were used to place God and Jesus into a different context. They viewed God as/in man and not some mysterious or dead individual. Messages were relayed and history was recorded through the spiritual. Just as songs were used in Africa for ritualistic purposes such as celebrating the newborn or before battle, so too were the spirituals used. And most importantly the spiritual was usd by Black people and their ancestors as a constant reminder of who we are and the kind of strengths we must instill in ourselves in order to survive the wrath of those who may choose to destroy the planet.

The synthesis was made by the 'The Voices of New Africa' under the choir direction of Brother Max Roach and the Orchestra direction of Brother Fred Tillis. Each singer carried out their historical assignment by performing with strength and conviction. You could feel the energy throughout the room. The first piece "Wade In The Water" is symbolic. The water is the planet and the planet has been troubled. God who is man has to wade in these waters throughout life and guarantee the water's purity. "Singing With a Sword In My Hand", the second piece, signifies the Black man's interminable struggle to rid the world of all of its evils. The concert was a five college coopertive effort and was the first of many more historic ventures.

FTC To Set Product Endorsement Rules

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Federal Trade Commission, assuming people already realize practically no one endorses a product for free, proposed Monday a set of guidelines aimed at stripping at least some deception from endorsement advertisements.

The proposals, if implemented after a four-month waiting period set to receive comment, would apply to the housewife claiming a cleaner wash and the athlete who touts a cleaner shave.

Gerald Thain of the FTC's Bureau of Consumer Protection told newsmen there is evidence that the use of endorsements in advertisements is on the rise, although he cited no exact figures.

He called the guidelines vague in places, but he said they had been requested by advertisers anxious to avoid FTC complaints.

"The public generally realizes that people who make endorsements are compensated," said Thain. But to disclose what the public might not realize, the FTC offered several guidelines and examples. Included were these: Endorsers presented as experts should be qualified to speak authoritatively in the field. Thus, an "engineer" who endorses a car should be a specialist in automobiles and not chemistry.

ACLU Charges KSU With Spying

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP) — The American Civil Liberties Union accused Kent State University officials Monday of planting a spy in an activist group to urge members to kill and bomb and to truck them into other illegal activity.

The ACLU, in a suit filed in U.S. District Court, named KSU President Glenn Olds and campus police chief James L. Fyke among defendants. The suit seeks $80,000 damages and an injunction "limiting the authority of the defendants to engage in undercover work."

It was filed on behalf of the KSU chapter of Vietnam Veterans Against the War, the ACLU said.

Olds and Fyke were unavailable for comment.

Benson A. Wolman, executive director of the Ohio ACLU, said the suit charges the officials with "a pattern and practice of unlawful surveillance by university officials by infiltrating and monitoring of various law abiding groups in the campus area, by interfering with the right of privacy of citizens, by conducting searches without warrants, and by attempting to provoke them into committing unlawful acts."

It also charges that Fyke and a campus policeman, Reinhold "Ron" Mohr, set up 'a scheme to discredit the group, entrap them ... and expose them to baseless criminal prosecution by planting weapons on their persons."

Mohr was arrested by Kent city police April 24 while he was carrying a Russian-made automatic rifle and a Chinese rocket launcher. Treasury agents, who are charged with gun control law enforcement, said the weapons were inoperable and he was released. The university fired Mohr May 6 on the basis of affidavits signed by the veterans group, but he was reinstated by the State Personnel Boad of Review Oct. 12. The Board ruled Mohr was following orders.

Mohr posed as a student and attended meetings at the homes of members of the veterans group, searching the premises, removing and copying documents, and relaying information to the other defendants, the suit claims.

It also alleges he urged the veterans group "to use explosive devices to blow up campus buildings."

Endowment Given To Journalism

WASHINGTON (AP)-Chairman Ronald S. Berman announced yesterday grants by the National Endowment for the Humanities to the University of Michigan and Stanford University to establish fellowship programs for professional journalists.

Stanford University received a grant offer of $190,798, coupled with a supplemental award of $50,000 for a possible total of $240,798. Gifts of up to one-half the $50,000 must be received by the endowment in support of Stanford's program; this amount will be matched by federal funds.

The grant to the University of Michigan is $234,625.

"The purpose of these fellowships is to give professional journalists an opportunity to stand back from their work for an extended period and examine in historical, social, cultural and philsophical perspective the bodies of knowledge upon which their profession draws," Berman said in a statement.

Michigan will establish a program of fellowships in the humanities and related fields in the 1973-74 academic year. The grant provides for 12 fellowships for the full academic year with stipends of $10,200. Fellows will not be candidates for a degree.

Central Area Curriculum Committee

Once again, the Central Area Curriculum Committee is accepting proposals for Colloquia offerings for the Spring semester. Colloquia are one credit, pass-no record courses that supplement the regular University curriculum by allowing informally-taught, residence-based courses that are not normally available through the University's academic departments. Examples of current colloquia are "The Gothic Cathedral," "Jazz for Listeners," "Peer Sex Education," and "Male/Female Roles."

Colloquia proposal forms are available from Central Area heads of Residence and from the Central Area Director's Office (B17-B20 Baker House, 5-2041). Proposal forms must be turned in by Friday, February 16, 1973.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ by SYDNEY OMARR ☆

Buying gifts for Aquarius should be exciting, informative, even adventurous. Take a chance with Aquarius. Get books on astrology, psychic phenomena, the occult, self-help subjects. Purchase a certificate for a flying lesson. A dowsing rod, a pendulum, any unusual gadget, even a Ouija board would delight Aquarius. In selecting clothes, keep them simple but smart. For Aquarius, friendship and intent actually are of paramount importance. It truly is the thought that counts where these natives are concerned.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are restless, inquisitive. What now may be blocking progress has to do with relatives, some ideas which need more time for proper "seasoning." Do some investigating. Find person who shares your basic interests.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Hold off on big spending. You can get what you need without being extravagant. This includes luxury items. Be a comparison shopper. Libra person can help you be selective. You are due for pleasant surprise.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): See persons as they really are--don't fool yourself. You have burdens, but many of them belong to others. Means you should separate those who carry their fair share from perennial freeloaders.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Keep some information under cover. Don't tell all. Discretion now is necessary. Older individual relies on you. Rewards accompany added responsibility. Evaluate messages, ideas, formats. Accent willingness to work, wait.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Finish projects. Find ways of communicating with more persons. Get message across in definite, positive manner. You are capable now of making financial gains. Key is to broaden horizons.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may be in mood to celebrate. Pressures are relieved. Leo could play prominent role. Be independent. Apply original concepts. Lead rather than follow. Shake off gloom. You have right to live your own life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Follow through on hunch. Share knowledge. Learn by teaching. Correct past errors. Be willing to admit mistakes. Display maturity. One you respect could pay meaningful compliment. Stick to what you know.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Control budget. Have fun without being foolish. Sagittarian plays key role. Social activity is accelerated. You meet people. Contacts can develop into meaningful relationships if you are receptive.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Cooperate with Scorpio. Take inventory. Avoid tendency to take others for granted. Money situation improves if legal way is cleared. Be wary of loopholes. Study fine print, if thorough, you can succeed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be ready for change of pace, scenery. Gemini, Virgo individuals are in picture. Accent is on ability to size up persons and situations. Catch up on correspondence. Open lines of communication.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Young person may make unreasonable demands. Be fair but firm. Don't give up something for nothing. Key is to strike fair bargain. Make conciliatory gesture to family member. Domestic situation improves.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent is on building for future. Strive for solid base. Eschew shortcuts. Perceive difference between actuality and wishful thinking. Another Piscean could play key role. Check legal papers.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you will be traveling in 1973. There will be beneficial changes which lead to greater self-expression. You are a vital, dynamic individual. Find creative outlet. Make amends to family member for a recent slight. That would be step to happiness.

NCAA's Wind Up Harriers Season

By WALT POWERS

The UMass cross-country season is over.

It ended on the muddy, hilly fields of Houston, Texas, last Tuesday, when sophomores Bill Gillin and Randy Thomas finished 88th and 159th respectively against probably the strongest field ever to run in the N.C.A.A. championships. Neither harrier ran his best race, but both did comparatively well in this pressure packed, six mile race. Dan Moynihan of Tufts, the New England champion, finished one second ahead of Gillin in 86th, and Tony Colon of Manhattan, the I.C.4A. runner-up, finished well back, in 255th.

The N.C.A.A.'s culminated an extremely successful season, a season that saw a young experienced, but uncertain UMass team emerge as one of the top three teams in New England. By the season's end, only Harvard, the perennial cross-country power from Cambridge, could claim clear superiority over the Minuteman harriers.

At the start of the season, Coach Ken O'Brien set three goals for his team; the Yankee Conference Championships, the New England Championships, and a tenth place finish in the I.C.4A.'s. His team was young, experienced, and well balanced, but it lacked an established, consistent, group of frontrunners. Because of this, UMass was ranked only fourth or fifth in New England at the beginning of the season.

The first meet of the season was a disappointment. Harvard overwhelmed the Minutemen, and Providence held them even. But in this inaugural meet a pattern emerged that would hold for the rest of the season. Sophomores Bill Gillin and Randy Thomas finished sixth and seventh in this race, and they alternated in the top two positions for the rest of the season. They improved steadily each week, and their aggressive style of running carried them to fourth and fifth place finishes in the New England meet. Throughout the season they ran almost as a unit and gave UMass the best one-two punch in New England.

The eighth place finisher in the Harvard-Providence meet was a surprise, Tommy Maguire. Maguire, only a freshman, held down the no. three position for the rest of the season, and in the conference meet, he ran the best race of his career. In that race, he picked up the slack of an ailing Bill Gillin, and battled the leaders all the way, en route to a fifth place finish. Tom's Trademark was poise and consistency. He never flinched under the pressure of varsity competition. His coach, Ken O'Brien, calls the seasons "most pleasant surprise."

In the next race, against Northeastern, a more sinister pattern emerged, one that would cost UMass a victory in the New Englands, and nearly resulted in losing the conference championships. In that race, the top five Northeastern runners moved boldly ahead at the one-mile mark, and only Gillin, Thomas, and Maguire met their challenge. Though UMass took first and second place in that race, they lost the meet. In both the conference, and the New England meet, the Minutemen proved vulnerable to the mid-race "Pack" tactics of Northeastern and U.R.I. It was the team's biggest weakness. "The inability of our fourth and fifth men to stay close to Maguire in the more competitive meets, was the difference between a very good team, and an outstanding one," said O'Brien.

The team improved steadily after the Northeastern meet. They exhibited tremendous depth in trouncing UConn and B.C. on successive Saturdays. Even in the three midweek races in which O'Brien sat out his top six runners, the harriers managed to place at least one runner in the top two positions. Throughout the season, the fourth and fifth positions on the team alternated between Doug O'Connel, Chris Chambers, Paul Segersten, Rick Barry, and Pete Crisci. Mike Conlin, Mike Roy, and Barron Littlefield also scored occasionally for UMass. Because of this depth, UMass could get poor races out of one or two runners and still win. It was a luxury no other team in New England could afford.

In the end UMass achieved two of its three initial goals, and came exasperatingly close to attaining its third goal. The harriers edged out U.R.I. on an off-day to win their third consecutive conference crown. In the New Englands, UMass could never get untracked against a hungry, aggressive, Northeastern team. It was the only disappointment in an outstanding season. A week later the harriers finished tenth in the I.C.4A.'s, well ahead of 18th place N.Y.

Rick Barry is the only graduating senior. To replace him, O'Brien will have to draw from his New England Champion junior varsity team. Mike Conlin, Tom Wilson, and Mike Roy are the top prospects. All three have considerable varsity experience. Mike Gillen and Phil Broughton could also contribute.

Unfortunately for UMass, the competition next year will be stronger. Right now, Northeastern appears to be the biggest obstacle in the path to a better season. Their entire team will return next year. This is where the loss of Rick Barry will hurt. "Rick is primarily a miler and a half miler," said O'Brien. "Because of this, he tends to be inconsistent in long distance races. More than anyone else on the team, though, he possessed the explosive speed that could break open a close race, and it won't be easy to replace him."

But despite the loss of Rick Barry, the team doesn't appear to be seriously weakened, and if the success of the UMass J.V. team is a valid indication, the harriers should remain a power in New England for a long, long, time.

Boardwalk Tickets To Go On Sale

THE CONVENTION CENTER in Atlantic City looked like this during the 1964 Democratic Convention. The scenery will be different for the Boardwalk Bowl.

Tickets for the UMass-University of California (Davis) Boardwalk Bowl game on Dec. 9 will go on sale sometime after lunch Wednesday, Nov. 29.

Three different ticket prices will be offered: $6.00, $4.00, and $2.00.

Representatives of the UMass Athletic Department are going to Atlantic City to finalize the various arrangements necessary and are expected to bring back a seating plan by the time tickets go on sale.

Wally Novak, ticket manager, said that it is hoped the response for the game will be enthusiastic as the reaction to this first post-season game in eight years will weigh heavily on any future post-season plans.

USC, Alabama Top AP Poll Again

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

Southern California and Alabama continued to run away with the 1-2 positions in The Associated Press college football ratings Monday while Oklahoma, Penn State, Texas, Ohio State and Auburn moved up and Michigan, Nebraska and Louisiana State slipped.

Both leaders had last weekend off but the 10-0 Trojans of Southern Cal received 46 first-place ballots and 990 of a possible 1,000 points from a nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters. Alabama got the other four No. 1 votes and 890 points in the next-to-last poll of the regular season.

The final vote will be taken following the bowl games.

Oklahoma climbed from fourth to third with 790 points following a 17-14 road triumph over Nebraska. The defeat dropped the two-time defending national champions from fifth to eighth.

Ohio State's 14-11 triumph over Michigan in the Big Ten showdown lifted the Buckeyes from ninth to fourth while lowering the previously unbeaten Wolverines from third to seventh.

Penn State, which completed a 10-1 regular season, rose from sixth to fifth by routing Pitt 49-27 and Texas inched from seventh to sixth with a 38-3 rout of Texas A&M.

Auburn and Notre Dame, both off last weekend, jumped one spot apiece to ninth and 10th, respectively.

Louisiana State, which had been eighth, fell out of the Top Ten to the No. 11 spot after a 33 tie against Florida. The Tigers were followed by Tennessee, Colorado, North Carolina, UCLA, Arizona State, Louisville, West Virginia, Washington State and West Virginia.

Last week's Second Ten consisted of Notre Dame, Tennessee, Colorado, UCLA, North Carolina, Missouri, Iowa State, Arizona State, Washington State and Texas Tech.

The Top Twenty, with first-place votes in parentheses, season records and total points. Points tabulated on basis of 20-18-16-14-12-10-9-8-7-6-5-4-2-1:

Miller Wins Heritage

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Johnny Miller, aided by a lucky bounce off a tree, fashioned a front-running 70 for a one-stroke victory in Monday's rain-delayed final round of the $125,000 Heritage Golf Classic.

The 25-year-old Miller, who scored an unofficial victory in New Zealand just a week ago, acquired his second tour title with a 72-hole total of 281-three under par on the 6,655-yard Harbour Town Golf Links.

The lanky blond won by a single stroke over Tom Weiskopf, who came from five strokes off the pace to claim second alone with a final round 66.

A turning point could have been the par-three seventh, a 167-yard hole. Miller pushed his tee shot to the right, far off target. But the ball hit a tree trunk, caromed off a limb, dropped on the green and trickled within inches of the cup before running by some six feet.

Miller made the putt for a birdie where he could have easily taken a bogey.

Minutemen Dominate YC Football Squad

The University of Massachusetts, which won the Bean Pot with a 5-0 record in league play, dominated the All Yankees Conference offensive and defensive teams announced today following a vote of the lead coaches by placing nine men on the mythical twenty-two man team.

The Minutemen, who established a new conference scoring record by tallying 203 points in five games, placed six men on the offensive unit and three on the defensive platoon. Five players who were first team selections a year ago were again honored for their play this fall. These included New Hampshire's Gerry Moran and Don Miller as well as Maine's Dave Paul and UMass' Paul Metallo on the offensive unit and Connecticut safetyman Brian Herosian on the defensive squad.

Ouellette, Coburn All-League

Senior Co-Captain Dave Ouellette and Sophomore Tom Coburn have been named to the 1972 Yankee Conference All-Star Soccer team for their outstanding play this year.

Ouellette was selected to the first team as a defensive back for the second consecutive year. Coburn, who tallied 11 goals during the season, made the team for the first time as a lineman.

All the conference teams were represented by at least one player with the exception of Maine. UNH led with three selection, UMass, URI and UConn followed with two each, while Maine and BU each had one pick.

Yes, It Was An "Emotional High"

The Boston College Eagle, 1912-1972 — Neil Milden is a brother at Sigma Alpha Mu. During the football season and for the past four years, Neil has doubled as a Reveler. And with his bottle of Tequila or Royal Crown, depending on Conference or non-Conference opponent, Neil is there to boost the field ego. And at the half Saturday, I hurried from the pressbox to see what he had to say, and although words could not in any way describe the catharsis, the fact that Neil picked me up off my feet and, with his bear hug, nearly broke my collarbone, well, it all but captured in emotion the saga of the death of the Eagle after sixty years of a less than pompous reign...

And as Neil demonstrated, it was emotion and not so much talent that paved the way for the most accomplished sporting event in the history of UMass sports. We all know what the victory meant to Alumni, recruiting, the Program, the Administration, and, oh yes, those two thousand high school recruits that AD Frank McInerney invited to the Stadium. But to realize most of all what plucking crow meant to that football team, you have to explore the "emotional high" that pervaded the contest.

While 99.2 per cent of the campus spent Thanksgiving Dinner with their loved ones, there were some holdovers in Amherst. You've heard all fall about the "football family" propaganda, well, if you didn't buy it then, you might as well swallow it now. For it was just such a family setting that this gifted coaching staff has set all year that really all but destroyed Boston College Eagle "emotionally" as well as physically. And it was emotion and an all but unexplainable drive that captivated the subconscience of the Minutemen that enabled the smaller host to actually beat up the Mouth of the Commonwealth.

Mac really didn't think Thanksgiving Dinner together had that much affect on the game. But I'm sure he won't deny that it was a factor in the emotionalism.

Oh, if I could only get behind the minds of Mullen, Cummings, Metallo, Queeney, and the rest. Well, without a doubt, I could have predicted a 28-7 verdict. I would have been elated but surprised, I don't think it would have shocked the Minutemen, at least not one-tenth as much as it did the administrators and obsequious critics that talk BC football language at the Hill. For at this moment they've probably just finished cleaning out their wallet in their cocky, confident jest over their Marangi-Briggs-Esposito pyramid that was to teach New England football a lesson at Alumni on Saturday.

No matter what Mac said, I still think that the football family grew with leaps and bounds far outside of any level that BC expected. And to reserve free safety Pat Brady, an ex-BC High star, the win and the sharing together at Thanksgiving meant a little bit more.

Pat told the truth when he said, "While we were up here practicing, they were home, didn't work out that day, and they all went back to their high school rivalries and got pictures in the papers. But we were ready for them."

And right you were, Pat. You know, I almost hate to say it, but in my opinion, with conditions the way they were, yes, believe it or not Eagle-ettes, the University of Vermont left us with more doubt.

And although the skies over Bison Country a month ago were rather gray and tear-filled, and it got stormier in Worcester, the Minutemen came back in a flurry. And on a clear November day with the sun and the brandy warming the hears of Metawampee's best throng since the Sands Creek Massacre, a killing of a different nature took place, and clearly the nation realized who has what to say in N.E. (New England) major college football circles.

And even Warren McQuirk could say nothing and needed not the following to win. He may have been a "Screaming Eagle" captain in 28 but 37 years later he helped build this Stadium. And that day the proud Minutemen lifted the former Administrator off his feet and although Warren has reached many heights especially in his 23 years of decadence at State, that day at the Stadium he was personally perhaps higher than he has ever been before.

Yeah, that emotional high touched everyone from the Bartley's to the Bromery's and one guy who really got a kick out of it was dear Charley Safron, voted the University's finest equipment manager following the BC debacle. And to see Charley hoisted in the lockerroom, you know that the guy who packed the bags for the first modern BC game in 66' had to be a bit proud. And if you looked hard enough you could find a slow tear.

But with Dick Cummings and Tom Mullen and for that matter co-captain Marie Romanus, you didn't have to look too hard for a reaction from that emotionalism. You had to duck their tears, they were that free.

And the celebrating went long into the night and I imagine Nifty Neil whose awaited four long years for this and other Alumni that have witnessed at least a decade of degradation, were there first in line at the Pub afterward. And even Greg Landry got back to Kappa Sig to share it with fraternity men of old and new consequence who felt the bite of the Eagle in poorer times.

It took 60 years to get it done but they'll be talking about it 60 years hence. And if you get stuck in Boston at either the City Club or condescending Katies and you need an excuse strike up a friendly conversation with a BC jacket, be proud, for that's what it's all about....

C.C. Wares Tables Center Of Controversy

By BOB SCHEIER

The 30 tables in the Student Union-Campus Center complex at which goods are sold have become the center of a bitter controversy over whether manufactured goods should be sold along with student-made goods.

Persons selling "craft goods" (those made by students) at the tables say the manufactured goods cheapen the atmosphere of the area and are in unfair competition with the student-made goods.

Several persons selling manufactured goods say an attempt to change the rules under which they are allowed to sell in a limited area of the campus center-student union complex is an attempt to monopolize business during the pre-Christmas period.

The attempted rules change came in a motion last night before the Interim Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors, to set up a guild to determine whether the selling of manufactured goods conflicted with the selling of craft goods.

Consideration of the motion was delayed until the first meeting of the permanent board of governors, which is expected to take the place of the interim board next Thursday.

Currently, according to Bill Staton, who is in charge of the tables in the complex, there are 25 tables selling craft goods in the concourse area and five tables selling manufactured goods in other areas of the complex.

Manufactured goods--such as mass-produced jewelry or rugs--are currently sold in such areas as just outside the Hatch by the pinball machines and the lobby stairs. Under present rules, they can be sold there, but not on the concourse.

Hand-crafted goods, such as student-made candles or jewelry, are allowed to be sold in the concourse area itself.

One seller of manufactured goods--Larry Singleton--said some of those persons selling in the "student made" section of the concourse were actually selling manufactured goods.

Singleton said that the existing rule should be enforced instead of changing the rules for the entire complex.

However, he said, some "idealistic" craft people who were genuinely interested in promoting craft goods had been used by other sellers who were interested in "monopolizing the complex"--particularly in the profitable pre-Christmas season.

He also said he had been harassed by these people, who he declined to name. Among the alleged harassment had been thefts from his table and theft of the table itself during the night, he said, requiring him to lose business hours while setting up.

Angry arguments over the selling of manufactured goods along with student-made goods and the resolution developed outside the board of governors meeting room while the board considered other matters.

Many blacks saw the issue as racial, with most of those supporting the manufactured goods selling and most white supporting the crafts goods sellers.

Singleton, who is black, said the issue was "Economic first and racial second," adding those interested in monopolizing the trade were "a clique of students, and blacks are not a part of it. I think that answers the question."

The motion, presented by Bill Staton, who is in charge of the tables for the campus center, was to start a "Craftsman's Guild" to determine what were "crafts goods" and where they should be sold in the complex.

A two-thirds negative vote of the guild, which would be made up of one representative each from all those selling, could keep a student concern from selling. All the decisions could be appealed to the Campus Center Board of Governors for a final decision.

There were also questions from some of those representing student-made goods about whether Staton's motion represented their views.

Among the questions the guild might handle were whether hand-made goods not made by a student could be classified as "craft goods."

Staton also said the guild might also rule on whether student-made goods should have precedence over mass- produced goods.

Some of the crafts goods advocates said some of those selling manufactured goods could sell them cheaper, and also said they could compete with stores in Amherst without having to pay the same overhead.

"Our price is lower; that's why your beef is up," said an unidentified advocate of the manufactured-goods sellers.

Campion Says No Campus Center Deficit

By STEVE SECHE

The Campus Center is "not operating with a deficit", according to Thomas Campion, Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services. It did, however, complete fiscal year 1972 realizing less than one-half of the $510,000 that had been budgeted as surplus funds.

This budgeted "surplus" is revenue gained by the various Campus Center agencies, which is then directed back into Campus Center funds. It is profit, the benefit of which is received by UMass students.

Meeting with MDC editors prior to last night's meeting of the Campus Center Interim Board of Governors, Campion and Campus Center Manager Terry Grinnan disputed a Collegian article which claimed that this surplus fund--over $232,000--was actually a deficit that threatened students with an increase in Campus Center tax.

According to Campion, the budget for fiscal year 1972 was based on "less than 5 months experience of operation by the Campus Center", and as a result, "estimates" had to be made concerning operating revenues and costs.

As a result, costs in the operation of the Campus Center arose that had not been anticipated, particularly in the areas of the University Store, Food Services, and Accommodations Services.

Still, Campion said, fiscal year 1972 showed an increased operating surplus of $58,000, over that of 1971, the Campus Center's first year of operation.

At the meeting of the Interim Board of Governors, the three areas that had not reached their budgeted surplus, in 1972 submitted reports and projections for fiscal year 1973.

Michael Egan, Director of Food Services in the Campus Center said that the price freeze of July, 1971 had forced a price increase he had planned for September to be stalled until February, 1972. As a result, Egan said, he had to continue to pay increased food prices. Egan estimated that in the process, food services lost $82,500. Food Services, budgeted for a surplus of $100,600, completed fiscal year 1972 with an actual surplus of $3,600.

Grinnan presented the report of the University Store, whose actual surplus at the end of 1972 was $103,700 less than anticipated. According to Grinnan, the store failed to realize $38,000 as a result of a Federal HEW directive they received two months after the budget was drawn up. The directive, indicated a pay raise of 6% for hourly (part-time) personnel. The budget had only called for a 4% raise.

There is also, Grinnan said, an outstanding loan of $120,000 to the student store at UMass, Boston, which was to be paid in yearly installments of $40,000 for the first two years, and $20,000 and $10,000 for the following years. At present, however, UMass Boston is unable to repay the loan while they continue to negotiate student taxes in anticipation of their move to Boston's Columbia Point section.

The Accommodations Services, whose surplus was nearly $100,000 lower than budgeted, was faced this summer with an occupancy much lower than the 55% it had anticipated, according to Manager Donald Witkoski. The Campus Center hotel's projections had been based on conferences planned by the Continuing Education department, many of which, Campion had said, earlier, were never held.

Campion is optimistic about the budget for fiscal year, 1973. "It was drawn up with more than one year's experience", he said, and involved a much better "quality of judgement" than had been possible in 1972.

Ital. Personnel Committee Hears Students

The Markle Foundation of New York has announced a $45,252 grant to UMass for a survey and evaluation of New England daily newspapers.

The survey is co-sponsored by the New England Daily Newspaper Association, the New England Society of Newspaper Editors and the regional chapter of Sigma Delta Chi, the professional journalism society.

The research project, to be known as The New England Daily Newspaper Survey, will be the first systematic evaluation of a significant number of newspapers, 106 dailies, ever conducted in the United States.

Loren Ghiglione, editor and publisher of The Evening News of Southbridge, Mass., will direct the survey and serve on the University's faculty as a visiting professor. Ghiglione directed last year's Massachusetts Daily Newspaper Survey, an evaluation of 41 of the state's 45 dailies. Prof. Howard M. Ziff, director of journalistic studies at UMass, will act as associate director of the survey.

Twelve experienced journalists will be responsible for collecting the survey data and writing evaluatory essays on each paper. They will conduct interviews at the papers under review and study issues over a one-month period.

The evaluators will gather a great deal of factual material not otherwise available: proportion of news-editorial copy to advertising, wire services and other syndicated material used and its proportion to locally-generated copy, the staffing patterns of the newspapers, the proportion of national, state and local news printed, and the extent of State House coverage.

The team of evaluators is now being formed with the project scheduled to begin in January. Three evaluators already have been chosen. They are:

UMass Gets Newspaper Study Grant

By JIM DEMPSEY

Dean Jeremiah Allen of the College of Arts and Sciences and Associate Provost Zina Tillona met last night with several students from Italian courses to outline the action taken on the cases of seven Italian professors this year before the personnel committee of the French-Italian department.

The discussion centered on procedural processes used in such cases and the criteria used for recruitment, reappointment, and tenure.

Tillona, who is also Associate Chairman of the French-Italian Department, said three of the professors received negative recommendations from the department on renewal of their contracts.

Another three of the professors, who have all requested anonymity, received positive recommendations from the committee to be rehired, which is the first step in the re-appointment and tenure process.

The seventh professor-Ms. Tillona-has tenure.

Dean Allen said all six cases have passed from him to a higher level of appeal.

Allen said a recommendation for re-appointment or dismissal starts with the personnel committee of the department, after which each professor is notified on the decision, and invited to submit material relevant to his case.

The personnel committee then reviews the case, reaching a decision on the basis of three criteria: teaching, scholarship, and service.

Each professor is required to have extensive training in the Italian language and its literature, and have earned his PhD by the time he is hired. In the professor have completed his PhD. It was often "understood" that it would be completed within the year. Allen pointed out that this will be more strictly enforced in the future.

The department personnel committee's recommendation is passed on to Dean Allen's advisory committee of the faculty of Humanities and Fine Arts. Dean Allen then reaches a decision based on their advice and the case goes on to the Provost's office.

Because Zina Tillona is currently the Associate Provost, on a part-time basis, as well as a member of the Dean's Committee, and the Associate Chairman of the French-Italian Department, the students felt that there was a conflict of interest.

Tillona replied to this question, saying that "The only time I participate in any Italian personnel action is on the departmental level."

The students raised the question of student input in these decisions. As it stands now, the Italian Department personnel committee is made up of six faculty members and one teaching assistant.

A motion to include undergraduates on this committee was voted down last year by the faculty members of the French-Italian Department.

Italian majors have been allowed in the past to sit in on interviews, evaluate professors' records and offer their opinions in an advisory capacity.

The Italian students went on to propose the formation of an Undergraduate Personnel Committee to have some say in future faculty decisions.

Allen told them that they must first convince the Italian Department of the merit of their idea. He indicated that the students must then organize themselves as a constituency and make their issues known.

Another question raised by the students concerned the chances of forming a Five-College Italian Program.

It was felt that such a pooling of resources might save the faltering programs at Smith and Mount Holyoke as well as increase the number of areas that could be covered by the additional faculty at UMass.

Allen indicated that the idea "looked awfully good on paper." However he added that "One of the main problems is the each school has a different set of grievance procedures and review processes." The idea is not feasible at this time, Allen said.

3rd World To Hear Bromery Speech

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery will be addressing the Third World Community tomorrow. It will be held during the Third World Alliance meeting, at the School of Business Administration in auditorium #120 at 8:00 P.M. sharp.

This is an extremely important meeting. It will be the first time in the History of this University that a Black Chancellor will be addressing the Third World Community.

Every brother and sister on this campus should compel each other out of a sense of responsibility, to attend this meeting.

Klein Endorses Richardson In Mount Holyoke Speech

By BILL DENSMORE

White House Director of Communications Herbert G. Klein spoke last night at Mt. Holyoke College. Among his comments was an endorsement of newly appointed Secretary of Defense Eliot W. Richardson as a man who "has a reputation for getting things done."

Klein also reiterated his feelings about a federal "shields law" to protect journalists from revealing confidential sources when under examination by a court. He spoke Monday and yesterday on NBC-TV's "Today Show" in favor of state shield laws and noted that reporters start "cooling off" when faced with serving a jail term.

While Klein said that he wouldn't "attempt in any way to preclude the announcements which the president himself will make on the structure of the cabinet", he added later that the "guiding principle" behind the reorganization was one of change.

Klein agreed in part that "we hadn't had sufficient progress in the areas of health, education, and welfare" during the last Presidential term. But he added that although welfare and health plan bills had encountered opposition in Congress, the administration would continue to push for welfare reform and it was "not the fault of the Secretary of HEW" that the plans were not enacted.

Klein recalled that steps toward government regionalization had been taken in the last three years with the moving and reorganization of ten new federal districts under the supervision of a federal board. He predicted that the administration "will make a new effort to have special revenue sharing passed" during the coming term, and called decentralization "the trend of the future."

In response to a question about water pollution legislation, Klein stated that "we've made more progress on improving and conserving the ecology itself in the last four years than in the entire 200 years of the country before that time."

With Klein for a press conference before the speech was Lieutenant Governor Donald Dwight. Klein said that he was most concerned that he meet the Lt. Governor during his visit to Massachusetts and praised Dwight for his effort to re-elect President Nixon in Massachusetts. He said that he was pleased that Nixon had done as well as he did in Massachusetts.

Another person asked Klein to comment on recent movements toward totalitarianism in Chile. "I think what you want to look at is that the United States ought not to tell each country the form of government they should have. And we would prefer to have them all as free and democratic societies but not all of these countries are going to be in our image and I don't think it's our duty to impose our own image on those governments."

Athletic Council Explains Fee

By BRIAN COYNE

The Rents and Fees Committee, at a meeting last night in the Norfolk Room of the Student Union, heard reports from members on the Athletic Council and the on-campus telephone situation, and were visited by a representative of the local state employees union.

The committee had also hoped to have a discussion with residence area directors and business managers concerning more efficient ways of distributing money among the dormitories. No area directors attended the meeting, limiting the discussion to three business managers in attendance.

A possible reason given for the absence of area directors was that they might not have received the letters inviting them to the meeting before yesterday. The committee planned to invite them again for a meeting next week.

Bob Campbell, Operational Manager for residence halls and formerly Business Manager for Central and Northeast areas, mentioned the possibility of establishing small Rents and Fees committees for each residential area. He said that it would help in the decentralization of student government. He is hoping for some response from the area directors.

It was also mentioned during the meeting that all the areas except for Central now have some kind of finance committee whose goals could be redefined to include those of the Committee.

Campbell is hoping the Area Directors will go to their residents and find out what they need. He said he wants to alleviate the problems in the dormitories, but little can be done under the present format. Some type of organization affiliated with areas is essential, he said, as a legitimizing factor in deciding the appropriation of money.

John O'Connell, Business Manager for Southwest, said his area is facing serious problems, such as tightening security measures and improving the heating efficiency in the towers. He is also receiving requests from individuals and floors for paint and other supplies. A committee, he said, would be able to establish priorities and allow him to distribute the money.

The matter will be more extensively discussed when the committee gets the opportunity to meet with the area directors.

In other business, the committee voted unanimously to recommend the proposal to go before the Student Senate concerning the transfer of the Student Activities staff account from the Campus Center to the Senate.

Denise Roberge presented a report to the committee on the Ahtletic Council. It contained the Council's explanation of the student Athletic Fee.

The Council wished to allay any suspicion that the money only goes to pay for the football ticket coupons the student receives at registration. Actually, they said, the student's thirty dollars is used to support the entire athletic program of which football is only a small part.

The athletic program is supported by many different sources, including the state, ticket sales and road guarantees, vending machine proceeds, scholarship trust funds, and from the New England Patriots for the use of the training facilities.

Also on the agenda was a report explaining the student telephone arrangement. The report said that the present situation was the most economical since the university receives discounts from the telephone company for providing its own directories and directory assistance. Because of this, the university can offer a lower fee to students than if the telephone company provided such services.

Jerry Gillespie, from the state employees union, was present to offer the union's stand on students working at the university. He said the union is not opposed at all to student workers, provided they are not taking jobs from union members.

To be specific, Gillespie said that the union this year is opposed to hiring students as janitors, since the state just reduced the number of janitors and this could be seen as hiring cheap labor at the expense of the union workers.

CEW Helps Women Adjust To College

By BARBARA VOORHEES

How do you decide what courses to take? How do you read for course work and how do you write papers? How do you deal with a bureaucracy?

Women returning to school after years at home don't have the skills to deal with these problems. Pat Sackrey, Director of Continuing Education, for Women (CEW), hopes, in collaboration with other women's groups on campus, to provide advice and answers for these women.

Ms. Sackrey, who was appointed in September, said that a separate Division of Continuing Education was needed for women because, "Right now the needs of women are still being defined and shown to be legitimate. It will be a long time before we can assume that these needs will be met routinely and within the regular university structure."

The CEW recently helped set up Everywoman's Center, a collaborative effort between CEW, Community Development and Human Relations, and the University's Counseling Center, in Munson Hall.

The Center works together with the Southwest Women's Center, and other women's organizations across the state. It is also helping in the planning of a Women's Center for the Central Residence Area.

Everywoman's Center provides a place for women returning to school to meet other women in the same position. It also provides extensive counseling service for all women at the University. It is associated with the Anti-Rape Action group and with organizations working against sex discrimination on and off campus.

The Center is also involved in the setting up of an organization for all non-professional women on campus.

"The women in the Project Self workshops join together to learn about their history: what woman's image was in the past and what it is now. This helps them to understand why they feel the way they do about themselves. Understanding this, women can begin to change themselves and their place in society," Ms. Sackrey said.

Project Self is open to all women. Workshops ranging from the study of "Prostitution" to "Tae Kwon Do", a form of self-defense, are offered.

About one third of the women now enrolled in Project Self courses are single parents on welfare. Child care is provided for women attending the workshops.

Ms. Sackrey, a member of the Feminist Studies Committee, said that she would like to see Project Self become an experimental ground for women's courses. She said that she hopes an experimental women's curriculum will be developed in the University by next fall.

Ms. Sackrey said that in the future she would like to set up a scholarship fund for women returning to school. She would also like to bring women with unusual backgrounds to the campus.

Howland Available For All Hassles

By CAROLYN CALDWELL

For about 97 hours a week Attorney Dick Howland is kept busy counseling students. He deals with many problems such as criminal matters, landford-student relations, student rents and domestic relations.

"Perhaps my primary function is to perform preventive legal service," Howland said. "My purpose is to solve problems before they become catastrophes."

Howland holds office hours daily from ten to four "to see any students on any legal hassles. I am willing to help with problems even when they are not really legal."

Howland said that many problems such as roommates who deal dope, relations with wife and husband and legal retaliation are best dealt with when the problem is not a catastrophe.

"The problem is students who don't call before they are desperate," Howland said. "An appointment is not needed."

A student in need of emergency legal counseling can reach Howland anytime day or night at 256-8448.

Howland is also teaching a course on general legal principals in Project 10 and is busy on a brochure about "meeting legal hassles" to be available in the spring.

Howland graduated from Columbia University Law School and was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar in 1968. This is his third year serving as an attorney for UMass students.

Nixon Picks Richardson For Defense

CAMP DAVID, Md. (AP)--President Nixon launched his sweeping second-term Cabinet shakeup Tuesday by naming administration veteran Elliot L. Richardson to be the next secretary of Defense.

To succeed Richardson as the secretary of Healty, Education and Welfare, Nixon said he will nominate Caspar Weinberger who is now director of the Office of Management and Budget.

Completing a triple-header announcement, the President named millionaire industrialist Roy Ash, president of Litton Industries, to succeed Weinberger in the Cabinet-level OMB post.

The selections of Richardson and Weinberger are subject to confirmation by the Senate when it returns in January. Ash does not need Senate conifirmation.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, disclosing the personnel changes to newsmen, said:

"These three announcements come at a time when an intensive review is being undertaken of the entire government structure and they are part of the President's broad plan to bring fresh perspective and new vitality to the second four years of his administration."

There had been advance speculation that Richardson might be picked to succeed Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird, who disclosed weeks ago that he planned to resign at the end of Nixon's first term.

However, there had been equally persistent rumors that Richardson might become secretary of State, to head the department in which he served as undersecretary during the early part of the Nixon tenure.

Richardson, 52, has been HEW chief since 1970.

Long active in Republican politics in Massachusetts, the erudite Richardson was lieutenant governor and attorney general of that state in the 1960s.

Weinberger, 55, joined the Nixon team in 1970 as chairman of the Federal Trade Commission after serving as director of finance for Nixon's native state of California.

Like Richardson a Harvard graduate, he became deputy director of OMB when the agency was created on July 1, 1970, and aoved up to the top job last May when George Shultz became secretary of the Treasury.

Weinberger will be expected by Nixon to "bring about further efficiencies with HEW," Ziegler said.

Ziegler said Richardson also will have a mandate to try to slim down the Defense budget.

Ash, perhaps the least known of the trio of appointees, co-founded Litton Industries of Beverly Hills, Calif., in 1953 and has been its president since 1961.

Responding to inquiries, Ziegler said Ash will resign as Litton president Dec. 9 and would divest himself of his considerable stockholdings in the company.

During the first two years of the Nixon administration, Ash served as chairman of Nixon's Advisory Council on Executive Organization--a part-time job.

Richardson said at a Washington news conference "I would like to have had the opportunity to stay here at HEW longer" but Nixon's offer of the Defense post came as the latest in a series "that I have not been able to refuse."

He added that Nixon "convinced me that if I could survive nearly 2 1/2 years in HEW, I could probably get along at the Defense Department."

Richardson had nothing to say on his plans as Defense secretary and no questions on this subject were permitted.

Draft Call Ends At 95

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird announced Tuesday final draft calls of fewer than 20,000 men next year before military conscription is ended June 30 and the nation shifts to an all-volunteer force.

Laird said inductions will be spread over a five-month period between February and June with no one to be drafted in January.

Selective Service officials said those who would be called first would be young men with lottery numbers up to 95 in this year's pool who lost their deferments late this year. However, the law provides that they may be drafted only up to March 31.

Beyond that, the officials said those holding lottery numbers over 40 in next year's pool can consider themselves safe from the draft.

This year's draft callup totaled 50,000 for the entire year with lottery number 95 reached.

In announcing the draft call at a Pentagon news conference, Laird urged Congress to approve his plan to give enlistment and reenlistment bonuses to men and women signing up for the National Guard and Reserves. Without it, he said, Congress may have to pass a special law to draft men into the Reserves once the current Selective Service Act expires June 30.

"We will be able to make it as far as the regular forces are concerned," said Laird, but he added that problems remain for the Reserves which are to be relied on more heavily in the all-volunteer force.

Pentagon spokesmen said that Guard and Reserve forces are short about 55,000 men now and the shortages are expected to increase next year as fewer men are faced with the possibility of being drafted.

The Pentagon has proposed a $200-million package of incentive bonuses to try to attract doctors and other men with special skills. It won House approval but the Senate failed to act before adjournment last month.

Under the plan, men with critical skills could receive up to $2,200 for a six-year enlistment or reenlistment in the Reserves and men with noncritical skills up to $1,100.

Laird met with reporters shortly before President Nixon announced he will nominate Elliot L. Richardson, secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, to succeed Laird at the Pentagon.

In Brief...

Bombings Continue

SAIGON (AP)--While the Indochina peace talks appear headed for a critical showdown in Paris, U.S. bombers are heavily attacking North Vietnam both for political and military leverage.

Women's Lib May Damage Children

CHICAGO (AP)--A child care specialist from New Zealand says she fears the women's liberation movement's proposals for child care might lead to extended emotional illness among children left in day care centers.

Funds For Environment

WASHINGTON (AP)--The Nixon administration announced Tuesday it is releasing $2 billion for construction of municipal waste treatment facilities in fiscal 1973--40 per cent of what Congress has authorized.

The administration said $3 billion was being allocated for fiscal 1974, amounting to 50 per cent of the congressional authorization.

Water Supply Threatened

MARTELANGE, Belgium (AP)--A speeding chemical tank truck missed a bend in the road and burst open Tuesday, pouring 4,400 gallons of ethylene glycol into the Sure River, which supplies drinking water for most of Luxembourg.

Police said civil defense units and chemical and waterways experts were ordered to the scene in an effort to curb pollution of the river.

A technician at the Esch Sur Alzette dam in Luxembourg said the polluted water would take all night to reach the dam and its reservoir.

New Violence In N. Ireland

DUBLIN (AP)--A fresh wave of violence in Northern Ireland claimed four victims Tuesday and the Irish Republican Army threatened to extend guerrilla action, to Ireland proper in retaliation for the jailing of underground leader Sean MacStiofain.

The three-year death toll in Ulster now stands at 644.

IRA commandos launched rocket attacks in various areas of the North. But the British army said it foiled another assault in Londonderry in which the guerrillas were planning to use a large Soviet-made rocket for the first time.

Sale Of Soviet Bonds In U.S. Under Discussion

NEW YORK (AP)-First steps have been taken toward an unprecedented financial arragement in which the Soviet Union would raise capital from private investors in the West.

The goal would be an issue of Soviet government bonds to be sold in Western financial centers. It would mean an American or Western European could lend money to Russia and receive interest payments just as he would if he purchased a U.S. government bond.

The Soviet Communists have never before sought to raise money in capitalist countries from individuals.

The Russians have already discussed the possibility of a bond issue with a major American bond house.

The Russians have taken preliminary steps by helping sell bonds of their satellite countries in the West. Three banks and the brokerage house agree that these deals have been useful to the Russians in getting their feet wet in international financial waters. However, because the matter still is in a preliminary stage, none of those involved wanted to be quoted by name.

A major legal hurdle to the sale of a Soviet issue in the United States is the status of the old Russian imperial bonds, issued early in the World War I and still unpaid. Americans hold about $75 million worth of them.

American law forbids giving credit to countries in default on previous issues. However, the Russians claim the imperial bonds, issued before the Russian Revolution, are not a debt of the current government.

A problem which may be holding up a decision about selling bonds is how much money will be needed. It is considered poor practice to issue bonds too often, so the Communists may be waiting to see what delivery dates they can get on machinery and other purchases in the West. Then they could make a single sale of bonds to cover all their needs for a year or more.

Personality Profile

Richardson Known For Managerial Skills

WASHINGTON - Elliot L. Richardson, designated the new secretary of Defense Tuesday, has a reputation for managerial skills.

During his time as undersecretary of State and for the last 2-1/2 years as secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, he has preferred to work out of the public spotlight.

Born in Boston, a Harvard law school graduate, Richardson, 52, is a former lieutenant governor and state attorney general of Massachusetts.

At the HEW department with its 110,000 employes and myriad programs he took a firm grasp of minute details.

He had been mentioned as a possible second-term running mate alongside President Nixon and now is being touted in some circles as a presidential contender in 1976.

Richardson appears to be in tune with Nixon on the need to trim down the bureaucracy.

Richardson worked long hours on Capitol Hill in a last-ditch effort to win passage of welfare reform, called Nixon's No. 1 domestic program. But after winning a key compromise from Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D—Conn., a former HEW secretary, he saw Nixon refuse to budge.

Richardson's public image at news conferences is one of stiffness and formality, with adroit circumlocution when he doesn't feel free to speak on an issue.

At the start of World War II he was turned down for military service because of poor eyesight.

So Richardson memorized the eye chart and got into an Army uniform, but another physician reversed the chart and he was barred from combat duty.

After graduating from Harvard Law in 1947, Richardson began his government career as a law clerk to Judge Learned Hand of the Court of Appeals and to Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter.

He campaigned for and became an assistant to Sen. Leverett Saltonstall, R—Mass., in 1953-54 and was appointed as assistant secretary for legislation at HEW in 1956.

In 1969 President Eisenhower named him U.S. attorney for Massachusetts where he conducted probes of highway land frauds and organized crime.

Grand Jury Disbands; Popkin Leaves Jail

BOSTON (AP)-Harvard Prof. Samuel L. Popkin, freed Tuesday from a week in jail ordered because he refused to answer questions from a grand jury investigating the release of the Pentagon Papers, said grand juries in this country "have become the government's tool for gathering intelligence."

Popkin was released from the Norfolk County Jail in Dedham after a federal grand jury which has investigated the Pentagon Papers' release for most of this year disbanded in Boston without returning an indictment.

He said at a news conference that he still does not know for sure why he was called before the grand jury, and that many of the questions he was asked had nothing to do with what he thought the grand jury was about.

"We may be faced with as great a threat from the use of grand juries as was ever posed by Joe McCarthy," he said.

"There is an incredible bag of tricks that go along with grand juries in this country.

"With the grand jury as the instrument, the ability of scholars and journalists to provide citizens with information essential in a democracy may be threatened," Popkin told a news conference.

Popkin was jailed Nov. 21 on a contempt citation after he refused to answer 14 questions regarding information he had learned from sources in connection with the release of the once-secret Pentagon Papers.

He was scheduled to stay in jail until the grand jury expired Jan. 12. Popkin said at his news conference that he thought the grand jury might have been ready to disband earlier, "but they might have stayed in session long enough to make me go to jail."

Popkin said he did not think he proved anything by his week in jail that I had certain ethics and principles. And maybe I proved that grand juries need to be looked at in this society."

"If scholars and journalists cannot talk in confidence with officials, the 1st Amendment will protect nothing more than polemics and official handouts," Popkin said.

Popkin said that as a scholar, he considers himself part of a "free press--what's the difference between writing a book or a newspaper?"

Popkin said he will spend the remainder of this week "relaxing" and will resume teaching his classes at Harvard University next Tuesday.

U.S. Atty. James Gabriel said the grand jury was taken before U.S. District Court Judge Frank J. Murray Tuesday morning and the court was told that there would be no more evidence presented to the grand jury "between now and the time that it would naturally terminate." The termination date was January 12.

He said Popkin was automatically released at the time the grand jury was discharged.

Since the Popkin case is receiving national publicity, Gabriel said it is possible the publicity might hinder Ellsberg's chances of receiving a fair trial. The panel was discharged to avoid this, Gabriel said.

He said a new grand jury might be empanelled in Boston after the completion of the Ellsberg trial.

Daniel Klubock, an attorney for Popkin, said he had been informed by the U.S. attorney's office that the government would present no more evidence until the completion of the trial of Daniel Ellsberg, who is being tried on charges of releasing the secret documents concerning the United States involvement in Vietnam.

Helsinki Talks Near Policy

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) - Representatives of 23 nations agreed Tuesday to keep military alliances out of preparations for a conference on security and cooperation in Europe. This opened the way to major policy statements. The Soviet Union was slated to make the first Wednesday.

It took four days to agree on 10 rules of procedure. The toughest fight came when Communist Romania, with support from the United States and its allies, insisted on getting the rules to state that military alliances would be disregarded. The Soviet Union said this would be unnecessary.

It took 20 minute of informal consultations Tuesday morning to get this compromise text:

"These consultations will take place outside the military alliances."

Presented by the Romanians themselves, this language brought no objection from the Soviet Union or anyone else.

The delegates then went quickly through the remaining points.

They decided:

—All meetings are closed except as otherwise agreed and only representatives of the participating countries will be admitted.

—The 34 representatives will decide by unanimous consent what documents, if any, are to be made public officially. There was no limit put on the informal briefings from which reporters get virtually all their information.

—And changes in the rules are to be made by consensus.

It was also agreed that speakers would be heard on a first come, first served basis and the Soviet Union was the first to put its name on the list.

Delegates said they hoped most of the statements would be short, so that they could be finished this week.

Next week the delegates could get down to drafting the list of subjects for discussion at the conference proper, expected to start in June.

Voiceprint Hassle In Boston

By MARY E. THORNTON

BOSTON (AP) - Massachusetts has become the third state in the country to have voiceprints taken to be used as evidence against persons on trial. The first voiceprints were taken in court on Monday.

Judge James C. Roy ruled Nov. 13 in Suffolk Superior Court that seven of eight defendants on trial on gambling charges should be required to have their voices recorded for analysis as voiceprints.

One of the defendants, Vitello, 54, of West Roxbury, refused to furnish a voice and handwriting sample and may face prosecution for criminal contempt of court. He has been ordered to show cause next Monday in Suffolk Superior Court why he should not be found guilty of contempt.

The ruling upheld a motion by Dist. Atty. Garrett H. Byrne, who sought to compare the voiceprints of the defendants with those on 99 hours of wiretaps made by his detectives during an investigation of illegal gambling.

The defense appealed Judge Roy's ruling to the state Supreme Judicial court, and on Nov. 22, Justice Robert Braucher "refused to interfere" with Judge Roy's action.

According to Asst. Dist. Atty. Thomas Dwyer, the only other states which have allowed voiceprints and accepted them as admissible evidence are Minnesota and Florida. In addition, they have been accepted in courts in the District of Columbia and as corroborative evidence in military courts.

He said the New Jersey Supreme Court has ruled that the government can take voiceprints, but there has not been a trial yet to set a precedent of entering voiceprints as admissible evidence.

He said the New Jersey Supreme Court has ruled that the government can take voiceprints, but there has not been a trial yet to set a precedent of entering voiceprints as admissible evidence.

Dwyer said that Massachusetts has taken only the first step which allows the voice prints to be taken. He says the trial, which is scheduled for some time in January, will determine whether or not Judge Roy will accept the voiceprints as evidence.

In many states, Dwyer said, the main stumbling block to acceptance of the voiceprints has been a violation of the defendant's rights under the 4th or 5th amendment.

Students planning and who are eligible to move off-campus for the spring Semester, 1973, must fill out the necessary forms for the return of the Security Deposit at the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore Building.

Students eligible to reside off-campus are students who will be:

1. Married
2. Seniors (Class of 1973)
3. Commuting from the home of parents within a 40-mile radius of Amherst.
4. 21 years of age as of January 25, 1973

Students not covered by the above categories will be required to reside in a University residence hall and will be billed accordingly.

Students planning not to return to school next semester must inform the registrar of their intentions so that the Security Deposit can be refunded to them.

of "Freedom of Information" and other books about the press;

John R. Herbert, former executive editor of the Boston Herald Traveler, founder and first president of the Inter-American Press Association Technical Center and winner of the Maria Moors Cabot Award;

Forrest W. Seymour, former editor of the Worcester Telegram and Gazette and winner of the Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing.

In announcing the grant, Lloyd Morrisett, president of the Markle Foundation, said, "We believe that this project is a noteworthy continuation of the journalism profession's interest in maintaining high standards of performance."

Ghiglione, director of the survey, said, "The co-sponsorship of the New England evaluation by the region's three most prestigeous press organizations indicates a commendable willingness on the part of the area's newspapers to look at themselves critically, something that has not happened often enough in the U.S. press. We hope this evaluation will serve as a model for similar efforts elsewhere in this country."

The evaluation also is expected to provide a model for cooperation between the academic community and the profession. At least two of the region's journalism schools will collect data for the evaluation as part of their students' course work.

The final report of The New England Daily Newspaper Survey is scheduled for publication in late May, 1973.

The Little Man Does Have A Voice

WASHINGTON (AP) - A complaint from a 12-year-old schoolboy about a four-cent price increase on paint for his model airplanes resulted Tuesday in a $150,000 suit by The Justice Department against a hobby products manufacturer.

Filing of the action against Testor Corp. of Rockford, Ill., in U.S. District Court in Chicago was announced by the Cost of Living Council.

The complaint alleges that Testor increased its price on Pla Enamel on March 1, 26 per cent from 15¢ to 19 cents a jar and on Spray Pla Enamel 14 per cent from 69 to 79 cents a can on April 1 in violation of price control regulations under the economic stabilization program.

Testor's operations manager, Charles G. Miller, said the suit caught him by surprise. He said the firm has followed all of the Price Commission's prescribed guidelines for raising prices.

The increase was the first in the market price of its paint in 20 years, he said.

The action followed Internal Revenue Service investigation of a typewritten postcard complaint dated April 6 from John Malachowsky of West Baylon, N.Y.:

"The Price Commission Complaint Dept. Washington, D.C. Dear Sirs: I am making a formal complaint against THE TESTORS CORP.; Rockford, Ill. 61101 USA. They raised their "PLA ENAMEL" 30 per cent or from $.15 to $.19. This is only $.04, but being only 12-3/4 years old, this is a big strain on my allowance. Thank you. A CONCERNED CONSUMER! John Malachowsky."

The boy later explained that his purchases were in large quantities, eight or nine jars at a time, and that the price increase cut deeply into his $2 weekly allowance.

Belchertown Investigated

BELCHERTOWN, Mass. (AP) - The futile search for a resident of a state school for the retarded who died of exposure on the school grounds has stirred up parents' fears about the safety of their children living at the school, according to the leader of a group that touched off a state police investigation of the incident.

"I've had dozens of phone calls from parents who have expressed their concern over the safety the youngsters at the school," said Benjamin Ricci, president of the Friends of Belchertown. "They say they wonder if they should take their children out until the school is more safe."

Public Safety Commissioner John Keough ordered an investigation Monday into the death of Linda Buchanan, 25, who wandered away from her group at the school Nov. 19.

A state trooper joined the search about nine hours after it began and worked with Belchertown police and school employes. About three hours later, the search was suspended, and Miss Buchanan's body was discovered the next morning about 1,000 yards from the school buildings.

State Police Capt. Winthrop Doty said he conducted his own investigation of the search and felt the police "did the proper thing." He said the area of the search was swampy and difficult to walk through.

Ricci said Tuesday he wrote to Keough and Gov. Francis W. Sargent asking them to investigate the incident.

UMass Med School Error

BOSTON (AP) - A misunderstanding of the specifications for the $44 million University of Massachusetts hospital under construction in Worcester may cost taxpayers another million dollars a published report said Tuesday.

An article in the Boston Herald Traveler-Record American said officials had confirmed plans had been made to include a too-light material in ducts for heating and ventilation, but added no one is certain who will have to pay the difference for heavier material.

A spokesman for the medical school said the extra costs are uncertain and they do not know who will pay them-the engineers, the contractor, the architects or the state.

Patrolman Petitions Court

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Cambridge patrolmen Peter DeLuca-accused of using undue force in the arrest of a Cambridge youth who later died in a police cell-sought Tuesday to block a Friday hearing before the city manager.

A state medical examiner said Lawrence Largey, 17, died of an overdose of barbiturates and alcohol after being arrested Oct. 21 and charged with breaking a window at a housing project.

A private report based on a three-week investigation by Boston University Law Prof. Paul Liacos for City Manager John H. Corcoran said DeLuca used force "wholly unwarranted and without legal justification" in the arrest.

DeLuca's petition to the Middlesex Superior Court claims the release of the Liacos report before the findings of the official inquest, which ended Monday, prejudices his hearing before the manager.

He also claimed violation of his right to confront his accusers and to question witnesses who have made statements to be used at the hearings.

A hearing on the restraining order will be held in Superior Court Thursday.

Revenue Sharing

BOSTON (AP) - A taxpayer organization says Massachusetts will get the short end of the stick during the first year of revenue sharing.

The Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation says Massachusetts taxpayers will pay some $170 million into the program the first year, but the state and its cities and towns will receive only $163 million in return.

AMA Moves To Clean House

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — In an unprecedented move, the American Medical Association voted Tuesday to take strong action to protect the public against a "significant problem" of narcotic-dependence, alcoholism and psychiatric disorders among America's practicing physicians.

The recommendations approved Tuesday could ultimately lead to loss of licenses to practice by such doctors. But the AMA stressed that any disciplinary or other action would be in the "compassionate" interest of the doctors themselves, as well as protecting the public and the "reputation of the medical profession" as a whole.

The AMA's policy-making house of delegates opened the way for such action by putting the AMA on record as approving a set of guidelines to be followed by constituent state medical societies for "dealing with the problems of both the affected physicians and their patients."

The house, convening for the AMA's 26th clinical convention, opened a two-day voting session on more than 100 reports and resolutions concerned with AMA present and future policies.

Still to come is action on such other controversial issues as new Social Security legislation concerning "peer review" of Medicare treatment by doctors, and a call by the AMA's board of trustees for "fiscal restraint" throughout the AMA to prevent a possible membership dues increase sometime in the future.

But in other key actions so far, the AMA approved new steps designed to improve the attack against sickle cell disease, a malady that predominantly affects Negroes, and against the "epidemic" of gonorrhea in America.

Room Choosing Procedure

Billy Dean A 'Scapegoat'

Private Billy Dean Smith

"I've been sitting in pre-trial confinement, maximum security, for a long and lonely period of time. I was accused, charged, found guilty, and sentenced to death while I was still in Veitnam simply because I didn't have a puppet mind and I was a candid, outspoken individual. I had stated time and time again that I realized that the war in Indochina was unjust and racially motivated, and most of all I strictly hated all who had a high regard for the habitual butchery of the Vietnamese people.

"I've been digging these pigs carefully and I know that when my vindication comes, it shall be through the massive awareness of social justice, not through military injustice."

--Private Billy Dean Smith, before his fragging trial.

FORT ORD, California--Private Billy Dean Smith, the first GI charged with fragging his officers in Vietnam, walked along the sand dunes of Monterey. The 24-year-old black soldier from Watts needed one huge breath of fresh air.

He had spent the last 20 months under lock and key, undergoing a solitary ordeal which began on the other side of the Pacific Ocean at a United States Army base called Bien Hoa.

His case, which attracted international attention as the symbol of GI resistance to the U.S. military, ended in a resounding defeat for the Pentagon. In mid-November, a jury composed of seven career officers acquitted Smith of six charges, including the fragging deaths of two white lieutenants and the attempted murder of Captain Randall Rigby and First Sergeant Billy Willis, Smith's unit commanders at Bien Hoa, Vietnam.

While the press corps grumbled noisily over his decision not to answer questions from the floor, Smith went on to attack the Vietnam war.

"I am glad to be free," he said, "but I can't really be free until the war in Southeast Asia is over. The blood of six million Vietnamese has soaked the soil in that land."

Smith explained his prosecution as part of an effort to intimidate anti-war GIs and discourage the wave of fraggings which eliminated hundreds of unpopular officers in the final years of the massive U.S. infantry presence in South Vietnam.

"The Army needed a scapegoat and singled me out because I was an outspoken critic of the war and was not afraid to expose the racism of the Vietnam war," Smith told reporters.

He announced his intention of "dedicating the rest of my life to working for the freedom of all political prisoners everywhere." His own freedom will be somewhat limited by the one conviction sustained by the jury that acquitted him of six more serious charges.

In its single concession to the prosecution, the military tribunal held Smith guilty of kneeing and spitting on the officer who arrested him 90 minutes after the fraggings took place. For this one assault conviction, Smith will get bad conduct (dishonorable) discharge, which makes it very difficult to get a straight job. He will also lose all his back pay.

Grounds For A Coffee Boycott

NEW YORK (LNS) — If pressed to name the most important U.S. tie with the Portuguese colony of Angola, more people would probably mention the enormous oil investments of U.S. companies like Gulf Oil, than anything else. But U.S. imports of Angolan coffee, found on many U.S. breakfast tables, is an even more important financial support of Portuguese colonialism.

It is true that Gulf Oil has invested $150 million in the Cabinda section of Angola since the mid 60's, but in 1970 alone U.S. imports of Angolan coffee reached $75 million. It is estimated that at least $1 million of this is contributed directly to the Portuguese war efforts. And these imports not only help finance Portugal's colonial wars; they also reinforce the exploitation of Angola's 5.5 million blacks who, through a system of compulsory labor, do all the manual work on the coffee plantations for subsistence wages.

Angola is the fourth largest coffee producer in the world, accounting for 5.2 per cent of world coffee exports. The U.S. takes 15 per cent of this coffee with thirty per cent of the revenue going to the Portuguese government.

Portuguese law stipulates that every African in the Portuguese colonies must be able to prove employment. But since working a piece of land and living off its produce, the traditional subsistence for black Angolans, is not defined by the Portuguese government as a job, the law effectively forces Africans off their land and into the settler economy. Since 1964, in the coffee districts of Uige and Cuanza Norte, only 14 and 12 per cent respectively of the labor force came from those areas. The rest of the workers are forced migrants. Child labor is also used extensively since it costs the employers only 37 per cent of the wages for adults.

Cigarette Ads Move Into Sports World

NEW YORK (LNS)--If you recall how the cigarette companies moaned about their certain demise when Congress kicked them off radio and TV, you may be interested to know they're doing better than ever. In 1971 the tobacco industry managed to sell over 540 billion cigarettes, an all-time record.

More ironically, however, professional sports events have become the major means of advertising a product which the U.S. Surgeon General "has determined...is dangerous to your health." As if to combat the bad publicity of anti-smoking campaigns, as well as their ouster from the airwaves, ad agencies with cigarette accounts quickly increased their efforts to identify with the healthy world of sport. They found that they could get their cigarette's name on a race, or a game, or a whole tournament by offering the right amount of prize money. In the process, the companies get an implied endorsement from the athletes who compete for their prizes.

The Winston Awards have sweetened the pot for rodeo contestants by more than $100,000 this year, and the Winston-Salem Company is also offering about half a million dollars to the winners of several professional bowling tournaments. Then there's the Marlboro Tennis Open and the Raleigh Golf Classic and many more. In auto racing, where the cigarette sponsors have really moved in, drivers chase after prize money from the Camel Cup series, the Winston Cup, and the L & M Continental Five Thousand series.

Bulldozing Landslide

President Richard M. Nixon, sitting on top of his mountain at Camp David, Maryland, made an unusual speech to the press about the coming four years at the White House.

He had the right idea when he talked about that which happens to a second term administration. He drew an analogy between a real landslide and his landslide victory: "When you think of a landslide, you are submerged by it and you also think in terms of a landslide pushing you downhill."

He also said something about the endorsement of the status quo:

"I do not consider the election of Nov. 7, 1972, despite the rather massive majority, to have been simply an approval of things as they were. I do not consider that election to have been an endorsement of the status quo."

It almost doesn't sound like Nixon.

In his speech he said, "What we are trying to do is find a way to make government more responsive to people..."

We accept his statements of Monday with cautious anticipation of a better government. However, Nixon is not so far above our suspicions that all this could just be a move on his part to placate the moderates and co-opt some more liberals. (Left-wing radicals are beyond his reach.) After all, his plans say that the government will be more responsive; that is not the same as declaring that the control of the government, especially the executive branch, will come more into the hands of all the people. We have now heard some of Nixon's philosophies; we will not hold our breath waiting for action and results from what might only have been hot air.

WHY DIDN'T I SAVE FOR A RAINY DAY? IT RAINED EVERY DAY OF MY LIFE!'

Extinction From Apathy

By TED PIETRAS JR.

Not only do we presently have to deal with our apathy, but with another four years of Nixon we have to deal with frustration and paranoia. Now it is almost two weeks since the murders of two students from Southern University and we see that there has been no noticable response from the universities. This is an indication of the reoccurring trend after this year's political and social delusions. This trend is of the deeply felt agony of hopelessness.

We rose to the invasion of Cambodia and the student killings in '70. We rose once again during the invasion of Laos. And again during the blockade of North Vietnam. But what happened with the recent murders of defenseless students? Why was there virtually no response by the university communities?

We saw how the press coverage of the first wave of student strikes made a lot of people sit back and think about what the war in Vietnam was all about. We saw with each additional strike, a greater and greater number of people who felt as we did about the War. McGovern rose on this massive wave of dissent. Optomism momentarily began to somewhat grow within us and for a change there were a few rushes of hope. For some reason things seemed to appear as though there would be some changes in a positive direction. But on the wake of the McGovern nomination and consequential wipe out we are left with our shattered delusions. This recent election burnt a lot of scars in the minds of the American electorate. Not only do we have to reconstruct the pieces but also try to alleviate a lot of newly developed prejudices against any leftist ideologies.

With the seemingly inevitable disposal of chairperson Jean Westwood this coming month by the conservative elements of the Democratic party, we will witness the end of an era which held a few glimmers of hope. We are not back at the start because there was never a start but just this temporary end. The lack of response to the recent murders represents the refound feeling of hopelessness which we now have to contend with. We realize what a re-elected President Nixon means to us all. A mass uprising a week after the election might have been responded to by Nixon as he did when 100,000 Anti-war demonstrators walked by his window or as he did when the 5,000 in the May Day Tribe were routed and thrown into detention camps. We are not sure who Nixon is, yet we know all too well!

So where do we go from here? Nixon's landslide majority isn't going to heed our leftist logical analysises, so what do we say? Probably more action and less verbalizing during these next few rebuilding years. Southern U. should awaken us to the realization of our own plight. We have to go out to our communities where ever they may be and organize around specific issues at the grass roots level. "We must cultivate our own gardens". We must first try to demonstrate to the people by our activities what we've been writing and talking about. If these actions begin to materialize we must attempt to tie these issues into a wider perspective of society which is an eduational process. There will be the need of a movement, an organization through which we can tie our specific efforts together whether it be the Democratic party or (hopefully?) something else. It will take time to rebuild and gains will come in small increments but with Nixon in office we have no viable alternative! "The death of democracy is not likely to be an assassination from ambush but rather will be a slow extinction from apathy, indifference, and undernourishment."

Just Passin' Through

By BILL MOREAU

Have you ever seen the Connecticut River valley in western Massachusetts at this time of year? Amazing. The approach to Amherst, home of the University of Massachusetts (UMass), is a truly striking sight. It's undoubtedly the most beautiful natural scene of my trip thus far.

UMass has been called "a hotbed of apathy." Several of the students with whom I talked were well aware of this dubious title and most admitted that it was true. No one, however, was able to give me a cause. I have some reasons of my own.

I think I made a real mistake in being at UMass over a weekend. I was almost partied to death. It's a definite cinch that one can find a party going on somewhere at any time, day or night. This might lead to an apathetic (also stoned or hungover) student body.

The phenomenon called "Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) is another contributing factor to political apathy at UMass. There are about 380 special interest groups ranging from the "Swinging Singles Club" to the "Krishna Consciousness Bakaktyoka Society."

I was completely unimpressed with the UMass academics, which operate on the same archaic and dogmatic lines as Purdue's. UMass is completely out of step with the trend toward the pursuit of learning rather than conditioning.

One of the biggest gripes I heard from students was a dissatisfaction with having to take 15 hours of credit per semester in order to get out in four years. They said that very few courses carried more than three credits.

UMass is too much like Purdue for me to do much delving into academics. One side of UMass that I did explore was the "Residential College" concept. Taking Princeton's idea one step further, this system offers a number of experimental interdisciplinary courses to student residents. These courses change each semester, according to the interests of students and faculty.

The thing that impressed me most about the program was the intense student-faculty interchange born out of the mutual desire for relevance in the curriculum. The Faculty Fellows program is made up of some of the most concerned academicians I have met.

The Residential Colleges are addressing themselves to problems in the Amherst community as well. There have been programs involving the students with the campus labor force, juvenile delinquents and migrant workers, all of which brought the students into a living-learning situation.

"The main objective of these programs," said one of the administrators, "is to break down the institutionalized model of education that fosters a 'one age group-one perspective' atmosphere."

Another UMass institution that interested me was its "University Year for Action." It is "a full year, full time program whch offers the student significant work opportunities attacking poverty in connection with community agencies and at the same time allows the student to gain normal college credit during the time of service."

The program is sponsored by ACTION and is backed by almost every school of the university. The students work in assigned "underprivileged areas" in western Massachusetts. Said one ex-Actioner, "The University, in the long run, intends for us to become more than 'doers,' to become 'mobilizers' who get others in the community to serve part time."

UMass has a very strong student senate. "We don't plan on going to the national conferences anymore," said the student body president, "because we always end up running the instruction . " tting nothing in turn."

I was culturally inundated while at UMass, being able to hear the great vibist Gary Burton for a buck. But Isaac Asimov and Gahan Wilson didn't cost me a cent.

Letters To The Editor

Towing Questioned

To The Editor:

On November 11, 1972, I walked out of Goodell Library, the place of my employment, and what do you suppose, my car had disappeared. Luckily one of my co-workers, James Reddy, had not left yet, so I told him my problem.

We went down to the Police Station, where they told us that my car had been towed from the Music BBuilding area. Apparently a complaint had been made that I had blocked the entrance exit to the building. My car, the policeman told me, was at Puffer's Garage in North Amherst.

Jim and I went there and as we walked into this dimly lit room, I felt as though I had committed the crime of the century. There were snickerings and practically laughing in my face. I was told that the cost of towing was $17.00. To me $17.00 is a lot of money, and I usually don't carry that much with me especially on a Thursday. I asked the lady, if she would accept a check? She said, "no". Fortunately, Jim had the money on him and paid the lady. When I went to get into my car, a $5.00 ticket was tied to the door handle, making the entire amount totaling $22.00.

The next day I went to my Supervisors, Miss Conrad and Mr. Talbot, whom all sympathized with me. I also went to see Mr. Turner, the Head of Security, who said, he would investigate. Around 10:00 that morning, Mr. Turner came to me and said, I was to go over to the Police Station and talk to a Lt. Swartz.

So I did, and when leaving parking lot 5, I deliberately looked and there were four cars blocking the entrance exit to the Music Buildings. I told this to Lt. Swartz, and stated that he better call up his tow trucks, and tow four more cars. Lt. Swartz said he'd investigate. Later, I again checked the Music Building area and the entrances were still blocked. Apparently no action was taken. Mr. Turner called back around 3:00 that afternoon and Lt. Swartz revolked the ticket. So tell me, am I right or wrong? If I was wrong, why did he take the ticket back, just to shut me up?

I ask you

1. Why couldn't they call me at work and ask me to move my car? They had to call a garage. They do have my name, telephone number, decal number, and department of employment at the Police Station.

2. What if James Reddy had dropped me off at Puffer, knowing I had my checkbook with me, and left. I would have been stranded there not knowing that they do not cash checks.

3. I think there should be signs right there at the entrances, at least if one did park there, one would know he was at fault.

4. If I was wrong, once again, why was the ticket taken away? Common sense tells a person if the ticket is taken away one is not guilty, right? Why am I still out $17.00? Doesn't the University have a fund they can deduct their mistakes?

I have been parking in lot 5 for approximately 5 years, in all this time, I have had no knowledge of cars being towed from the area of the Music Buildings.

Late Shuttle

To The Editor:

I, together with numerous other students have been left "out in the cold" by the Student Senate Bus Service. I live in Southwest and have an 8:00 A.M. class in Hasbrouck so the bus is handy on cold or rainy mornings, that is when it shows up. Unfortunately, the bus is usually so late that it would be impossible to be on time for class or it doesn't arrive at all. At many other times and stops, busses for which I have waited have failed to show up and busses that are several minutes late seem to be the rule rather than the exception.

I realize that the new traffic light by the Grad Research Center is a convenient excuse to be late but there is no reason to be so late that the busses cannot be used as an efficient and reliable form of transportation to classes. Either reschedule the routes, reroute the busses, get more punctual drivers, or scrap the whole system since in my opinion it is far worse to wait for a bus that never comes than to know its not coming and walk in the first place!

'Sexist' Uncle

To The Editor:

This is in reply to Tuesday's letter by J. Arthur Gorham III. He considers his niece one of the fortunate ones because "her long brown limbs and tender bosom will not be despoiled by some lusting lout out for a cheap night's adventure." As a woman, I consider this a terribly naive and sexist attitude. Women have enough trouble being accepted as equals in this society without opinions like his being expressed. Didn't it ever occur to Mr. Gorham that women possess just as much, if not more, sex drive as men? Or does he feel that libido is an entirely male privilege?

Human sexual expression is a natural physical-response pattern, like breathing or bladder or bowel function, except that it can be controlled until an appropriate time and place presents itself. Unrealistic restraints on sex conditions people to avoid it and fear it even when it is appropriate. This negative conditioning contributes to the multiplicity of sexual distresses suffered by an estimated 50 per cent of married people and many others.

Furthermore, if Mr. Gorham's niece doesn't feel any sex drive now, I would like to know when she thinks the miraculous change will take place? On her wedding night? When "Mr. Right" comes along? She'll probably be so busy worrying about the despoilment of her tender bosom that she'll fail to recognize him. For this poor woman, sex is dirty; sex is rape. She may end up on an analysts couch trying to find out why she can't enjoy sex no matter how hard she tries. I consider this woman one of the unfortunate ones.

Also, if I was a man, I would resent being called a "lusting lout."

Ali Rhyne

P.S. This letter is written with the assumption that J. Arthur Gorham III is correct about his niece's sexual attitudes.

Editorial Points

The Budgets Committee of the Student Senate last night agreed to fund the Collegian after Chairman Paul Doran called it a "rag" (in jest). Either the committee is really stupid for funding a "rag" or the Collegian folks are really slick talkers. We tend to think it's a little bit of both.

Why on earth was a TV put in the Music Room of the Campus Center? So the conventioneers wouldn't be bothered by it? Who takes priority around here anyway? Or was it just another stroke of brilliance by the people in charge?

Subsidized Education

To The Editor:

The students at UMass are faced with problems. One of the biggest problems is financing education here. Those who have tried to find a decent job have found it to be next to impossible. The problem becomes twice as acute for those with children to take care of. First of all, they are forced to go on Welfare in order to support their family. If they do find a job, they have to spend $200.00 to $700.00 a year for babysitters or nursery. But, if they try to get an education they cannot also keep a job. This is their second problem. How do they pay for an education, babysitter, attend school and hold down jobs after school, which also requires another babysitter bill? The Welfare system does not offer a good education system. The education system does not offer them any financial assistance.

The easiest solution to this problem, would be for the education system to offer aid to the Welfare participants. I would suggest that the University waive the tuition for those students with children on Welfare. This would alleviate the problem of paying for both education and child care because the set amount allotted for a family of three is $240.00 per month. This has to cover food, clothing, shelter, and an education if the person wants to better himself, in order to get off the Welfare role permanently. The tuition costs have defeated the purpose of staying on Welfare wholly for four years, in order to qualify for a position that does not have to be subsidized permanently by Welfare. I would like all those who are on Welfare and faced with this problem to let me know how they feel about this suggestion. Please contact me at 549-0899, and we can set this plan in motion.

Towing Season

To The Editor:

By the end of this week, the IAFOBMyCaWaTo Chowder and Marching Society will reopen its gates in North Amherst at the Amherst Towing Company site. The Society has had a checkered career beginning with the Newman Center Riots several years after the introduction of the horseless carriage into Massachusetts.

Founded by a part-time graduate student in Botany who resided in downtown Amherst, the "I Am Pissed Off Because My Car Was Towed Chowder and Marching Society" commiserated at weekly meetings held in an open field in mid-winter. Members walked to the meetings barefoot as a pentitential devotion. Coffee was served until it iced over.

Early on, the membership counted only horseless carriage owners who parked their chariots in the way of the fire wagons or abandoned them in ruts left by the Spring thaw. As New England grew with the carbon monoxide revolution new ordinances were created to deal with the associated problems. It became illegal to graze cattle in the center of town and later there was a ban on feeding your horse at North Pleasant and Main Streets after a snowstorm. The membership swelled and chilled bagels were added to the weekly feast.

Then it came to pass in the time of the Aggie that the horseless carriage was banned from parking in any town way or highway between December 1 and April 1. Many cars came to the town and finding no room at the Inn picked just any old manger in the town for their overnight sojourn. The beckoning white lines and empty meters lured many wayfaring beasts to their doom. And the membership of IAPOBMyCaWaTo Chowder and Marching Society grew by frosty leaps and icier bounds.

The Commonwealth provided that the Towing Company should charge every beast $15.00 for the trip and $2.00 for grain and membership dues were hard to raise. The poor tow man had no say in who was towed and couldn't even refuse to pull his best friend's chariot from in front of Quicksilver at 2:00 a.m. (which is the witching hour).

And so it was that every car left grazing on every town road and highway overnight (which means 2:00 a.m.) went to the North Amherst meeting and no cars were left in Amherst and it was good.

It would be a great boon to the Commonwealth if there was a nickel paid for every person reading this who nevertheless parks downtown at night and has his or her car towed during snow season.

Bet you can't eat just one!

'Gifted' Alcoholic

To The Editor:

I am writing this in total seriousness. Today in your publication appeared an item deploring the use of, and citing the dangers of, great quantities of alcohol. I personally resent this greatly. What do you know? What "alcohol problem"? Who can judge what is a drinking problem or who is a problem drinker? You give an example phrase "Well, my friend is a drunk, but he doesn't have a drinking problem." You go on to imply that the person saying that is incapable of judging a drinking problem. And he's talking about his own friend! Hell - you don't even know me, and yet you spell out nine "danger signals" (all of which apply to me, incidently), and tell me I'm an alcoholic. I am, of course, but you don't have to make it sound like some kind of disease. Personally I regard it as a gift. It's no problem at all, and there is no real "drinking" problem on this campus. Everybody I've seen who is drunk is also rather happy, actually. If there is a problem, unhappiness, not drinking, is it. Why don't you write an article or give some danger signals for that?

Besides, it's common knowledge that articles like that one are written by vindictive non-drinkers. Alcoholics don't bother anyone with things like that, they just shut up about it, mind their business, and mix a Collins. Thank you.

Gunner To Speak On MidEast

This evening, Dr. Haim Gunner will present the first lecture of the Gordon Memorial Lecture Series. Dr. Gunner will speak on "Issues In The Middle East".

The lecture will be given in the Governor's lounge of the Student Union at 6:30. Following the lecture there will be a discussion and social hour.

Dr. Gunner is presently a professor of Environmental Science at UMass. This past year he spent his Sabbatical year in Israel where he was a consultant to the National Research Council of Israel and the Knesset (the Israeli parliament) on environmental problems. He also was a professor at Tel Aviv University.

Dr. Gunner who is well known on this campus, has an extensive background and intimate knowledge of Israeli and Mideastern affairs. He has lived in Israel for many years and was a member of Kibbutz Sasa for six years.

At UMass Dr. Gunner was one of the driving forces who helped in organizing a Judaic studies program.

The Henry M. Gordon Lecture Series is sponsored by Concerned Jewish Students. On December 6, Mr. Moshe Gileadi will lecture on "Collective Education In The Kibbutz Movement". The third lecture will be given by Mr. Dov Gordon. His topic will be "A Farewell to American Jewry".

A number of panel discussions and guest lecturers are being planned for the spring semester. Any professor or student who would like to participate is requested to call Isaac Seigel at 6-4087.

Harvard Prof. Speaks At Smith

Jean Mayer, professor of nutrition at Harvard University, will give the Elizabeth Cutter Morrow lecture at Smith College tonight at 8 in Wright Hall.

His topic will be "Toward a National Nutrition Policy." The lecture is open to the public.

Born in Paris in 1920, he received a B.Litt., B.Sc. and M.Sc. from the University of Paris, his Ph.D. from Yale University and his D.Sc. from the Sorbonne.

A member of the Harvard faculty since 1950 and a syndicated solumnist, Mr. Mayer is well known for his research on the mechanism of regulation of food intake and the developments of experimental and human obesities. He has published numerous papers and several books on the subject, the latest of which is: "Overweight: Causes, Cost and Control" (1968).

In 1969, Mr. Mayer was appointed as a special consultant to President Nixon and served as chairman of the White House Conference on Food, Nutrition and Health. He since has served as a member of the President's Consumer Advisory Council, chairman of its Health Committee, and as chairman of the Nutrition Division of the White House Conference on Aging. He also has served as a member of the Nutrition Division of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and as a consultant to FAO, the World Health Organization and UNICEF in technical missions on various continents. In particular, he led a technical mission to wartime Biafra in 1969.

A fellow and member of the council of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, he is on the editorial board of several scientific journals and magazines.

WMPIRG, Nader Group Toy Safety Conference

The Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group will announce results of its study on toy safety at a press conference Friday, Dec. 1, at 10:30 a.m. in the Samson Room of Springfield College.

The WMPIRG survey is part of a nationwide effort by the Public Interest Research Groups, coordinated by Ralph Nader's Citizen Action Group in Washington, D.C. The groups seek to increase consumer awareness of toy hazards before the Christmas buying season and to discourage sale of unsafe toys. The WMPIRG study revealed that numerous toys banned as dangerous by the Food and Drug Administration are still on the shelves in Western Mass. stores.

Examples of dangerous toys will be demonstrated at the conference. Compete information on the WMPIRG survey and backgroun material on toy safety will also be available.

Compulsory Ed Debate On TV

Dr. Dwight W. Allen and Mrs. Mary Eliza Smith will square off with Mr. John Holt on the Public Broadcasting program, "The Advocates." The topic to be debated will be "Should Compulsory Education Be Abolished?"

Mr. Holt, author of the best selling book Why Children Fail will argue in favor of the proposition. Dr. Allen, Dean of the School of Education at the University of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Smith, Director of Title I funds in Louisville, Kentucky, although both vigorous proponents of school reform, will advocate the maintenance of some state standards for school performance.

The program will be aired on Channel 57 tomorrow night at 8:00 and Sunday, December 3, at 5:00 P.M. WFCR-FM, the Five-College radio station, will broadcast the same show on Wednesday, December 6, at 1:00 P.M.

now held that a certain amount of experience with foreign language study in high school is sufficient. Within a few months we'll know whether this is still the prevailing view.

These are some of the questions which must be faced by the faculty when it considers the requirements for a degree. They cannot be either unaware of or deaf to the wishes of students, but by long tradition it is the faculty who establish the criteria for degrees and recommend candidates to the trustees for award of the degree. A change in this tradition in the immediate future seems improbable.

What's The Story?

Facts About The Language Requirement

By JAY SAVEREID,
University Ombudsman

Q. What is the story on the language requirement? Every now and then I read a few complaints about it and that it should be discontinued but nothing ever happens. I can't see forcing an unwilling student to learn a language. So, what's the story on the language requirement?

A. A basic proficiency or experience with foreign language is one of the requirements for a BA or BS degree for students in the College of Arts & Sciences. It is thereby of immediate concern to approximately 50% of the undergraduates on the Amherst campus. The requirement can be satisfied in any of the five following ways;

(a) completion of a foreign language course at the 140 level

(b) satisfactory performance on an achievement or placement test

(c) four high school units in one foreign language or three units in one and two units in another foreign language

(d) a year in a high school in which English is not the basic language

(e) substitution of language-related study, if there is clearly demonstrated difficulty in language study, which has been approved by the Foreign Language Board.

The Curriculum Committee of the College is currently considering the foreign language requirement. The committee is determined to formulate a series of options, ranging from retention of the present requirements to its elimination, for presentation to the faculty for a vote in the near future. Members of this committee are Prof. T. M. Fraser (Anthropology), Chairman, Profs. D. E. Abramson (Theater), D. Fairbairn (Zoology), H. Lea (Germanic Languages), C. Moran (English), S. Moss (Psychology), E. Reed (Math/Statistics), H. Seymour (Speech) and G. Webb (Geology). Student representatives are Miss E. Michelson, Mr. S. Ganz and Miss C. Roach. Representing the Deans are H. Duncan Rollason and James W. Shaw.

One of the proposals considered by the Curriculum Committee would provide a "foreign culture option". This option would permit a student to satisfy the requirement by the satisfactory completion of three courses; one in a foreign language department concerning the civilization or literature in translation of the country involved, a second course in the departments of history, fine arts, music, sociology, anthropology, etc. which is broadly related to the culture of the peoples who use the language of the first course, and a third course in either of the above catagories. Other proposals, such as a computer language option are also under active consideration.

The Curriculum Committee recognized that adoption of either of these options would have an impact upon the present C, D and/or E core requirements. It is persuaded that the foreign language requirement cannot be considered in isolation. It is, therefore, undertaking a study of all of the requirements of the College. Once again, it must be emphasized that the committee is determined to avoid becoming ensnared in lengthy discussions of details and to come forward with a recommendation in the near future.

The second part of the question which relates to the validity of a foreign language requirement has no easy answer. No one seriously proposes that a degree be awarded on the basis of residence alone, but there are no obvious and absolute answers to the question concerning what should be required. It can be argued that he who knows only one language cannot really know even that one. The differences between a foreign language and literature provides a unique introduction to another culture with somewhat different social patterns than our own.

Many undergraduates view much of their study as pre-professional. This has been and may still be appropriate in the professional schools within the University. Students with majors in the College of Arts and Sciences could assume this attitude a generation ago with considerable confidence that a diploma would assure them a position in their chosen field, but this is becoming increasingly more unrealistic. Many urgent problems demand an interdisciplinary approach; even the teacher with bilingual capability is likely to find more opportunities than others. A cry for "relevance" and a concern for immediate applicability is not new to the present student generation. Each of us has desired this in the past and wants it in the days ahead. But is not the recognition of relevance of almost anything which we undertake one of the demands upon any educated person? Facts and theories are irrelevant only if we close our eyes to their possible associations and meanings. Furthermore, who is to say what may be relevant tomorrow, Einstein's theory of relativity was of only theoretical significance when first proposed yet it provides the basis for all subsequent work on atomic energy.

Studies in genetics confirm our observation that each of us is different from every other person. Each of us has somewhat different interests, talents and ability; fortunately we are not all alike. Does this mean that each of us is free to pursue only what we like and assume an attitude of unwillingness to devote some energies to areas of human experience and learning which do not immediately fascinate us? Who is to say which of these things may be of intimate concern to us in the future? What is the responsibility of the University and of the College concerning the depth and breadth of education which it demands of those to whom it awards a degree? Prior to 1969 the majority of the faculty supported the view that every student should have "intermediate proficiency" in at least one foreign language as evidenced by completion of a 140 level course. Views change, however, and it is

The world's first calculator that challenges a computer... and fits neatly into your pocket!

The HP-35 by Hewlett-Packard

Students call it the "Super Slide Rule!"

Can your slide rule compute transcendental functions with 10-digit accuracy in less than half-a-second? The HP-35 can!

And that's just for openers. The new Hewlett-Packard HP-35 can free you from countless hours of tedious calculations with tables, slide rule, pencil and paper. Yes, this 9-ounce cordless wonder fits right in your pocket. Yet it challenges a computer in handling complex problems, including log, trig and exponential functions—each with a single keystroke. And it does it anywhere, from the classroom to your dorm.

Engineering and math students, as well as faculty, will especially appreciate its many practical benefits. The HP-35 without question . . .

- SAVES TIME in solving problems
- GUARANTEES ACCURACY which means fewer mistakes—better grades
- REPLACES LOG AND TRIG TABLES—the calculator does it all
- OPERATES SILENTLY in classroom, library or wherever used
- OFFERS COMPUTER-LIKE POWER—no waiting for school machine
- GOES ANYWHERE—it's as portable as your favorite slide rule

Compulsive Eater Worries

By DRS. McCASHIN AND KLEIN

Q. I am a compulsive eater. Every few days I go on incredible eating binges. It usually starts when I pass a candy machine and I am seized by an urge for a candy bar. I struggle with myself but usually give in. I can't stop at one and I'll eat past the point of being full until I feel sick. How would you explain my behavior?

A. To comprehend the complex behavior pattern described as compulsive eating, one must understand the nature of compulsive behavior in general, as well as the special significance of eating. A compulsion is a ritualized psychological and predictable pattern of behavior which when not performed can cause the compelled individual intense worry and anxiety. Compulsions are essentially superstitious in nature, i.e., the sufferer's expectation of not satisfying the compulsion are magical and not reality based. Behaviorists having demonstrated superstitious rituals in animals argue that compulsive behavior is learned in similar fashion to any other "habit". In fact people often describe their compulsions as being like conditioned reflexes. You reflect this in your description of being "seized by an urge" to eat.

Psychoanalytic theorists focus on the instinctual basis of compulsive behavior, i.e., the symbolic attempt to "work through" unconscious impulses (sexual and/or aggressive) which the individual is fearful of allowing into consciousness.

Compulsions then are symbolic behavior rituals reinforced by numerous repetition - reinforced more, however, by what doesn't happen, than what does. Compulsive gamblers, for example, don't really expect to win. Those who must check under the bed before they can go to sleep don't really expect to find anyone there. Compulsive eaters usually end up sick, rather than satisfied. In fact, severe compulsions often seen directed toward the destruction of the individual who, as in the case of gambling, eating and alcoholism, usually winds up feeling guilty and disgusted with himself - and in extreme cases financially and/or interpersonally ruined.

The emotional significance of eating cannot be overemphasized. The earliest experience of love vs. rejection, security vs. anxiety and satisfaction vs. frustration are associated with feeding. Compulsive eating may be related to dependency needs, anxiety reduction, denial of sexual feelings, hostility, self-punishment or any combination of the above. The space provided here offers room for only the most superficial discussion of this timely and difficult area. We therefore suggest that you discuss your specific situation with a Mental Health staff member.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will answer your questions or discuss any issue on your mind. Send or bring your questions to Mental Health, 303 Machmer Hall. All inquiries are strictly confidential.

First Meeting For 'Black Scientists'

Yesterday the first meeting of the Society for Black Scientists was held in New Africa House and marks the second in a series of academic and professional directions by CCEBS students. This organization has emerged as a result of the concerns of CCEBS students in the hard sciences over a period of two years. The mutual avocational concerns of minority students in the hard sciences has now coexisted into the Society for Black Scientists.

One of the first objectives of the society will be to establish community and common concerns with the national prominent group of Black Scientists in New York City. Among the other priorities at this juncture are recruitment and counseling of minorities for the hard sciences; developing and evaluation of curricula and programs in the hard sciences for concrete avocational programsfor minority students; the initial and conception of projects by Black scientists for the Black community and as a resource and viable organization to the various science departments on the UMass campus.

Those attending were extremely pleased with the sustained interest of CCEBS and minority students in the formation of the society resulting in its initial organizational meeting. The group is composed at this point of an equal number of males and females and the distribution of their disciplines covered the spectrum of the hard sciences.

They were unanimous in their recognition that their inspiration came from the posture and accomplishments of Chancellor Bromery, a nationally recognized G.O. Physicist.

"The persistence and insistance as well as the resources and organizational skills of Dr. McCoy, CCEBS Director, have brought us to this point with facility and direction," stated a society spokesman.

It is their intent to establish very clearly as a stimulant, positive and productive input and impact on our academic community here in Amherst, which will serve as a stimulant for minority youngsters in the Commonwealth of Mass.

With a professional relationship to the New York group the Society "aspires to bring new meaning of science to the Black community."

Job Bank For Vets

The Veterans Affairs Office is currently establishing a job bank for veterans. The program will include the recruiting of employers and employees. It will deal with only part-time employment.

As of today a member from the Veterans Affairs Office will approach different employers in the area. If interest is shown by the employer, the Veterans Office will select possible candidates for the job.

The Veterans Office urges all veterans to come to Room 239, Whitmore Hall to fill out an application if they are interested in possible part-time employment.

Missile Cutbacks Affecting Mass.

LEXINGTON, Mass (AP)--Raytheon Co. said today it will phase out operations at its North Dighton plant next year because of governmental cutbacks in the missile defense program. The plant employs 1,400.

The company began laying off 600 persons building missile-site radars at the southeastern Massachusetts plant in October, a spokesman said, after Western Electric Co., prime contractor for the Safeguard Missile Defense System, told Raytheon to terminate partially its contract.

"This termination resulted from the recent SALT U.S.-Russian Strategic Arms Limitation Talks agreements and the decision by Congress not to deploy a second Safeguard site in Washington, D.C., as permitted under the agreements," a Raytheon spokesman said.

"The termination of Safeguard has caused the workload to drop below the level required to maintain sound economic operation of the North Dighton plant," Joseph F. Shea, Raytheon senior vice president, said.

"We are announcing our decision at this early date in order to maximize the time available to assist personnel affected to transfer to other jobs within Raytheon or to obtain suitable employment in their local area.

"The placement service, established at the North Dighton plant in October, will be continued as long as necessary to meet the needs of our employees."

"Work other than missile-site radars now in process at North Dighton will be transferred to other Raytheon facilities in eastern Massachusetts during 1973 and, to the extent possible, personnel will have the opportunity to transfer," a spokesman said.

The firm recorded sales of $1.3 billion last year and employs 25,000 persons in over 20 Massachusetts plants. World-wide the company lists 48,000 employes.

The North Dighton plant is one of the largest employers in the Taunton area.

Americans See Death As 'Sleep'

LEWISTON, Maine (AP) - Death, in the eyes of Americans, is a pleasant, somber sleep taken in a comfortable bed, according to a sociologist here.

"The American apparently does not die," says Richard C. Dumont, a Bates College sociology professor who recently coauthored a book, "The American View of Death: Acceptance or Denial."

Dumont says Madison Avenue image makers and businessmen seeking profit have combined to project the American corpse as alive as possible, and going to sleep in a casket which is often explicitly advertised as a comfortable bed.

In an interview, Dumont said he still personally denies death "at the gut level. Although I am more conscious now of the ambivalence surrounding death, it's no more comprehensible than it ever was."

He said he personally hasn't "solved any better the notion that I'll die," and said that although he regards sociology as a clumsy tool for dealing with the subject, he believes his book can help people understand death.

"It's good for the individual to know that ambivalent or confusing feelings about death are natural," Dumont said. "It's helpful in view of individual adaptation.

In his book, and in a recent speech to a group of life insurance underwriters, Dumont brought together a string of evidence and observations to indicate that Americans, diverted by an affluent culture, deny the inevitability of their death.

He said funeral homes, including ones in this central Maine area, promote the deep, comfortable sleep idea.

And he credited the American tendency to "run, hide and seek refuge in group norms and actuarial statistics...that blur the individual face of death" with a kind of national delusion of invulnerability to death.

Supporting this delusion, Dumont said, is an implicit American faith in a scientific approach to the rational conquest of undesirable things death being one-and a cultural fix on success that somehow reads death as an unacceptable failure.

But perhaps the most profound reason the American seems to deny death, Dumont says, is that he so seldom comes into contact with it-in conversations at cocktail parties, in cartoons, or even in real life.

"Americans don't die at home or on the job," Dumont says. Very few times in his life does the average American experience death directly and the so-called nuclear family in America is affluent enough to remove age from its midst and send it packing to nursing homes to die offstage, according to Dumont.

And since, as Dumont notes, death in America is largely confined to the aged because of a long life expectancy, most dying is sequestered from everyday life.

Dumont also discerns a cultural denial of death in perhaps more subtle forms like unspoken taboos on conversation concerning death and cartoons in which the heroes always come back to life.

Some people will interpret America's wholesale buying of life insurance as a sign of a general acceptance of death, Dumont contends.

He says the purchase of life insurance binds death firmly to the business of living.

BU Prison Study Recommends Citizen 'Outsider' On Board

BOSTON (AP)--A federally-funded study of prisoners' rights and responsibilities in Massachusetts recommended Tuesday that citizen "outsiders" head prison disciplinary committees.

It also recommended an end to censorship of outgoing mail, installation of pay telephones in each state prison, and extension of visiting hours.

The study, prepared by the Boston University Law School Center for Criminal Justice, was financed by a $100,000 grant from the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.

Corrections Commissioner John O. Boone said the 500-page study "will be the basis for developing our own comprehensive procedures to insure fairness and equal treatment for all inmates."

Most of the recommendations can be put into effect without new staff member or legislation, correction officials said.

While written specifically for Massachusetts, the rules and backup material can serve as models for other states, said B.U. Prof. Sheldon Krantz, the project director.

The study recommends that prison "disciplinary boards" which hold hearings on disciplinary charges against inmates, be restructured to bar corrections officials from serving on them but to have "an outside member selected from a rotating panel of citizens" head the board.

"The purpose of having outside persons sit on the board is to increase the possibility that the hearing board will operate independently and freely," the report says.

Harvard Endowment At $1 Bill

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The Endowment of Harvard University, the richest school in the United States, reached $1.4 billion last June, an increase of $100 million over the previous year, Harvard announced Tuesday.

Total expenses for the year were the highest ever-$203 million-but the university finished the fiscal year $177,000 in the black.

Harvard's biggest expense was its $101 million payroll.

Alumni and other benefactors of the university gave a record $7.1 million to its eight annual funds. The biggest and oldest of them, the Harvard College, Fund, received $4.4 million, about half a million dollars more than the previous year.

Among the largest gifts to the university were a $1.1 million bequest to the Faculty of Arts and Sciences from the estate of George H. Eastman, a $1.3 million anonymous gift to the university development fund and $945,000 from the German Marshall Fund to be used for European studies.

Most of Harvard's endowment is invested in stocks and bonds. Stock market growth since June has boosted the university's investments to about $1.5 billion, officials said.

Among Harvard's largest common stock investments are International Business Machines with a market value of $76 million; Eastman Kodak, $33 million; General Reinsurance, $33; General Motors, $20 million, Standard Oil of New Jersey, $20 million; Ford Motor, $19 million, and International Telephone & Telegraph, $17 million.

Hunt Continues For Concord Escapees

BOSTON (AP) - Massachusetts Corrections authorities are continuing the transfer of inmates from Concord Reformatory to other state institutions and the search is continuing for nine of the 14 Concord inmates who escaped last week.

An additional 21 Concord inmates were transferred Monday, bringing to 46 the number of men who have been moved since last Wednesday's disturbance in the reformatory's E building.

A Corrections Department spokesman said Tuesday that more inmate transfers are being arranged, both because of last week's trouble and according to prior plans to close the wing.

"There will be a continual shuffle until the east wing is emptied," the spokesman said.

Of the 46 men moved so far, 12 are now at Walpole, 14 at Norfolk and 20 at Bridgewater.

Authorities said the general lockup in force at Concord for the past week would continue. The inmates are being fed in their cells and only allowed out under special circumstances.

Five of the 14 who fled the institution a week ago in a mass escape have been recaptured. State police said Tuesday that there have been no new developments in the hunt for the escapees still at large.

Jesus Story Popular In '73

HOLLYWOOD (AP)--Movie audiences in 1973 will be able to view three new versions of the Jesus story that are far removed from "The King of Kings" and "The Greatest Story Ever Told."

The most eagerly anticipated of the new films is "Jesus Christ Superstar," which is now finishing its shooting in Israel. It is, of course, the movie version of the rock opera that has proved a gold mine in theater and concert versions all over the world.

MCA, which has already earned millions through the original cast album by its subsidiary Decca Records, hopes to make much more on the movie through its Universal Pictures.

Norman Jewison, who also directed "Fiddler on the Roof," began filming "Superstar" in mid-August. He chose 30 different locations in Israel--not the true locales of the Christ story but places that could double for 1st century Palestine.

The cast: Ted Neeley as Jesus and Carl Anderson as Judas, both from the cast that played Universal studio last summer; Yvonne Elliman as Mary Magdalene and Barry Dennen as Pilate, both from the New York cast. Release date: June 1973.

Columbia at the same time has been filming "Godspell," the off-Broadway musical based on the Book of Matthew.

"Godspell," most noted for its haunting song "Day by Day," has been filmed in a modern setting, using the city-scape of New York as its background. The script portrays Jesus as a teacher and friend, rather than a divine person.

Scheduled release for "Godspell": Easter 1973.

An enterprising producer named Larry Buchanan expects to beat both musicals to the nation's theaters with a dramatic film, "The Rebel Jesus."

"'Jesus Christ Superstar' is a rip-off; there's nothing new there," "The authors failed to introduce anything to help us understand the man.

"'Godspell' is a better approach, but it still offers little that is new."

"The Rebel Jesus" theorizes that Jesus survived the Cross; was rescued by a religious sect and nursed back to health by the redeemed Mary Magdalene. Then he was pursued by the centurions and killed. No miracles. It was filmed in Tunisia with an unknown cast.

Pittsfield Youth Honored As Millionth Boys' Club Member

NEW YORK (AP) — Eleven-year-old James Manning of Pittsfield, Mass., won the honor Tuesday of becoming the one millionth member of the Boys' Clubs of America.

Manning's membership card was picked from a drum containing the 25,000 recent joiners of the clubs in a lottery at Grand Central Terminal.

State Atty. Gen. Louis J. Lefkowitz, a Boys' Club alumnus, picked the winner as several hundred spectators watched on the main concourse of the terminal.

William Bricker, national director of the clubs, said Manning was to be notified immediately and will be brought to New York Wednesday for sightseeing and press interviews.

The method of choosing the one millionth member was selected because it would be difficult by other means to determine who merits the award, since there are more than 1,000 clubs throughout the nation, Bricker said.

Lefkowitz received a gold copy of the card he was issued when he was a member of the club from 1912 to 1913.

Meeting For Study Program In France

Since 1969 UMass has been conducting a study program in Paris, France for qualified students from both campuses and from other schools. Tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. there will be an information meeting and interview session for interested students in the Third Floor Lounge at Herter Hall.

Professors MacCombie and Avendstirm from the UMass Boston campus will be here to speak about the program and answer any questions. General requirements for admission to this unique course of study are good academic standing and a modest command of spoken French.

The total cost for the full academic year in Paris, including transportation, should not exceed the expenses incurred by living on the Amherst campus for the same period of time.

Normally, students are lodged with French families, take almost half their courses in French schools, half with the resident UMass faculty members and are allowed to benefit from student privileges accorded under the French academic system. Any other questions should be addressed to Professor Frederick Busi, 321 Herter Hall, French Department.

Free checking accounts with $100 minimum balance at Hampshire National Bank!

That's right—Hampshire National Bank has done away with service charges on personal checking accounts—just so long as you maintain a $100 minimum balance in your account.

The average cost of service charges is $15 to $20 a year. This is the cost that you'll save by maintaining a $100 minimum balance. Where else can $100 earn you that kind of money?

And it's easier to balance your checkbook, too! There's no service charge to remember to deduct. Just add your deposits and subtract your checks—that's the only bookkeeping necessary!

If your balance should drop below $100 in any month, you pay a $3 charge for that month.

This minimum balance checking account is offered to individuals only—not for business accounts.

Matthew Bullock: Pioneer Coach

Ed. Note:
This is the first of a two-part series on Matthew Bullock, who is thought to be the first black head football coach at a predominately white school. Bullock's story has been pieced together by Jack Berryman and John Loy.

Berryman is the assistant soccer coach and a graduate student specializing in history of sport. Loy is a sport sociologist with the phys. ed. department.

The article has been accepted for publication by "Black Sport", a national magazine and will be appearing sometime next month.

Bullock is still alive and in his 90's. He lives in a nursing home in Detroit.

At its 1971 spring commencement exercises Dartmouth proudly awarded the honorary Doctorate of Laws to one of the University's earliest and most famed black alumni, Matthew Washington Bullock '04, with the opening citation:

Your life is testimonial that faith, hard work, and perseverance can overcome all obstacles. You were born of slave parents who could neither read nor write. Fleeing the South, your parents came to Massachusetts with total assets consisting of seven children and ten dollars in cash.

Matthew was born September 11, 1881 in Dabney, North Carolina. His parents, Jesse and Amanda (Sneed) Bullock left North Carolina for Massachusetts when Matthew was eight years old. He attended public schogls in Boston for five years and graduated from Everett High School in Everett, Mass., in 1900. During his high school years, Matthew excelled as a student and starred in several sports. In recognition of his abilities he was elected captain of his school's baseball, football and track teams in his senior year.

Bullock enrolled in Dartmouth College in the fall of 1900 where he was a diligent student and active in athletics and student affairs until his graduation in 1904. He belonged to several student boards, committees and societies, including Paleopitas, Dartmouth's senior honor society. Bullock was also a member of the college Glee Club for four years and employed his musical abilities in earning money to pay for his college education. An indication of his singing talent is the following statement which appeared in an advertisement for a community concert: "M.S. Bullock the famous colored Baritone of Dartmouth will be the chief attraction with new selections. He is the finest singer in the college."

In addition to the above, Bullock was an outstanding collegiate athlete. He was a member of Dartmouth's track team for four years and played varsity football for three seasons. In track he specialized in the broad jump and high jump. But, it was in football that Bullock achieved his most notable fame. He was an outstanding end and played a major role in many of Dartmouth's critical games during the '01 to '03 seasons. As the noted black sport historian Edwin Henderson has observed: "Bullock was one of the brainiest men of football ability the game has had." Following his graduation from Dartmouth in 1904 with a B.A. degree, Bullock entered Harvard's law school from which he graduated in 1907 with a L.L.B. degree. In order to finance his law school education Bullock turned to college and high school coaching.

Recruiting a football coach from outside one's own institution was a common practice among many colleges at the turn of the century. Massachusetts Agricultural College was no exception. A custom at M.A.C. had been to employ past Dartmouth players to coach its team and in 1904 Matthew Bullock was hired for the job. The Athletic Board at M.A.C. made an appeal for alumni contributions and at the final tally $251.03 had been donated to pay the coach's salary for the coming season. Bullock thus became one of the first salaried college coaches in America and the first black man to hold the head coach's position at a predominantely white collegiate institution.

The Massachusetts football team of 1904 began the season with only a small nucleus of returning players and probably the toughest schedule they had ever played. Its opponents were Holy Cross, Dartmouth, Williams, Brown, Wesleyan, Springfield Training School, Worcester Polytechnic Institute and Tufts. The team ended the season with a fine 5-2-1 record and the editor of the M.A.C. College Signal assigned major credit for the team's success to the efforts of the new coach:

For this success a large share of the praise is due to our coach, Matthew W. Bullock the former Dartmouth star. A student of football and a fine conditioner of men, he put his heart and soul into the task and throughout the season had the team 'coming'.

Although M.A.C. had its best football season in a number of years under Bullock, the college was unable to secure his services for the 1905 season. Bullock coached the Malden, Massachusetts High School team in 1905 and 1906 while completing law school at Harvard. However, after two dismal seasons with records of 3-7 and 1-7-1, Massachusetts succeeded in bringing back Bullock to coach the 1907 team. His return was looked upon with great optimism as evidenced by the report to the alumni by the treasurer of the Athletic Board:

Mr. M.W. Bullock, who was our coach two years ago, is the famous Dartmouth 'end' of several years ago and is one of the best football coaches in this part of the country. He is a gentleman of excellent character and 'knows his business'. The college authorities and the student body and the members of the team are satisfied and pleased that he has been secured.

7 Swapped in California

HONOLULU (AP) - Major trade lightning struck baseball's 1972 winter meetings again Tuesday with the Los Angeles Dodgers and California Angels completing a huge seven-player swap with slugger Frank Robinson returning to the American League.

The Dodgers shipped Robinson, pitchers Bill Singer and Mike Strahler, and infielders Bobby Valentine and Bill Grabarkewitz to the Angels for pitcher Andy Messersmith and third baseman Ken McMullen.

It was the first major transcation ever completed between the neighboring California clubs and it took 16 hours of negotiating between Harry Dalton, the Angels' general manager, and Al Campanis, player personnel director of the Dodgers, to consummate the transaction.

The key men were Robinson, the 37-year-old veteran outfielder, and Messersmith, one of the most sought-after pitchers at these meetings. Dalton tried desperately to get Robinson at this time last year when Baltimore traded him to the Dodgers. "He is the best professional ball player I've ever known," Dalton said.

Dalton ought to know. When he was player personnel director at Baltimore, he acquired Robinson from the Cincinnati Reds and Frank led the Orioles to four American League pennants in six years.

He was traded to the Dodgers for 1972 and had an off-year, batting .251 with 19 home runs and 59 runs batted in. He has hit 520 home runs in his 17-year career and he is the only man in history to win the most valuable player award in both the National and American Leagues.

Messersmith was only 8-11 with a 2.81 earned run average last season and spent six weeks on the disabled list. But he won 20 games in 1971 and the Dodgers believe he can return to that form again.

Accompanying Messersmith to the Dodgers is McMullen, who began his major league career in the Los Angeles organization and was traded by the Dodgers in 1964. He spent five seasons with Washington and three more with the Angels.

McMullen, 30, batted .269 for the Angels last year with nine homers and 34 runs batted in. He has hit 130 homers in 10 major league seasons.

The Angels figure to replace McMullen at third base with either Grabarkewitz or Valentine. Grabarkewitz, 36, has been hampered by injuries for most of the last two seasons and batted only .167 in 1972. Valentine, only 22, batted .274 in 119 games and played the outfield as well as the infield.

Singer, a 20-game winner for the Dodgers in 1969, pitched a no-hitter against Philadelphia in 1970, but was injured for the last three seasons. He was 6-16 with a 3.67 ERA last year. He figures to replace Messersmith in the Angels' starting rotation. Strahler was 1-2 with the Dodgers, mostly as a reliever last season.

The deal was the first announced Tuesday following a hectic opening day of trade action in which five deals involving 18 players were completed.

Whalers-Blades Split

BOSTON (AP) - The New England Whalers of the World Hockey Association announced the team has withdrawn all support from the New England Blades of the Eastern Hockey League.

Whalers president Howard Baldwin said Tuesday the unstable situation with the Blades does not lend itself to the development of hockey players and said it is imperative the Springfield club remove the players from its roster who have signed contracts with the Whalers.

Players affected are Geoff McMullen, Guy Smith and Butch Williams.

The Whalers have withdrawn financial support for Bill Berglund Skip Foster, Peter Thornton and Tom Schiller.

The Blades have been in a state of flux for the past 10 days and have been playing and practicing from day to day. Their general manager offered the team for sale last week.

Baldwin and Jack Kelly, the Whalers general manager and Coach were both high in their praise of Blades Coach Richard Green.

"Green has done an outstanding job under extremely difficult circumstances. He has handled our young players extremely well and he would be a great asset to any organization," said Baldwin.

The Whalers president also said he still thinks Springfield is a great hockey town and wishes the Blades management had given the team and the city more time.

The Whalers had a successful exhibition game at the coliseum this year and will return next year for at least one game.

Young Skaters Open On Road

By BILL BALLOU

The last time a UMass hockey team made the trip down the turnpike toward the bean capitol of America, they had a different nickname, 10 seniors, played in an old, dingy building, and had to come home with a victory.

Times have changed.

Tonight the UMass hockey "Minutemen" make that same journey to Beantown finding themselves heavily laden with youth and playing in a still small, but now not so dingy, Boston Arena.

It's a key game, alright, but not for the same reason. This is the first of what is going to be a murderous road schedule coach Jack Canniff's skaters are going to have to make the best of.

The Minutemen are a question mark. So is their opening night opponent, Boston State.

Last year UMass played State in a home-and-home series, with the then Redmen winning both games handily. But BS had enough horses to get into the post-season playoffs where they lost their first round game to Buffalo, UMass' eventual opponent in the playoff finals.

State had a young team last season, and they've only lost six people to graduation. So, for what it's worth, they've got some experience.

State also plays a physical game. Last year it worked in favor of UMass as Boston had people off the ice a good deal of the time and the Redmen were able to capitalize on numerous power play opportunities.

Whether they've changed their evil ways remains to be seen.

As for the Minutemen, it seems that defense is going to be the key word. They've got lots of firepower returning and just about everyone agrees they're going to score goals. It's the young defense and inexperienced goal keeping that worries most people.

One thing is sure about that defense, and that's if Boston State wants to play rough, they're going to have to reckon with veterans Don Lowe and Bob Shilalie. Neither one is the type to get pushed around.

As far as the goal is concerned, nobody has really come forward in training camp and claimed the job for himself. Out of the three varsity goalies the one who has looked the best and is the best bet to start tonight is Peter Erickson. But Chick Rheault, a South Boston native, can't be counted out. It would appear unlikely that John Kiah, who got a late start because of Mononucleosis, will be the opening night starter.

So the defending Division II champs (has a nice ring to it, doesn't it) open the defense of their title tonight at 8:30 in the old Boston Arena. A lot of questions should at least begin to be answered after this one's over.

One thing's certain, the crowd at tonight's game can't be any smaller than the crowd for last year's game there. So if you plan to go in and see the game, bring a boy scout troop or something. It shouldn't be too rough to find room.

"Lonnie Avery–If I didn't know that you would definitely be seeing a lot of action tonight at the Arena against the Warriors, I would say that you really didn't get out of this one with all your sheepskin on". (MDC photo by Alan Chapman)

Yeah, you might say Chico Shea did get three quickies against Buffalo State and just did happen to be picked the MVP of the Division II title tilt. How many will the senior wing uncork against the Bostonians tonight? Take a leisurely ride down to the Hub, relax with a few pre-game drafts, and find out for yourself. (MDC Photo by Alan Chapman)

"Leif, The Thief Is Back"

By MARTY KELLEY

BOSTON ARENA — Loneliness is playing Alphonse and Gastone with a little black disc and loosing miserably. And to take it on the chin really hurts quite literally. And when that little red light signals retreat, there's really no place to go but down.

Now, through all this insanity, has anyone got the impression that I could in some remote and obscure way be speaking of a hockey netminder? Well, I am and you probably wouldn't think so, but at any rate, more on the subject.

Indeed being a hockey goalie had to be an athletic stigma. They say experience is the best teacher for most downtrodden netminders. And if so when the Warriors of Boston State take to home ice here tonight, the University of Massachusetts sextet will be short on that particular commodity.

And if a pair of gimpy almost elastic pair of endurance, then there is a very good chance that the Boston State target tonight could be a diehard who hasn't played a full season of hockey since high school. His name-Quincy senior Peter Erickson.

"Oh, I remember him," said a wise old sage who visits Orr Rink with perplexing regularity. But I really doubt that he nor very few hockey buffs at this university really do recall the name Erickson-except, of course, our own Bill Ballou.

Well, Mr. Erickson hasn't been around, but tonight he'll probably be heir apparent to P.J. Flaherty's job as Massachusetts opens defense of its first Division II crown.

"Yeah, I guess you could say that high school was my last full season," admitted Erickson. "From that point on my whole hockey career was interrupted with injury. And if it weren't for time and Coach Canniff's patience, I really wouldn't be playing tonight."

In Prep School Peter's fate began to materialize. After being selected as All-Scholastic at Quincy High, Peter went on to bigger and better things at Cardinal Cushing Academy and although while playing but half a year, "Leif" got on the All-American Prep Team. (Not to discourage Erickson, but to add insult to injury—Cardinal Cushing in West Newbury, Mass., did fold last year.)

Although he was selected as frosh captain at State, a Cardinal Cushing knee injury acted up and Erickson missed the entire frosh slate less the opener. His sophomore year was a journeyman's venture behind the stellar Flaherty and the climax came a year later.

"I came out my junior year and my knees just wouldn't stand the punishment," admitted Erickson. "They kept swelling so much that I didn't even bother dressing for the first game." And although Erickson's hockey days looked quite few in number, a strange accident at the Cape this summer paved the way for a metaphysical rejuvenation. (Can you believe that?)

"My car broke down this summer and I ended up walking about five miles a day," said Peter who made pizzas at Signor Pizza in Hyannis (a little nostalgia for all you Cape Codders this summer). "My knees felt strong and about two weeks before the practice started, Coach Canniff gave me a call and that's what really did it."

So it wasn't the car after all.

Erickson knows time will help him to peak. Playing the goal is a position that is purely dictated by time and experience. But Peter has a lot of respect for not only Canniff, but fellow netminders John Kiah and Charley Rheault.

"John is coming back strong from mono this fall and "Chick" has so much talent and now all he has to do is harness it," said Erickson. The senior went on to add that this UMass hockey team will surprise a lot of people because critics think that the Canniffs have slipped to mediocracy after losing ten skaters last spring. But if the Boston State Warriors want to take that attitude here tonight, then they'll be the first to be surprised this young season.

Summers at the Cape do so much for so many people and for the UMass hockey program it may have strengthened it about five miles worth. So if you do happen to get down to Orr Rink for a rare home encounter, don't be surprised if you see a rowdy contingent of Beta Phi's with a sign entitled "Leif, the Thief is Back".

Cooney Pioneers UMass Olympic Weightlifting Team

By EARLE BARROLL

There was a time when weightlifting at UMass was reserved for only those who were either football players and shot-putters or were trying to develop a body that would make people think they were.

And of course there were also those lunies and fanatics who felt that a strong mind was the product of a strong body or something like that.

Times have not changed. The same stereotypes are still present day phenomona. But recently a new group has surfaced that has added a new dimension to the Boyden weightlifting room.

The guy responsible is Doug Cooney, a senior at UMass who has pioneered the first UMass weightlifting team in the school's history. As a freshman Doug won the New England Junior's and last year as a junior he placed fifth in the National Intercollegiates, both times representing UMass as an individual.

But, Doug Cooney will no longer travel alone. "This year a great interest has emerged," he points out. "Right now there are seven members on the team. Last week three of us competed in a New England open meet against the best weightlifters in the region. Next week we have another open meet in which the entire team will compete."

The team members along with Cooney are Chris Gomes, Bob Pelletier, John Donnelly, Bill Riley, Dave Chambers and Wayne English.

As a team they practice three or four times a week in the Boyden weight room. In their up and coming meets they'll be uniformed in jayvee wrestling garb.

It is important to make a distinction between the type of lifting these guys are doing as compared to the more common body building methods.

"Our type of lifting is Olympic lifting," Cooney explains. "It is a competitive lift where we try to develop the psych and strength to lift a large amount of weight over our heads just once.

"There are many types of training for this lifting, and right now we're doing systematic training that the Russians use." (Note: the Russians are the best lifters in the world).

As far as Cooney is informed the nationals are A.A.U. sanctioned as opposed to the N.C.A.A. which rules over just about every other collegiate sport. Last year Doug placed fifth in his first attempt in the middle-heavyweight division (198 pounds).

He was budgeted by the UMass athletic department and hopes for more aid when the nationals come up again next year, at which time he hopes to have a number of his teammates qualify along with him.

As he explains: "Our primary goal was to just get a team going at the University. And now that we have one, our secondary goal is to get as many people as possible to the nationals."

"The People's Champion"

LONDON (AP) — Muhammad Ali has a handsome trophy waiting for him when he next visits Britain-a mounted silver plaque engraved with his portrait and a dove of peace under his name.

It was commissioned by the Muhammad Ali Fan Club, which sprang into action when Ali was stripped of his world heavyweight title in 1968.

Paddy Monaghan, an Irish building worker who started the club, said: "We wanted to give Ali something he could keep always, that would express what his fans in Britain think of him."

The plaque is inscribed, "The people's champion." Beneath a portrait of the former world champion are the words: "We proudly present this award to our champion, from the people. The Muhammad Ali Fan Club, 1972."

Yesterday's sports head was Errol Prisby, assistant coach of the Bowl-bound UMass football team. P.S. If you don't already know, the opponent for the Minutemen is the University of California at Davis.

Bromery Says 3rd World Struggle Global

By BILL FOSTER and MARK VOGLER

Chancellor Randolph Bromery told a large number of Third World students and faculty last night that their struggle is not confined to the University--but rather that it is a global one.

"We have to knock down the state and national boundaries and look at it as a global struggle," Bromery said. "We are all in this together; brothers of Nigeria, Ghana, and Egypt are part of it."

"We can't set our goals just for Amherst, we must win worldwide. If we don't realize this, we're going to have a group of disjointed efforts that don't focus on the global issues," Bromery said.

The meeting, which was held in the Student Business Administration Auditorium, was the first time in the history of the University that a black chancellor addressed the Third World Community.

In relating the Third World experience on a global scale, Chancellor Bromery pointed to an instance of a sedimentologist who was exposed to institutional racism in Liberia.

Bromery said a black who was trained by the federal government to work with soft minerals, was stationed in a hard mineral environment.

"Geologically speaking, there hasn't been a trace of soft minerals in Liberia for 1,000 years," Bromery stated. "They made an office manager out of the sedimentologist. It's just another example of global racism."

Bromery urged members of the Third World to highlight the need for a broader base of manpower in its community. He said the focus now is mainly on social services and education, but should be expanded beyond a limited scope.

"Minority groups should broaden their technological expertise and get into areas of higher influence, rather than just staff positions."

Speaking on contemporary issues, Bromery said he was familiar with the politics revolving around Southern University (Baton Rouge, La.) where two black students were killed.

"Baton Rouge was the result of an entrenched administration that didn't have to be responsible," Bromery declared. "Netterville, president of Southern University, was caught between the demands of his constituency and the interests of a governor who had to settle the issue in the political arena."

Bromery asked if anyone heard who called the police. He said a lot of people were to be held accountable for the issue.

"The important point is not who's guilty...Something has got to be done so this doesn't happen again."

"I see a national trend in higher education where the authority moves from the administration into the political arena," he reiterated.

Some black students expressed discontent about the chancellor's emphasis on the global approach as opposed to domestic issues on campus. Inquiries were made about what efforts he had made towards practical solutions.

Relating specifically to the CCEBS working for both black and white students, Bromery explained, the academic dismissal ruling for first semester freshmen failing to meet the grade point standard was waived.

When asked about his role as chancellor to the University, Bromery replied. "I'm not a chancellor who happens to be a black man. I'm a black man who happens to be a chancellor

"I'm not going to stay here until I retire. I'm not here to play the game so I can remain chancellor. I have other priorities."

Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt spoke before a joint meeting of the Association for Mentally Ill Children and the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Children.

Milton Greenblatt Discusses Services

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

BOSTON--Parents of mentally disturbed and retarded children clashed here Tuesday night with state Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt over the number and effectiveness of children services in his department.

Greenblatt, 58, speaking before a joint meeting of the Association for Mentally Ill Children (AMIC) and the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Children (MARC) said there is a state "austerity ceiling that will permit essentially no expansion of present services."

"There is a 'tiny degree of expansion possible,'" he added due to federal money, but the cause for increased children services is not "necessarily hopeless."

Greenblatt, who has been mental health commissioner for more than five years, said that while the parents in the audience may be prepared to pay two to three times the present amount of state taxes, he asked if they would be able to convince the majority of citizens and legislators in the Commonwealth to also pay the increases.

He said the department is "burdened with a terrible legacy of the past" in the hospitals and large institutions that it inherited.

"We hope and pray that our large state schools can be phased down by one-half of the present population," he continued. "At the end of four years, we should have a much better resident-to-staff ratio in our schools."

The commissioner's speech was interrupted and ended after 35 minutes when the vice president of MARC, Joseph A. Buonomo said parents were not there to hear his "propaganda", but instead his response to the critical report: "Suffer the Children - The Politics of Mental Health in Massachusetts".

The 120-page document released Sept. 15 stated that DMH "virtually ignores children" and is characterized by "ineptitude, misfeasance and misguided priorities."

Hubert E. Jones, chairman of the Task Force on Children out of School which prepared the report, told the parents to disregard the "austerity jazz" and said: "If we raise hell we will get more services for children."

"Money is not the issue," he said. "There is no real short or long-range plans in the department for the expansion of children services. In fact, there has been no change in the department's policies since the release of the report."

Throughout the question and answer period, the parents expressed their dissatisfaction with the commissioner's answers. At one point in the meeting, Greenblatt had to be prodded by the audience to answer a question directed at a department policy.

UMass student Thomas Blanchette, president of Students Offering Support, during the meeting extended an invitation to Greenblatt to meet with UMass students concerning the department's policies at the Belchertown State School.

The commissioner quickly accepted the invitation to speak on campus, but no exact date was set. Blanchette said he was confident Greenblatt would be on campus in February.

WMPIRG Surveys Prescriptions

By PAM PIMPAO

One problem with prescription drugs is that you never know if you're getting the best possible price for what you want to buy. There is no system of comparative shopping, no known list of what costs what, not to mention the problem of quality.

Maybe you've been getting along alright on your own all this time but now someone in this area is trying to do something about this need. That someone is the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG).

Surveys were conducted in Boston, Springfield, Holyoke, Northampton, Amherst, Pittsfield and six other western Massachusetts towns. The surveys all showed the same results, that is, generally high and widely varied prices for an identical drug at stores throughout western Massachusetts.

Ron Bogard, WMPIRG director recently stated, "Consumers pay too much for prescription drugs because they have no means of getting adequate information about drug prices. Every other item in stores has a price tag, and drugs should too. Consumers have a right to know".

The drug used in the WMPIRG study was erythromycin, a commonly used antibiotic. Prices ranged from a low $2.00 to $9.97.

Local pharmacists retaliated to WMPIRG's charges that druggists use brand-name drugs rather than inexpensive generic drugs (drugs known and sold by their common chemical name) by criticizing the blind trust that WMPIRG followers show in the Food and Drug Administration (FDA).

"The FDA and other government agencies now say that if a drug is approved there is no difference in quality," said a WMPIRG representative, but the druggists strongly disagree.

The issue of to post or not to post a list of approximately 100 commonly sold prescription drugs was the subject of a meeting in Northampton last night. The Consumer Advisitory Commission of Northampton does research and collects evidence on consumer problems and presents it's conclusions and suggestions to the mayor and city council. The Commission has been collecting evidence concerning the drug price problem and presented the findings at Northampton City Hall in an open meeting.

WMPIRG wants not only local price posting like that done in Boston, but also state wide drug price laws.

The price posting in Boston was done on the advice of the Boston Consumer Council but this new law, say WMPIRG representatives, is inadequate. The law requires doctors to prescribe drugs by the generic name or by both the generic and brand-name. It still doesn't supply the consumer with the generic drug price.

Most local doctors that were asked about the question of quality of the cheaper generic drug disagreed with the pharmacists. Seven of eleven doctors interviewed said there was little or no difference between generics and brand-names. Four doctors said they preferred brand-name drugs.

Opposing generic drugs, doctors also sighted quality and the fact that brand-name manufacturers will stand behind their products their main reasons. "Generic drugs are fine but I think brand-names are safer" said Dr. Joseph Pekala. Other doctors express doubt about the quality of generic drugs because, as Dr. Donald H. Sprecker said, "they just have to meet very minimum standards".

Arab Influx Key in Mid-East

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

The influx of Arabs into all levels of the Israeli society is a key to the Middle East problem, according to UMass professor, Dr. Haim Gunner, who recently returned from Israel.

Dr. Gunner, a professor of Environmental Science at UMass, lived in Israel this past year where he worked as a consultant to the National Research Council of Israel and the Knesset (the Israeli parliament) on environmental problems. He has an extensive background in Israeli and Mideastern affairs, and he was one of the driving forces in establishing a Judiac studies program at UMass.

Living in Israel, Dr. Gunner noticed the change in Israeli-Arab relations in the Jewish state. He called this, "A new and extraordinary phenomen in Mideast relationship between Arabs and Jews. For the first time in decades, Arabs are now seen. They are no longer invisible (in the Israeli society)."

He said the Arabs move across the old borders (the boundaries established in 1949) with total freedom and work in every aspect of Jewish society. He later noted that persons were searched entering movie houses and students were warned not to pick up even a pencil due to fear of terrorist bombings. This, though, applied to everyone.

In arriving at his conclusion, Gunner examined the difference between the goals when the state was formed and its accomplishments. He said, "Twenty-five years is a good time to measure the aspirations of Zionism against its achievements." He mentioned dreams of a few in the late 1800s and early 1900s for a unified Jewish nation.

Though he noted that the industrialization of society approached the goals of some of the dreams, he said, "It is much too early to speak of Israel as a spiritual center due to the changing nature of the Jewish tradition itself. This was caused by changing values from spiritualism to secularism."

Another area which Gunner cited was the difference between the celebration of Independence Day (the day Israel became a nation) in the U.S. and in Israel. In the states he noted that it was holiday, but in Israel the occasion is more somber. A week before the Israelis mourn the European holocaust (the killing of 6 million Jews in WW II) and then, a day before those killed in the battles to stay free are remembered. He described it as "the full measure of the law and the sense of eminent danger over Israel."

Dr. Gunner stressed that the state of stabilization in Israel will be a major factor in the Mideast situation. He said it thusly, "It will have extraordinary profound effects on Israel and those outside her borders." He went on to say that any peace agreement is worth very little until there is a stabilization in the Arab world. Twenty-six governments since Syrian independence and the terrorist attacks were examples of the Arab unstability used by Gunner.

When Gunner was asked concerning the occupied territory, he responded that he was convinced that it would be given back, but the problem was who to give it to.

The lecture given by Dr. Gunner in the Governor's Lounge last night was sponsored by Concerned Jewish Students and it is part of the Henry M. Gorden Lecture Series.

The Lumumba Hut

The Lumumba Hut is a new added feature of the New Africa House, located in the basement, serving a variety of foods daily, Monday thru Friday, 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. and on Saturday and Sunday from 4:00 p.m. until 7 p.m.

Journalism Seminar Tonight

Journalistic Studies Professor Barney Emmart will lead a discussion on journalism education tonight at 7:30 in the office of Alvin F. Oickle, UMass publications adviser, second floor of the Student Union.

Emmart's speech, the second of a series on journalism education sponsored by Alpha Phi Gamma, the national honorary journalism fraternity, will continue the debate on methods and procedures which was started several weeks ago when Howard Ziff, head of the JS Department, spoke on the issue.

The discussion is open to the entire University community.

Police Issue Ban

Amherst police department said last night that there will be an all-night parking ban established December 1. Cars parked on the street on an overnight basis will be ticketed or towed. The policy was set by the board of selectmen in order to prevent cars from blocking snow plows.

Senator Peter Ryan asked for support of the proposed Civilian Review Board for the campus security police. The support motion was passed unanimously by the senate last week. (MDC Photo by Sue Goldbaum.)

Nursing Liberation Defined by Faculty

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

Nursing Liberation is defined as the "common ground of change...autonomy from the medical profession, from hospital administration, and from legislators." Linda Ceriale, of the UMass School of Nursing faculty, further explained, "to seek a fuller share in health care."

Ceriale moderated a panel discussion concerning "Nursing Liberation", presented by the School of Nursing's Beta Zeta Chapter of Sigma Theta Zau, the national scholastic honor society in nursing. The guests filled the Commonwealth Room.

Panelists included M. Lucille Kinlein, R.N., an independent practitioner of nursing in Washington, D.C. and a co-investigator of curriculum research and assistant professor at Georgetown University.

Ms. Kinlein described her private practice as a "Renaissance of nursing", and as a "point of departure... despite the obstacles of the traditional setting."

She explained that the role of the nurse today is "to assist the person in his concept of health," and outlined this concept.

(1) The nurse must be known by the care she gives to the client.

(2) She can know as much as a physician...knowledge is necessary.

(3) The more obvious the necessity, the more room for medical judgment is needed, and less for professional nursing judgment.

(4) She must form a crystalization of her theory of nursing from a body of knowledge."

Kinlein elaborated on her private nursing practice by saying she had been in practice for a year and four months, and has one hundred and six patients, "non-referred by a physician."

Janet T. Swanson of New York State Nurses' Association "who was involved in New York State's legislative changes in the nurse practice act", also took part in the panel discussion.

Swanson described the liberation as "basic of what the struggle is with. We have a service to give and the public wants that service." However, she suggested "That the focus be placed on "what goes on outside the profession."

She cited the nurses' march in Albany in 1971 as an effort to get the support of the Medical Society, the Health Department, the Hospital Association, and the State Department of Education, in order to "define the profession."

Catherine Tower, R.N., M.A. from Boston University, a post graduate in the B.U. School of Education, and a member of the Commission of the Joint Practice Commission, repeated the need "to develop a theory of nursing and to legitimize it."

"Nursing changes in response to society's needs. Each stage in the maturation process is necessary to the next. Change is evidencing itself, and change means better health care."

Blackman Trio Tomorrow

The New Africa House "Lumumba Hut" presents the Don Blackman Experience, Live on Friday December 1 at 8:00 p.m. Brother Blackman is a very talented up and coming pianist in the world of Black music.

Don Blackman will also be assisted by his ensemble. Some of the other artists are Brother John Betsch on drums, Brother Ron Trent on percussion, Chet Houston on bass, and Brother Don Blackman on piano from the Don Blackman Trio, also: Alfacause Children's Group; Brother Mungu Abudu, poet; Brother Theophilus Reed, singer; Sister Diana Cobb, readings and last but not least Brother Bill Hasson, M.C. Special guest musician, Brother Archie Shepp will also be performing. (All compositions were written and composed by Brother Don Blackman).

This promises to be a very spiritual experience for all who attend. This is only one of the events to come designed just for you, so come and receive the spirits and food; both of excellent taste.

SGA To Fund Activities Staff

By BOB SCHEIER

In a long delayed action, the Student Senate last night voted to move the financing of the Student Activities Staff from the Campus Center to the Student Government Association.

The move--which may increase the amount of money undergraduates pay for the staff members--is designed by the Senate to bring the staff under greater student control.

Because the Campus Center fee is paid by 5,000 graduate students (as well as undergraduates) who would not pay it if it were moved under the SGA, the SAT (Student Activities Tax, paid only by undergraduates) would go up about $10, according to Senate estimates.

But the Campus Center fee is also estimated to go down about $8 because the staff would no longer be paid for by it, making for an estimated $2 increase in cost for undergraduates, due to the smaller tax base.

However, the Senate proponents of the bill say even that hike may be eliminated due to improved accounting procedures and a reduction in the amount of money spent for some groups.

The action will take effect during fiscal year 1973-74.

The motion was originally proposed by Senator Dick Apostola last spring.

The Senate also approved a motion designed to widen campus participation in student government and such governing boards as the Campus Center Board of Governors by reducing the role of those already active in student government.

The bill, which will take effect at the end of the semester, forbids:

An officer of the Senate or SGA president from serving on more than one standing Senate committee (besides those the Senate authorizes by act) or from serving as a member of area government or on the Campus Center Board of Governors;

A permanent committee chairperson from serving on more than one additional committee, or from serving as an officer or member of an area government or member of the C.C. Board of Governors.

And forbids any more than three members of the Senate from serving on the Board of Governors, and forbids a senator from serving as an officer on that board.

It also forbids more than one officer and chairperson of standing Senate committees to serve as a member of the governmental affairs committee.

The chairperson of that committee was exempted from the rule.

The bill was also amended so that a commuter could serve as an officer of the Senate.

The Senate was in executive (closed) session for about 45 minutes, during which time SGA President Larry Ladd reportedly criticized certain Senate members for not performing effectively.

Several members of the Student Senate are reportedly resigning in protest of some of Ladd's policies, and on a part of last night's agenda not reached by the Senate were a number of motions aimed at limiting Ladd's power.

In other action, the Senate unanimously endorsed the creation of a Civilian Review Board for the campus security police.

A motion to keep the Budgets Committee from including any "academic, athletic, or social organizations" in the Senate budget act for the 1973-74 year was defeated.

A motion was also passed to charge the Senate rents and fees committee with investigating changes currently beind made in Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest, and to see what effect those changes had in the price of meal tickets.

Wood Reaffirms No Credit ROTC

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

BOSTON - UMass President Robert C. Wood yesterday reaffirmed here his support of faculty and trustee action that resulted in the end of academic credit for the ROTC military and air science programs.

Wood's statement came during a weekly telephone conference with members of the university media, and in answer to an announcement by the American Legion this week that they will ask for legislation to restore the credit.

Wood said the university campus is not an appropriate location for officer training at the present time. Credit was taken away on May 11 by the faculty senate and by the sustaining action of the trustees.

The American Legion, he said, is not in the best position for judging academic credit, but added that he would not under estimate the power of the Legion and other veteran organizations in getting the necessary legislation passed.

According to Wood, UMass was not at all responsible for an "honest mistake" in engineering plans for the $44 million hospital at the Medical School in Worcester that may cost taxpayers "$200,000 to $500,000 at the most."

The project's chief architect, Peter Moyes of Ritchie Associates, said this week that a conulting engineering firm was responsible for using the wrong gauge in their architectural drawings.

The contractor, Vappi & Co., of Cambridge, won the state job last May on a low bid, but according to Boyes, "if a heavier gauge had been called for the original figure would have been higher."

Wood said the university does not "build the buildings for the state," and that the exact cost of the mistake will be a matter of arbitration between the state Bureau of Building Construction, the engineers, the architect, and the contractor.

He added that the taxpayer will bear the financial burden of the mistake since he is the sponsor and supplier of the funds for state construction projects.

In another matter, the president said he was not happy with the results of a series of meetings during the summer between UMass officials and officials of the Dept. of Mental Health on initiating a working relationship between UMass and the Belchertown State School.

The idea, he continued, was to form a relationship between the Belchertown School and UMass as a means of implementing new programs at the troubled school through the facilities available on the Amherst campus.

Wood said he was also unhappy with recent court decisions restricting the right of newsmen and scholars to keep their sources of information confidential.

"I'm afraid we're returning to a period of oversight resembling" the McCarthy era in the 50's, he said.

Wood termed as "knitpicking" attempts by the media to publicize particular management policies of the university, and added the media should be more interested in the quality of public higher education in the Commonwealth.

Student Victim of Robbery

UMass police reported that they are continuing their investigation into yesterday's $250 armed robbery of a local student in his dormitory room.

Timothy F. Bowler of 109 Dwight said at 12:01 a.m. "three men, at least one of them armed with a gun, entered my room and began going through things looking for money," according to a UMass spokesman.

The thieves took $250 in cash, according to Bowler, and left without injuring anyone. In the room at the time was Bowler's roommate, Anthony J. Franklin.

Bowler indicated that he was saving the $250 for a car.

Nixon Meets With So. Vietnamese Envoy

ARRIVES FOR TALKS WITH NIXON--Nguyen Phu Duc, special representative of South Vietnamese President Thieu, arrives with security guards at Dulles International Airport near Washington from Paris.

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon held a lengthy meeting Wednesday with special South Vietnamese envoy Nguyen Phu Duc to review the Indochina peace efforts.

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said the two-and-a-half-hour meeting was a frank, detailed exchange of views. But he refused to discuss any of the substance of the talk.

The meeting was held against a background of persistent reports that South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu wants a face-to-face meeting with Nixon before United States concludes any cease-fire agreement with the North Vietnamese.

Prior to the meeting, some diplomatic sources said Duc would propose in his talk with the President that such a summit session be held in December.

Ziegler, who was not in the meeting, said he had no personal knowledge that Duc had proposed a meeting. However, he repeated an earlier statement that "no meeting is planned at this time."

But he added "obviously I cannot...rule out a meeting between President Nixon and President Thieu sometime in the near future."

Ziegler told reporters earlier in the day Wednesday that the two previous meetings between Nixon and Thieu had been useful. They met twice in 1969; the first time on June 8 at Midway Island, the second on July 30 in Saigon.

Also attending the Wednesday meeting were presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger and Kissinger's deputy, Gen. Alexander M. Haig.

Duc was accompanied by South Vietnamese Ambassador Tran Kim Phuong. The two Vietnamese officials continued to meet with Kissinger following the session with the President.

Ziegler said Nixon will hold no further talks with Duc.

In South Vietnam, Foreign Minister Tran Van Lam said of the summit report, "There's nothing planned at this moment." But he told newsmen also:

"This summit meeting between the two leaders at any moment is always necessary in order to coordinate their policies."

There were varying reports about the purpose of the Nixon-Duc meeting. South Vietnamese sources in Paris and Saigon claim there has been no relaxation by North Vietnam of its demands in the private talks between Henry A. Kissinger and Le Duc Tho. Therefore, these sources say, the Wednesday meeting was sought so Duc could try to convince Nixon this is not the time for a peace agreement.

However, American officials say Nixon, after first refusing to see Duc, changed his mind in order to tell the Saigon envoy that Hanoi has made all the concessions that can reasonably be expected.

The main problem holding up a final peace settlement is thought to be the continuing presence of North Vietnamese troops in South Vietnam.

Saigon has demanded a written pledge by Hanoi to withdraw all its forces from the South. However, North Vietnam never has acknowledged it has troops below the demilitarized zone and this has led to a refusal to make any direct mention of the manpower force situation in the prospective settlement.

U.S. sources say, however, Hanoi has indicated it may accept a tacit accord to at least reduce its forces, estimated at about 145,000 men.

The South Vietnamese government kept to its public stand Wednesday that they will accept nothing less than a total and immediate withdrawal of all North Vietnamese soldiers. The Saigon radio commented that the reason an earlier prediction by Kissinger that peace was at hand has not been fulfilled yet is "because of the strong opposition" of the Saigon government.

Special envoy Duc will remain in Washington following his meeting with Nixon until Sunday and will meet Thursday with Secretary of State William P. Rogers.

Sunday is the day Kissinger is to leave for Paris to resume the private talks with Le Duc Tho that were interrupted last Saturday.

March on Irish Parliament

DUBLIN (AP) - The government's plan to smash the outlawed Irish Republican Army plunged Ireland into a political crisis yesterday. Demonstrators marched on parliament as Prime Minister Jack Lynch told lawmakers the IRA might be planning rocket attacks in the republic.

The march by 2,000 persons on the Dail, or parliament, followed a mass rally in Dublin's Liberty Hall. Speakers at the rally, sponsored by the IRA and its political arm, the Sinn Fein, declared virtual war on the Lynch administration.

Hundreds of police guarded the Dail building as the demonstrators demanded defeat of Lynch's anti-IRA legislation and release of Sean MacStiofain, the 44-year-old IRA leader.

Macstiofain, sentenced to six months in jail for IRA activities, was reported still critically ill in a military hospital after 11 days of refusing food. He began to take liquids Tuesday but has vowed a fast to the death unless he is freed.

Lynch, whose proposed legislation would make it easier to convict members of illegal organizations, told the Dail during heated debate that IRA guerrillas "have turned their guns now on the security forces in this state. We have close experience of their bombs.

"They have detonated their bombs here, within a few hundred yards of this house.

"Will they next turn their rockets on this part of this country?

"The fact that they have done that in other parts of the country should be sufficient reason for us to take effective action to curb this activity."

Lynch referred to 11 rocket attacks on police and army posts in Northern Ireland over the past two days. MacStiofain's militant IRA Provisional wing is conducting a violent campaign to wrest Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland from British rule and unite it with the overwhelmingly Roman Catholic Republic.

The rally at Liberty Hall heard fiery speeches from Bernadette Devlin, 25-year-old member of the British Parliament, and 52-year-old Maire Drumm. Both women are stalwarts of the Catholic community in the North.

Mrs. Drumm said she had seen MacStiofain Monday and "MacStiofain is on his death bed. I said goodby to him as I never expect to see him alive again."

Then she cried: "We have a murderer in our midst today. We have in fact two of them - Jack Lynch and Justice Minister Desmond O'Malley. And maybe it is appropriate that these two should be murdered at this time."

Miss Devlin, wearing a wine-colored miniskirt, charged that Lynch's anti-IRA measures were intended to strengthen "a murder machine of repression."

Informed political opinion in Dublin was that lawmakers would give a wafer-thin majority to the Lynch measures, which place on IRA guerrillas the onus of proving their innocence.

Another major incident in the Northern Ireland - where 645 persons are known to have died in more than three years of sectarian strife - was the 11th rocket attack in two days.

U.S. Planes Aimed at War Supplies

SAIGON (AP) - Bad weather slowed fighting on South Vietnam's far northern front, field reports said Wednesday, but U.S. planes hammered again at the southward movement of war supplies through North Vietnam's panhandle.

The U.S. Command directed some 45 heavy B52 bomber strikes between Quang Tri, the provincial capital, 19 miles below the demilitarized zone, and Vinh, 135 miles above the DMZ. Most of the raids hit around the coastal highway south of Vinh.

Pilots of smaller Navy attack jets, claimed they destroyed more than 4 trucks and set off numerous explosions and fires along the highway north of Vinh.

B52s also hit in Laos, Cambodia and South Vietnam. The heaviest concentration of strikes was in support of government paratroopers trying to expand their front along a line running southwest from Quang Tri.

The Saigon command reported a sharp drop in enemy shellings Tuesday against the paratroopers and marines, who are pressing farther north along the coast. Government troops were hit by only 71 rounds compared to nearly 4,000 in the previous three days.

Elsewhere in South Vietnam ground action continued scattered without apparent pattern as enemy attacks dropped to a low 59 over 24 hours and South Vietnamese forces slowly sought to gain back ground once secured by U.S. troops and then lost in North Vietnam's eight-month-old offensive.

The death toll in a misdirected U.S. bombing strike earlier south of Da Nang rose to 21, the U.S. Command reported. Field reports said 10 of the dead and 7 of the 30 wounded were children. The command said it had not completed investigation of the Tuesday incident.

American spokesmen also reported that a Navy flier is missing and believed dead in the crash of an A6 attack jet. The plane went down from mechanical failure Tuesday shortly after takeoff from the carrier Saratoga in the Gulf of Tonkin, the command said. One crewman was rescued.

Weather Calm

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) - A combination of mysterious weather conditions made the 1972 hurricane season, which officially ends Thursday, the quietest in 42 years, says the director of the National Hurricane Center.

Robert Simpson said not since 1930, when there were three hurricanes, has there been such a mild season.

"We were simply favored this year by nature in her arrangement of elements around the hemisphere," Simpson said.

Included in the four 1972 hurricanes was Hurricane Agnes which claimed 122 lives and caused $3.48 billion in property damage last June. The other three storms died at sea.

Simpson said the lack of hurricane activity during the season, which runs from June 1 to Nov. 30, was due to three unusual factors - low sea temperatures in the Atlantic, a stationary intertropical convergence zone, and widely varied wind conditions aloft.

Sea temperatures this year, Simpson said, were from three to five degrees below the 81 degrees required for the formation of a tropical storm.

Board Grants Berrigan Parole

WASHINGTON (AP) - Father Philip Berrigan, serving a six-year sentence for damaging draft board records, was granted parole by the U.S. Parole Board effective Dec. 20, the board announced yesterday.

The 49-year-old Jesuit priest, now in the Federal Correctional Institute at Danbury, Conn., has been in prison since July 5, 1968. He was sentenced May 24, 1968 for damaging draft board records at the Baltimore Selective Service office in 1967.

Father Berrigan also has been serving a concurrent three and a half year term for mutilation and destruction of draft records at the Catonsville, Md., selective service office, and an indeterminate and concurrent two-year sentence for smuggling letters out of the Federal Penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa.

Father Berrigan's full term expires Feb. 15, 1975. With time off for good behavior, his release would have been mandatory Feb. 15, 1974.

Father Berrigan's priest brother, the Rev. Daniel Berrigan, also convicted of the raid on draft records in Catonsville in 1968, was released on parole earlier this year.

In September the government dropped conspiracy charges against Philip Berrigan and seven others in an alleged plot to kidnap presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger.

'Hard Hat' Picked For Labor Post

WASHINGTON (AP)--President Nixon said yesterday he will nominate "hardhat" union leader Peter J. Brennan to be secretary of Labor--the first unionist in 20 years to be picked for the post.

In relaying the surprise announcement to newsmen, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said the present labor department chief, James D. Hodgson, had told Nixon he wants to return to private life. However, Ziegler said Hodgson is weighing a Nixon offer to accept a position--not specified--in the international area.

The Brennan selection was announced at Camp David, Md., before Nixon returned to Washington to meet a South Vietnamese envoy.

Brennan, president of New York City and State Building and Construction Trades Council for the past 15 years, was described by Ziegler as a life-long Democrat who worked hard for Nixon's re-election.

The President first met Brennan after the labor leader led a 1970 mass march of construction workers and longshoremen through downtown Manhattan to demonstrate support for Nixon's Vietnam policies.

Ziegler said the Brennan nomination, subject to confirmation by the Senate, has the blessing of AFL-CIO President George Meany and the Teamsters' president, Frank Fitzsimmons. The 54-year-old Brennan conferred with Nixon secretly at Camp David Tuesday.

Brennan's choice by Nixon is viewed in labor circles as an overture toward ex-plumber Meany who has supported Nixon in Vietnam but has been harshly critical of administration economic policies.

The last union leader to serve as secretary of Labor was Martin Durkin who held the post in the early months of the Eisenhower administration.

Ziegler said:

"The President feels that Peter Brennan is a man who exemplifies the best character and strength of America's working men and women. He is spirited, self-made, and though he has worked at many different levels in organized labor, he had retained a unique sensitivity to the rank and file working man."

Following a Thursday morning budget conference at the White House, the President is expected to fly to his home at Key Biscayne, Fla., for a weekend stay.

New Orleans Fire Kills 4; 3 Jump

NEW ORLEANS, La. (AP) — Four persons, three of them women who leaped eight stories from a fiery window, lost their lives Wednesday when fire raced through the top two floors of a 16-story downtown building, officials said.

The early afternoon fire swept through the upper stories of the Rault Center building, the top floor of which housed a private club that witnesses said was nearly filled at the time.

Most of the patrons of the Lamplighter Club, which seats 100, were able to escape to lower floors and and safety before flames blocked their paths, according to a survivor, attorney William Morgan. However, fire officials continued to search the upper floors of the five-year-old building for other possible victims.

At least eight persons, their downward escape apparently blocked by the fire, smashed their way to the building's roof and were rescued by helicopters, according to another survivor, businessman Cal Grevemberg. The last two were lifted off just before the roof itself erupted into flame.

Five women, some with clothing aflame, sought to save themselves with desperate leaps to the roof of an adjoining building eight floors below. Three of them died, officials said, but two survived, their falls cushioned by rescuers who linked armed a and tried to catch the women as they landed.

"We at least broke their fall," said one rescuer, Matthew Johnson. "They landed on top of us, but they're living--the ones we caught."

The two women were among five persons hospitalized in critical condition. The nature of their injuries was not immediately known.

The body of a fourth person, an unidentified man, was found in a 14th-floor stairwell, fire officials said. Police had reported earlier that all of the four deaths occurred as persons leaped from the burning building.

Cause of the blaze was not known, but officials said they were investigating the possibility the fire may have been related to one earlier in the day which was confined to a dressing room and extinguished quickly.

Asked about the possibility of arson, New Orleans Fire Chief Louis San Salvador said, "Any time you have fires in two remote areas of the same building, five hours apart, there is such a possibility. However, we may find some other reason. The two fires always could be coincidence.

European Security Issues Cited

HELSINKI A(P) - Opening policy statements charting a European conference on security revealed yesterday the major clashes that will dominate discussions by the 34 nations gathered here.

The Soviet Union led off by proposing the conference be convened at the foreign minister level in Helsinki in June, and that decisions be confirmed at the summit.

The Soviet Union was pushing for a quick decision on where and when the conference would be held, culminating at the "highest level."

Of the six countries that spoke on the first day of outlining positions, both West Germany and the Netherlands stressed the need for careful preparations before deciding a time and place.

Valck Lucassen of the Netherlands, the day's final speaker, summed up the position of many Western countries when he said the preparations are still at a stage of examining whether "there exists a sufficient common basis to be able to convene at some time a conference on security and cooperation."

And he said real movement toward a relaxing of tension in Europe "will be determined in great measure by free circulation of persons between all countries and by the free exchange of ideas and information."

The free exchange of ideas and information is supported by several Western countries, but the Soviet Union and other Communist bloc members are not prepared to open their borders to that extent.

The issue may become a crucial one for the conference.

As to timing of the conference, France indicated it wanted the conference before June. Gerard Andre, head of the French delegation, spoke of a meeting "as soon as possible after completion of the preliminary work."

The policy statements continue Thursday, and probably all 34 countries won't have their say before next week. Sweden will open Thursday, followed by Norway, Belgium, Great Britain and Yugoslavia.

S.U. Killings Blamed On Officials

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) - College administrators, police and state officials were entirely to blame for the Nov. 16 shooting deaths of two black students at Southern University, an unofficial panel of black investigators said in a preliminary report on Wednesday.

D'army Bailey, a Berkeley, Calif., city councilman and co-chairman of the panel, said committee members reached the conclusion that the students were killed by shotgun-wielding sheriff's deputies and unanimously agreed there was "more than adequate reason for criminal prosecution of those responsible for the deaths."

The committee's conclusions were read at a news conference by Bailey and did not cite specific testimony of witnesses interviewed. Bailey said a detailed report would be issued in two weeks.

The black panel's findings drew immediate criticism from Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards who termed it "as much blackwash as they accuse the state of a whitewash."

"It was my feeling that very few of the members of the panel had come to Louisiana with an open mind," said Edwards, who appeared before the black group Monday to answer their sometimes hostile questions.

An official investigating committee appointed by Edwards and headed by state Atty. Gen. William Guste is looking into how and why students Denver A. Smith, 20, of New Roads, La., and Leonard Douglas Brown, 20, of Gilbert, La., died.

The unofficial committee was formed by blacks who said they didn't trust any official inquiry.

The state-appointed committee was in recess Wednesday, with hearings scheduled to resume Thursday.

The students died of buckshot wounds to the head during the police-student confrontation on the steps of the Southern administration building. Law enforcement officials have said no live ammunition was fired by the officers, only tear gas cartridges. But Bailey said his committee was sure the deputies had fired buckshot.

Japanese Arrive In Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) - A Japanese investigative commission arrived Wednesday night and began intensive consultations with the Russians to determine why a Japanese Air Lines jet crashed on takeoff, killing 61 persons.

The 90-man commission was headed by JAL President Shizuo Asada.

The four-engine JAL DC8 plunged to earth less than a minute after takeoff following a stopover in Moscow on Tuesday.

Sixty mutilated and burned bodies were recovered from the crash site. A 61st passenger was missing and presumed dead. There were 15 survivors.

Fifty-two Japanese, three Americans, two Britons, two Norwegians, one Swede and a Dutchman perished in the disaster.

The American crash victims were Monroe S. Brettler of New York, Norman R. Sackheim of Highland Park, Ill., and a man identified only as C. Gerbic.

Of the 15 survivors, 14 were Japanese and one a New Zealander, Eldridge Brook Smith, 42.

Christmas Now Recyclable

NEW YORK (AP) - Merry recycled Christmas!

That's the holiday message this year from several manufacturers of cards and wrapping paper.

Concerned over the environment and aware of the great interest in the ecology movement, the companies are offering a variety of items made wholly or in part from recycled waste paper.

Stone House Inc., of Keene, N.H., has two holiday lines of recycled cards.

The two types of cards include a standard series of Currier and Ives prints - "We've sold millions of these," a company spokesman said - and a special line done for Flame of Hope, a nonprofit organization that works with the mentally retarded.

The designs for the Flame of Hope cards were selected from among several submitted by mentally retarded persons in a special artists' studio in Los Angeles, the spokesman said. The cards were assembled in boxes at workshops for the mentally retarded throughout the country.

A statement on each box tells the buyer that the cards are made of "recycled paper especially selected to conserve our natural resources and to protect our environment."

The cost of using recycled paper - made from cuttings, trimmings and waste paper - was about 10 per cent higher than ordinary paper, the spokesman said. The company made up the difference by doing "enormous runs" of each line, he added.

The cost differential has discouraged some manufacturers, according to the 29-member Greeting Card Association.

Press Seen as Common Carrier

NASSAU, Bahamas (AP)–A former CBS news president told broadcast newsmen Wednesday he sees a move to turn the broadcast press into the verbal equivalent of a cattle car.

Sig Mickelson said his fears of seeing broadcast journalism forced into "common carrier status" were triggered by a remark President Nixon made to families of prisoners of war last month.

According to Mickelson, the President said the nation's opinion leaders failed to back his war policies and to understand "the necessity to stand by the President of the United States when he makes a terrible, difficult, potentially unpopular decision."

Carried to its logical conclusion, Mickelson said, the Nixon argument would have the press "function in a common carrier role...like that of a box car. You load it at the factory or the grain elevator or the stockyards, seal the door, and deliver it to the consignee untouched by human hands."

"This would effectively slam the door on the role of the media as watchdogs of government," said Mickelson, now a professor of journalism at Northwestern University.

Mickelson told the 27th annual convention of the Radio Television News Directors Association that the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution is at best a shaky defense of the public's right to know about its government.

"I don't mean to be irreverent toward the First Amendment, but I have heard it described by eminent constitutional lawyers as a negative document, a cynical constraint at best, a copout rather than an affirmative barrier against encroachments on the newsman's right to publish and the public's right to see and hear," he added.

Mickelson urged the journalists to stand together in defense of their role as watchdogs over government, despite what he called, "a divide and conquer" strategy by Vice President Spiro Agnew and others.

That strategy, he said, is marked by attacks on one level of the media–most notably the three television networks and some major newspapers–while attempting to lull local newsmen into apathy by failure to rate their performance.

New Labor Secretary Loses Cool

NEW YORK (AP) - At a news conference after his nomination as secretary of labor by President Nixon Wednesday, Peter J. Brennan lost his cool once-when he was asked about charges that construction unions bar blacks.

He denied the charges. He said he was all for admitting minority workers to unions.

"Look at the record," shouted the husky, silver-haired 54-year-old head of the 250,000-member Greater New York Building and Construction Trades Council.

The record shows that over the years, Brennan has made repeated public statements that the unions were improving their racial policies, and that he was cajoling the reluctant few into doing better.

Brennan was back of the controversial "New York Plan" for getting more blacks and Puerto Ricans into construction work.

Minority groups, however, shouted "fraud" and "phony" when it was adopted with Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller's and Mayor John V. Lindsay's blessing in 1970.

Black leaders haven't changed their minds about the plan or Brennan.

"Peter J. Brennan represents the most reactionary section of organized labor," said Herbert Hill, labor director of the NAACP. "His appointment as secretary of labor by President Nixon is one more in a long line of political payoffs to the enemies of black people and has dire implications for black workers throughout the country."

Proposed Electric Increase Slashed

BOSTON (AP) — The state Department of Public Utilities DPU Wednesday slashed a proposed rate increase by Western Massachusetts Electric Co. from $5.7 million to 41.4 million.

Herbert E. Tucker, newly-appointed chairman of the DPU, said the agency decided to "substantially discount and reduce" certain items used by the utility to justify the requested rate increase.

To allow the rate increase as justified by the company, the state said, "would have been a radical departure from the commission's usual rules."

Spokesmen for the DPU and the company had no figures on how the decision would affect the average customer's monthly bill.

Charles R. Dunklee, manager for Community relations of the firm, said, "The decision on the amount was very unexpected to us.

"All I can say is that we plan to review it closely with our legal counsel and there won't be any company comment until that is done."

The utility serves some 161,000 customers in 57 communities in western Massachusetts.

The Western Massachusetts Electric case was one of a number of utility rate increases pending before the DPU. The largest of them is a $122 million hike sought by New England Telephone Co.

The DPU statement said the commission had rejected testimony by an expert witness for Western Massachusetts Electric as to the cost of capital for the utility.

"The commission found that the cost of equity capital as testified by the company's expert was excessive," the statement said.

Tucker said the commission also rejected part of the firm's definition of its rate base, which would have produced a larger rate increase.

"The final rate of return allowed by the commission's order will be 8.57 per cent, which the commission believes to be fair to both the consumer and the company," the statement said.

The DPU said the new rates will go into effect 21 days after the company files with the agency the new rate schedule.

NEW ENGLAND STATES ANTI-MILITARY

BOSTON (AP)–Secretary of the Army Robert F. Froehlke Wednesday told a Boston news conference that the New England states are anti-military.

"I don't think New England is more anti-war than the rest of the country," he said, "but in New England there's less respect for the man in uniform than in the rest of the country. Froehlke said that enrollment figures in college ROTC programs are down all over the country, but many colleges are asking permission to start new ROTC programs.

He said only eight colleges have dropped their ROTC programs, "and seven of these are in New England. The eighth was Stanford."

Asked about rumors that Ft. Devens, the largest military, and only Army installation in New England, might be relocated, Froehlke said he had no reason to substantiate the rumors, but "no one in the military can afford to be overconfident."

He said the Army hopes to have an all-volunteer army in existence by July 1.

"I would prefer to call it a zero-draft army--not a volunteer Army," he said. "We need to keep the draft mechanism in case we need it, but we shouldn't rely too heavily on it. "The volunteer Army is for peacetime," he said. "Never should we anticipate that a volunteer Army would or should fight a war for this country."

Froehlke said the present recruitment levels do not indicate that the army would have the needed number of volunteers by July 1, but he said the Army is trying to raise salaries and fringe benefits and offer more satisfying jobs in an attempt to attract more people.

Asked by newsmen if the all-volunteer army would tend to attract the uneducated and unemployed, Froehlke said that if that did happen he would personally ask Congress for "a reenactment of the draft."

The secretary said that he expects women to play a larger role in the new volunteer Army. He said that at present 95 per cent of the jobs in the Army are open to women, but "I do not envision females carrying a rifle or fighting in the trenches."

MIT PAYS IN LIEU OF TAXES

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)--Massachusetts Institute of Technology Wednesday reported completing payment of $345,000 to Cambridge as its 1972 contribution in lieu of taxes on exempt campus property.

The school earlier this year paid the city $1.8 million in taxes on non-exempt property. MIT has made payments in lieu of taxes to the city since 1928.

The city this year asked for in lieu payments based on the amount of tax-exempt land owned by MIT compared to the total land area of the city.

President Jerome B. Weisner said MIT decided, however, on a payment based on its past contributions plus other considerations, and this turned out to be more than the city asked.

He said MIT over the past five years has paid the city $1.4 million in lieu of taxes on exempt property.

VOICE PRINTS

BOSTON (AP)–A West Roxbury man facing trial on gaming charges bowed to a court order Wednesday to furnish voice and handwriting samples after he was threatened with a contempt citation by Judge James C. Roy in Suffolk Superior Court.

Francis A. Vitello, 54, refused on Tuesday to furnish the samples, and in changing his mind Wednesday he reserved the right to challenge the procedure on constitutional grounds.

The voice and handwriting tests were ordered by the court to compare them with wiretaps and other evidence collected by the prosecution.

BURLINGTON, MASS.,–SUGGESTS NEW SCHOOL BE SOLD–A town meeting member Michael T. Cunningham has suggested that Burlington's new $16-million high school, scheduled to open in February, be sold and the money used to reduce taxes. The proposal was filed by Cunningham on behalf of Arthur Moon, a Burlington resident. The proposal is to be acted upon in March. Moon said a study of new school enrollments in Burlington over the past 10 years showed a downward trend.

Snow Removal Parking Policy in Effect

The major objective of snow removal activities at times of severe storms is to make it possible to hold classes and conduct all University activities in as normal a way as possible. In order to facilitate snow removal, parking will be prohibited in the following lots between the hours of 1 a.m. and 7 a.m., from December 1 to April 1, as provided for in the Motor Vehicle Regulations Manual approved by the Board of Trustees.

Lot #1, #2, #4, #5, #6, #11, #12, #13, #14, #N.

Overnight parking will continue to be available in lots other than those listed.

Since the plan described above provides for only a little more than half of the parking spaces used on a normal day, it is suggested that all persons who normally bring a car onto campus consider the following possibilities during heavy snow:

a. Pool rides with others whenever possible.
b. Walk if it is at all possible to do so.
c. Have someone drop you off so that the car does not have to be left on campus and so that the snow removal job during daylight hours is facilitated.
d. If space is not available in your assigned lot, go to one of the other lots listed because under such emergency conditions, it is not possible to guarantee that normally assigned space will be available.
e. Make use of the Campus Center garage (open 24 hours a day).
f. Make use of the new bus service to the campus to be initiated this winter under the Department of Transportation grant.

The Town of Amherst ban on overnight street parking also goes into effect December 1 through April 1 from 2 a.m. to 8 a.m. on all public streets. Overnight parking is permitted in the Lincoln St., Pray St. and Amity St. Parking Lots until 9 a.m. during this period.

Central Ideas Discussed

At Monday night's Central Area Council meeting three main areas of discussion were initiated by the Student Welfare Committee, the Program Committee, and Margie Lenn, Central Area Director.

The Student Welfare Committee discussed the janitorial services, sales and solicitation policy, skating rink schedule, and the halfway house in Northfield.

The Committee collected the surveys on janitorial services which has been passed out to the different dorms several weeks ago. The findings will be tallied and brought before the council for discussion and possible proposal to the area Business Office.

A Sales and Solicitations proposal was approved by the council. It states that any sales and/or solicitations in the Central Area are prohibited unless written approval is received from both the Central Area Director and the Central Student Welfare Committee. Food vendors must make specific arrangements with the Head of Residence/Resident Director of each dorm and all sales involving contractual agreements are prohibited. The proposal was first submitted October 30.

A tentative schedule for the two skating rinks in Central now under construction has been set up, but not yet voted upon. The non-scheduled space shall be used on a first-come-first-served basis. Free skating will be held on: Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 2-4, Tuesday and Thursday 4-5, Saturday 11-3, and Sunday 9-11 and 2-5.

Hockey will be held on: Monday, Wednesday and Friday 4-5, Tuesday and Thursday 2-4, Saturday 9-11 and 3-5, and Sunday 11-2.

The Central Area Program Committee proposed that a benefit dance be held to raise funds for a halfway house in Northfield. The proposal was passed and the dance will be held on December 7th in Worcester Dining Commons. The Amalgamated Grease Band will be playing at the benefit. All are urged to participate in the raising of money for the project.

Margie Lenn, Central Area Director told the council several week's ago that Neal Smith, last year's Head of Residence at Hills North, had started a half way house in Northfield for juveniles. At present the home is lacking in such necessities as: beds, chairs, blankets, silverware, and non-perishable foods.

Saturday night from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. Hills North will sponsor a dance with Dale and Duds. Admission is 50¢.

On December 7th Socrates, a color 20 minute film by Rosellini, will be shown for Central Area Residents. The time and place for the showing is not yet scheduled.

The discussion of plans for Winter Carnival was continued. Ideas from area residents will be entertained by Andy Pyenson at 6-9262.

Towards the close of the meeting Margie Lenn brought up ideas which questioned the reasoning behind area governments and long discussion followed. Many of the representatives voiced negative feelings towards the actual goals and inactivity of the council. Several of the representatives felt that the council often does not represent the area resident's needs - and this is the goal to work for.

'Monster Strikes'

IRONTON, Ohio (AP) - Local authorities say the monster is outfitted with synthetic fur.

But a cabby told police in this southern Ohio community the shaking the thing gave his cab was for real.

The cabby said his taxi was shaken by a "large, ape-like, white, hairy monster, with bloodstains on his arms, dragging a dog or a deer."

Authorities turned up some fur on bushes near the shaking site and claim a check showed it was synthetic.

Ombudsman's Services Aid Residential Areas

In response to the growing demands which have been placed on his office, University Ombudsman, Jay Savereid, has announced an organizational change in his office. Beginning second semester, each residential area will have an Area Representative to the Ombudsman.

Basically, the function of the University Ombudsman is to assist any petitioner in the procurement of a just settlement of grievance. The problems and inquiries come from all areas of the University community–undergraduate and graduate students, faculty and staff members. The types of problems which have been dealt with by the Ombudsman range from: 1.) academic - a.) grades, credits, and degrees; b.) language requirements; and c.) admissions and transfers; 2.) Administrative - a.) financial aid; b.) housing; c.) parking; d.) meal tickets, and physical plant; and 3.) other problems and inquiries of a personal nature. Most important of all in describing the job of the Ombudsman is the promptness with which grievances are dealt with. The Ombudsman has had the cooperation of all administrative agencies on campus which often helps in the cutting-down of "administrative red tape" and, ultimately, leads to a swift resolution of most problems.

The primary reason for extending the services of the Ombudsman to the residential areas is actually threefold. First is the burden of work currently facing the Ombudsman. These "mini-ombudsman" have been selected to lessen the workload on the Ombudsman. It allows for reducing the backload of cases which are pending and gives the Ombudsman more opportunity to work on issues which affect the University community at large, such as the current controversy surrounding the loyalty oath. It does not mean that anybody is going to be lost in the shuffle or that the efficiency of the Ombudsman's office is going to be sacrificed. If anything, it means more attention to individual problems. Wherever possible, every attempt is made to get an answer right on the spot.

Secondly, the representatives will act as a conduit to the Ombudsman's office, funneling useful information to him. In this manner, potential problem areas may be identified before occurrences create problems.

Finally, the matter of proximity is important. Some people have problems getting to the Campus Center when they need help. By having a representative in each area, help is more readily available.

THE AREA REPRESENTATIVES TO THE OMBUDSMAN'S OFFICE ARE:

Northeast Area - Bill Spinn - 314 Crabtree.

Central Area - Marcus Buckley - H.R. Apt., Chadbourne.

Sylvan Area - Dick Palomba & Sue Tracy - Sylvan Stud. Affairs.

Southwest Area - Speros Frangules - 1613 Kennedy; Dana Boardiman - 1707 Kennedy; Alicia Paulsen - B-13 Emerson; Nancy Schwartz - 209 Emerson.

Orchard Hill - To be appointed.

These people will be announcing office hours and locations soon. Consult your Area Director's Office or your lobby bulletin boards for this information.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Playing The Draft Game To Win

By GILBERT J. SALK

This is the time of year when draft counselors get overrun by people who want to know about dropping deferments and playing the lottery game. Since this is the most simple way out of the draft for a large majority of people, I'd like to explain who may play, and what the rules are. As a favor, please pass this on to your friends–especially those at home or at other schools. You may save a life.

First, who may play? You are eligible to win the lottery game if you can satisfy both of the following conditions: You must have been born in 1952 or earlier. (If you don't turn 20 until next year, you can't play yet.) Your lottery number must be 96 or higher. If you meet both of these conditions, you are a guaranteed winner! If you fail to meet one or both conditions, don't even try to play this year...you'll get drafted!

Okay, you're a winner. The next question is, how do you collect? All that's really needed is to have either a 1-A or a 1-H classification on December 31, so if you already have one of those classifications, you can breathe a sigh of relief and go back to sleep. (But pleae don't. Remember that your brothers are still being fucked over by the draft.) If you don't have a 1-A/1-H, then you have a slight chore to do.

Write to your board and tell them that you want to drop your deferment and be reclassified 1-A effective immediately. Be sure that you keep a copy of the letter, and that you send it Certified Mail Return Receipt Requested (not Registered). This is better than visiting the board and telling them, because it provides legal proof that you have made the request. As a result, you should follow this procedure with everything you do with our board--and save everything.

As soon as the board receives the letter, you are effectively reclassified, and on January 1, 1973 you are automatically put in the second priority group, which means that you are safe from the draft.

It is literally as simple as that. Do it!

If you have other draft problems, take advantage of the free draft counseling available here on campus. Draft Counseling Services has an office in 923 CC which is open from 9-4 Monday through Friday, and a branch office open Thursday evenings from 7-10 in Wally Silva's office in John Adams Lobby.

Don't wait for an induction order. There are many legal alternatives to the draft. Nobody really has to go if they don't want to, provided that they learn their rights and are willing to exercise them. The best time to start fighting is now.

IF YOU SEE A SHOPLIFTER SHOPLIFTING....

AT THE UNIVERSITY STORE

STOP THEM BY....

(1) Informing any store employee. There is no need to become further involved. You do not have to be a witness.

Or if you wish.....

(2) Tell the person involved that you have witnessed the shoplifting and that they should put the item back.

WHY YOU SHOULD...

(1) The University Store is a part of the University community to which students have a responsibility.

(2) Shoplifting has an effect on your Campus Center fee by reducing the income of the store which goes into the Campus Center operating fund.

(3) All student shoplifters are referred to the Student Senate Attorney General and the Student Judiciary except under extenuating circumstances when they are processed by District Court.

(4) The person involved may have a problem which could be helped by referral to a campus counselling service.

Overkill

After Louis Morini, local state representative, said that students should vote in their home towns, not at their college towns, Richard Rashed, a student from Fall River reacted to it by writing a Letter-to-the-Editor. That the inclusion in the letter of what some have termed obscene language has caused so many hassles since is absurd.

The original issue has been all but lost in the various attempts to attack or defend the letter's content, to have the University's trustees change the Collegian's editorial policy, and to force the abolition of the Collegian.

While most UMass students probably felt the same way as Rashed, many would probably have chosen a more graceful way of saying it. That, however, is not grounds for disallowing Rashed to use such a vernacular.

Throughout the state and probably in the State House, too, such language rolls off people's tongues regularly. Keeping it out of print will not deny its existence.

Some persons have now used this letter as a means to start a campaign in the legislature against the University. They have even anonymously sent photostatted clippings to members of the General Court.

This nonsense should cease. The situation has been placed in the wrong perspective. Legislators have overreacted to the letter. Voters will be critical of legislators always. The words used to express themselves should not be regulated.

Vietnam Settlement?

"What is involved now is confidence in American promises. However fashionable it is to ridicule the terms "credibility" or "prestige", they are not empty phrases; other nations can gear their actions to ours only if they can count on our steadiness. In many parts of the world–the Middle East, Europe, Latin America, even Japan–stability depends on confidence in American promises. Unilateral withdrawal, or a settlement which unintentionally amounts to the same thing, could lead to the erosion of restraints and to an even more dangerous international situation."

-Henry A. Kissinger, quoted from FOREIGN AFFAIRS, January, 1969

Richard Nixon appears to be on the threshhold of what he certainly hopes will be the major triumph of his administration: a settlement of the war in Vietnam. The relevant question to ask now is: Will this really be a settlement of the type which Nixon has been promising for four years? Or will it be of the type referred to by Doctor Kissinger in the quote above, one which unintentionally (or intentionally, as the case may be) amounts to a unilateral withdrawal.

If the President and Doctor Kissinger can bring Hanoi to an agreement which is based on a mutual respect for the sovereignty of South Vietnam, then such an agreement can be termed honorable. Anything short of such an agreement cannot be termed honorable; the proper terminology would be blatantly deceitful.

The conduct of the current negotiation can give us a key to their content. Obviously, there was a point, several weeks ago, when Hanoi believed that it could enter into an agreement ambiguous enough to bind the United States to a unilateral withdrawal from South Vietnam without clearly defining a corresponding requirement on their part, to do likewise. They believed that the stage of the negotiations were precarious enough to permit them to "leak" a tentative agreement to world scrutiny via a broadcast of Radio Hanoi. This, they had hoped, combined with the pressures of the then uncompleted American elections, would stampede the Nixon administration into signing the type of ambiguous agreements which Communist diplomacy has historically thrived upon. But the President, resisting the temptation to sign such an agreement before the completion of the election (thus insuring an even greater landslide) has given strong indications that he is dissatisfied with such a settlement, and has shown a willingness to see these intense negotiations through to the ultimate achievement of a more ironclad agreement.

Will the President achieve such an agreement? Will the agreement include the objectives which he has constantly reiterated throughout his administration? Such an agreement is not only achievable, it is virtually inevitable, unless the President has been deliberately prolonging the war without any definite objective.

Nixon is now in a position to demand such an agreement from Hanoi. Hanoi is no longer capable of waging an offensive of any meaningful proportions. Hanoi's chief sponsors, the Soviet Union and Red China, are no longer willing to supply Hanoi with the material necessary to wage a prolonged war against the South. The effects of the aerial bombardment of the North has taken a decisive toll on the military-industrial capacity of the Communist war effort. Without the immediate military capability, the only thing Hanoi can hope for, in keeping with their desire to eventually dominate the South, is an agreement which permits them the long term opportunity to carry on a war of subversion in the South, such as was their policy in the late Fifties. It rests with the Nixon negotiating team, foremost among them the ubiquitous Doctor Kissinger, to dig in and bend Hanoi's intrasigence toward the acceptance of a settlement which pledges a permanent respect for the sovereignty of the South. Such an agreement is within their grasp.

We're Number One

WASHINGTON–The subject of sex in marriage is no longer taboo, and more and more institutes have been set up to help married couples find sexual happiness together.

Dr. Henrico Belladonna, who runs the Clinic of Marital Bliss in Spring Valley, told me, "One of the big discoveries we psychologists have made is that not all sexual problems in today's marriages can be attributed to fear. Our studies indicate that fear now ranks only second as a reason for sexual hang-ups."

"What is No. 1?" I asked.

"I'll show you," he said. "I have a couple coming in now. Why don't you go over and sit in that chair and observe what happens."

A man and wife entered nervously and the doctor asked them to be seated.

Dr. Belladonna waited for them to say something. Finally the husband spoke up. "Doctor, we've come to your institute as a last resort. Our sex life seems to be on the rocks and we don't know what to do about it."

Dr. Belladonna said, "I would like to ask you a few questions. How often do you have relations each week?"

"Never," the wife said.

"Never?" Dr. Belladonna asked.

"It isn't that we don't want to," the husband said. "It's just that we don't seem to have 'he time any more."

"I see," said Dr. Belladonna. "Well, let's look into that. What's wrong with Monday night?"

"Oh," said the husband, "we can't do it on Mondays. That's the ABC Football Game of the Week. It's never over until midnight."

"You prefer watching football to making love?" Dr. Belladonna asked.

"That's a stupid question," the husband said angrily. "doesn't everybody?"

"Not everybody," Dr. Belladonna said. "Don't you find it strange that you prefer Howard Cosell to your own wife?"

"Are you trying to say I have homosexual tendencies?" the husband yelled.

"I didn't say that at all," Dr. Belladonna replied. "But it is true you'd rather watch 22 men knock each other down for three hours than make love to your wife."

"You're twisting things around," the husband said. "I can make love to my wife any time, but how often can I see a good football game?"

"All right, let's forget about Mondays," Dr. Belladonna said. "What about Tuesday night?"

"There's basketball to watch on Tuesday night. You want me to give up basketball, too?"

"I don't want you to give up anything. What about Wednesday nights?"

"He has hockey on Wednesday nights," the wife said.

"And Thursdays? D o you have anything to watch on Thursday nights?" Dr. Belladonna asked.

"No," said the husband. "But I'm pretty tired from staying up late on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights. A guy has to rest sometime."

"Fridays?" Dr. Belladonna asked.

"Friday is another basketball night," the husband said. "And Saturday night I like to get to bed early so I can watch the TV football games on Sunday af-"

"Well," said Dr. Belladonna, "that seems to take care of the week."

"Can you help us, Doctor?" the wife asked.

"It means a lot to us," the husband said. "We're willing to do anything to find happiness together."

Dr. Belladonna asked, "What are you doing for the rest of the afternoon?"

The husband looked at his TV Guide, "This afternoon's no good. I have a golf game to watch at four."

Where Is Everyone?

To The Editor:

We used to wonder how six million Jews could have been so callously murdered by a so called 'civilized' nation. We also used to wonder how these Jews could have walked to their deaths so passively. Now we are beginning to see how fear can cripple people into passivity and how 'civilized' nations can slaughter their own citizens.

Germany some thirty years ago silenced all the resistance forces within its borders. Any uprising was immediately crushed. Those who dared to oppose the Third Reich were silenced by death or put into concentration camps.

It is frightening to see this pattern of repression occurring right here in the United States. The murder last week of two unarmed black students in Louisiana clearly shows how the government of this country will deal with dissenters. And where are the angry cries of moral outrage from the concerned public? And where are the angry cries of protest from the students and faculty here at UMass.?

We, as white graduate students on this campus, decided to attend the rally to honor the memories of the two slain brothers. We rushed to get to the S.U. Ballroom expecting mobs of people to be there already--but there was no mob and no throngs of outraged and irate students. "Where is everyone?" we wondered. "Doesn't anyone care anymore?" There was a group of people present who did care and who did begin work to deal with issues of repression on this campus, but the size of the audience was small given the overall population of this campus.

We feel that none of us can afford to be silent for if we are than we are no better than all those German citizens we so easily criticize for sitting back and allowing their fellow country people to exterminate the Jews and all those other groups who disagreed publically with the murderous policies of the Third Reich.

We can find fault with others so well--yet look at us right here, right now on this campus. How many readers of this took the time to write a letter to the President or our Senators to express outrage over the murders of Denver A. Smith and Leonard Douglas Brown? How many professors cancelled their classes or held a moment of silence to honor the two dead youths? How many people on this campus stopped 'business as usual' for even a few short minutes to think about the fact that two more black people had been murdered in America?

When citizens stop caring then anything can happen and its beginning to happen here right now! Professors are scared to speak out because they might not get tenure or lose their jobs. Students are scared to speak out because they might not get their degrees. And so it goes in a never ending circle of fear. But–if we all stood up together–if 200 said "We protest!" instead of 20 then we'd be stronger and much harder to get rid of so fast.

We ourselves are scared–scared that if we all don't wake up soon we'll have more police on this campus and in this country with more guns and more tear gas. We're scared that if we all don't say "NO" loud and clear when incidents occur on this campus then this country will truly be as George Jackson writes in his book Blood in My Eye 'The Fourth Reich'.

Richard Nixoned

To The Editor:

There's something going on at UMass that scares me. When those students were murdered down South last week, the students here who wanted to say something about it had to occupy the Collegian office until they were allowed space in a 'free' newspaper. When they got what they wanted, voices from all over campus poured into this section saying that they shouldn't have gotten away with it. Evidently, many people think that a 'free' newspaper is one which is free to ignore any issue it chooses. Well, those students are dead down South, and they will be dead for the rest of eternity. Their brothers in the North wanted to remember them and say something about it, and were accused of playing on over-used sympathies and having a "false social consciousness". I find it difficult to believe that anyone can honestly make and stand behind such an accusation. When University students protested the wholesale slaughters in Vietnam, was that a false social consciousness? Kent State the same? Bangladesh? Bullshit. I refuse to believe that it was all false, and I refuse to believe that any part of it was or is false. What the hell is going on? Did all energies toward social reform die with the reelection of the Nixon regime? Damn it, people have been murdered on our campuses, and the white community here contents itself with saying that the blacks went too far in saying something about it. What scares me about all this is that there seems to be a new tidal wave on the horizon, ready to sweep across this country. From here, that tidal wave looks like a new age of silence and tolerance; the American people will be silent, and tolerate anything the government or other forces-that-be decide to do. Put down your banners, kids. It's all over, and you lost. You've all been Richard Nixoned into submission and silence. What's more, you will like it, and join his triumphant forces in quieting any other voices that haven't seen the light and surrendered yet...

I guess this fear I have began the day after election; did any of you notice that the flag was at full mast, just as if nothing of importance had died in this country? Goodnight, sweet students; one day we'll all have a grand time, telling our grandchildren about all the false values we once had.

By the way, when do the parties begin to celebrate the end of the Vietnam war? It is over, isn't it? He said it would be over, and Nixon wouldn't lie, after all. I suppose the newspapers haven't released the news yet, so as not to play up to our erstwhile false social consciosness.

AutomotiveWorkshop

To The Editor:

In regard to the spending of the Commuter Assembly's money, I wonder how many commuters are aware of the Student Automotive Workshop, where students can work on their own cars with the workshop's tools and the advice of mechanics? Undoubtedly commuters are the people who will use the workshop the most, in that their cars are subjected to the most use. The workshop is able to get dealer discounts on parts at several auto supply stores, and the discount is in turn passed on to the student. We are not in the business to make a profit, but to provide a much needed service on this campus where there are so many cars. SAW is currently situated on the bottom level (rental spaces) of the Campus Center Garage in spaces 122C-130C. The workshop is open Monday-Thursday, 7 P.M.-11 P.M., and Saturday, 10 A.M.-4 P.M. The charge to use a space, any tools you need, and a mechanic's advice is $1.50 for the first hour and 75¢ for each hour after with a maximum charge of $4.00.

The workshop needs more money to increase the number of working hours and to better equip the shop. Some of the money from the commuter assembly would allow the SAW to provide even greater service to students.

Why take your car to a gas station to have it repaired when all you lack to do the job yourself is tools and a place to work? Remember, there are mechanics there to help you, so don't hesitate to ask for assistance.

Editorial Points

Rumor has it that the library can't be open because if books are put in it it'll sink! Another triumph for UMass architecture.

For a building with millions of dollars worth of facilities, the Campus Center really could use some more electrical outlets. Could it be they just don't want to shock anybody?

To all you disappointed Bruin and Patriot fans: Don't waste all your disappointment, soon the Red Sox will be back and you'll have plenty to be disappointed with. Anyway, the Celtics might collapse one of these days, too.

Student Money

To The Editor:

The Collegian of November 20 contained a very interesting article by Gary Twardzik entitled "Where the Student Activities Tax Goes". Although I have often heard that the Student Senate has over $600,000 to spend each year, I had never seen a breakdown until November 20, and I would like to congratulate Gary for a job well begun. But don't stop now! Perhaps the Collegian could print income statements from all of those RSO groups who consume more than 1% of the Student Activities Tax Fund.

I would be even more interested in seeing where the money from our other student fees, including the Athletic fee, Health fee, and Campus Center fee goes. Perhaps all of the information is presently available to the public, but it is probably hidden in many obscure corners of the university.

The Collegian would do a service for all of us by finding and printing any and all information about student monies and what happens to them.

High Drug Prices

To The Editor:

As pharmacists, we are responding to the Wednesday, November 22, 1972 Collegian article on high drug prices. It is our opinion that the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) or any other organization whose aims and goals are to insure that consumers pay fair prices for high quality products and services, are doing the community a great public service.

We feel professionally obligated to point out that not all generically equivalent drugs are of equivalent quality. This has been substantiated by recent bio-availability studies for tetracycline, digoxin, and other drugs. Bio-availability studies determine if the drug is available in sufficient quantities and biological forms that is necessary to produce the appropriate therapeutic response.

The quality of Erythromycin and other pharmaceuticals do have an effect on prescription prices. We are not suggesting that quality requires the pharmacist to dispense high price brand name drugs, but rather encourage the use of products manufactured by reputable pharmaceutical companies. So that the impact of consumer concern can be as strong and valid as possible. We hope that WMPIRG thoroughly documents the quality of the preparation as well as the price.

A second point that should be noted is that there has been recent price reduction by manufacturers of Erythromycin. It is possible that some prices did not reflect the change in manufacturer's price; this is entirely possible if the pharmacy did not have access to the reduction at the time of the filling of the WMPIRG prescription.

Incidently the University Health Services does purchase medications by generic name from companies with proven pharmaceuticals of high quality. This results in considerable savings to students.

We would be most happy to share our viewpoints and concern with students interested in this relevant issue.

Response To Conklin

To The Editor:

Wednesday's Collegian contained an article in which Peter Conlin expressed HIS disappointment in the Student Senate Transit Service. The complaint seems to imply that every bus on which he has ridden has been late or not shown at all.

Since the start of this semester I have received an average of one complaint a week about the shuttle service. In all cases where specifics were given, viz: the route, bus stops, date and time when the problem occured, the driver of the bus was approached as to the reason for the problem. Where the driver was found to be at fault, letters of reprimand have been issued. Conklin's article gives none of these specifics but only general unsubstantiated accusations. There are two routes which stop at Southwest. One, the V—Lot route is scheduled to get people living north of Campus to classes on time, the other, the Southwest route, with the exception of one morning has never "not shown up."

I am not naive enough to believe that all of the shuttle busses are on schedule all of the time. To be efficient the schedules are planned for average conditions. The increased ridership and other traffic pattern changes will be considered for the routing of busses during the Federal Demonstration Project in the Spring. The student bus drivers are very conscientious about their responsibilities. If you think you can do better for $2.00/hour Mr. Conklin - get a class II license and apply for the job and if you've found some streets on campus where these buses could be rerouted more efficiently please tell me and the rest of the University where they are. If you think, Mr. Conklin, that your $1.25 a semester is not worth having busses at all - I suggest you talk to the other 2000 students per day who use these busses and get their opinion. Anyone else who shares Peter Conklin's displeasure, Bitch Day is anyday you have a complaint, please visit or call the Student Senate Transit Service, Room 434 Student Union. 545-0656.

Ripped Off Again

To The Editor:
Well, here's another episode in the continuing saga of one student shitting on another, but with a different twist.

My roommate, a friend, and I were studying in Thompson Tower on Sunday night. At about 11:30 I told my roommate Mike that I was going to walk my friend back to her dorm, and that I'd be back in a little while. While walking down the hall, a guy passed us and I had a strange premonition.

On my return, I gathered up my books and discovered two of them missing. I called Mike in and we searched the room. We then walked around the corridor to check the other offices to see if someone had borrowed them. Mike said he had seen only one person, evidently the same guy I had seen. We went back in the room and discussed this atrocity. (One textbook belonged to my other roommate).

Who should appear at the door, but the person we had seen in the hallway. He asked if we were looking for someone and I explained my plight. He replied, "What a drag," and walked off.

Mike and I were all packed up and followed the guy down the hallway. He stopped at the seminar table, picked up his books and continued along, but he held his books in front of himself in an odd manner. He ducked through the stairway door (instead of the elevator; we were on the fourth floor). I opened the door after him and called out "I hate to be a bastard, but could I see your books?" He stopped halfway down the stairwell, turned, and said "I have your books".

Now on the one hand, you might think I was a little pissed off that one book set my roommate back $15, and the other took the University Store a month to get for me, this is true, but on being questioned why he stole them, he replied "I might have need of them for future reference". The son of a bitch wasn't even taking the course! Wherever you are you asshole, I hope the cruel outside world doesn't shit all over you.

What's The Story?

To The Editor:
I'd like to present this letter to the editor in the form of a question, concerning the continuing controversy over D.C. food ripoffs and board rates:

Just how much of the students' board fees is allocated toward the purchase of food; and what is the absolute quality of this food?

Please respond.

Distortion Of Facts

To The Editor:
I would like to respond to G. Joseph Vinskey's letter in Monday's COLLEGIAN concerning the demands of the black community in relation to the shootings at Southern University. In his distortion of the facts and the callousness of some of his remarks, Mr. Vinskey has demonstrated a lack of understanding of the history, attitudes, and motivation of black students. He also implies that white students are ignorant, self-centered, and out of touch with reality - a description which unfortunately is probably to a large extent accurate.

In the first place, it was not a mob that went up to the COLLEGIAN office on Monday afternoon. It was one woman who went there with a legitimate request for a few pages in which the black community could express itself, since the activities and events with which they were concerned had not been covered or adequately reported. After being told that it was too late to get anything into the paper (which it wasn't), she left and came back a few minutes later with a large group of students to talk to whoever was supposed to be in charge and to demand that their material be printed. They found that indeed it was not too late and that the paper could be expanded to meet those needs. No mob. The COLLEGIAN just received a little help in doing what it had neglected to do on its own. (Remember the coverage of Kent State?)

In the second place, two black students being shot at Southern University is important to UMass students, and the reactions and feelings of the black community are important to UMass. It is the right and responsibility of everyone to know about those things. I resent Mr. Vinskey's assumption ("no COLLEGIAN on Tuesday" rather than "compromise") that it is the COLLEGIAN's responsibility to print and the students' desire to read only the everyday relative trivia that the COLLEGIAN often fills its pages with. Although it may be true that this is all that most students are interested in, the COLLEGIAN should not and should not be expected to cater to the efforts of those students to insulate themselves.

In regard to Mr. Vinskey's resentment of black corridors and whatnot, why does he think that any black person would want to live on a corridor with a bunch of people like him? He has already said that he doesn't want to hear what they have to say. Why should they always have to come to him and be like him?

Mr. Vinskey undermines the sincerity, concern, and intelligence with which the actions of last Monday and Tuesday were carried out. When white people are ready to show more respect for black people and more of an understanding of what has been and is being done to and by them, maybe then black people will be ready to get together with them. One can't believe in everyone all living beautifully together and expect someone else to do all the work.

8, Not 7

To The Editor:
In the November 29 issue of the Collegian appeared a syndicated cartoon in which read "Chicago 7 Convictions Reversed". This article indicates that the majority of American people, including some members of the Collegian, fail to remember the trial originated as "The Chicago 8". However, after Judge Julius declared a mistrial for Seale, separating him from the other defendants, it became the "Chicago 7". This is important because Seale had the intelligence and awareness of self-determination to demand his constitutional right to be allowed to represent himself. Judge Julius found an easy way to resolve the impasse growing out of Seale's "repeated interruptions of the trial with demands that he be allowed to defend himself".

On October 29, 1969, Judge Julius ordered Seale bound and gagged in an effort to stifle the disruptions. On November 5, 1969, Judge Julius found Seale in contempt of U.S. District Court and sentenced him to four years in prison. 3 months each for 16 incidents of demanding he be allowed to represent himself.

It is no significant gratification for Seale to have been a member of the "Chicago 8". It is however, important to understand how and why he was castrated from the main body of defendents and forgotten. Maybe the syndicated cartoon should have read "Chicago 1 Convictions Reversed".

Sold Down The River

To The Editor:
The United States is doing it again. While three million Jews are being extorted and discriminated against in the Soviet Union, the United States is in the process of negotiating a "most favoured nation policy" with this country. If this treaty should go through it would be as easy for the American to support the Soviet Union, as buying United States Saving Bonds.

This whole Idea is outrageous! Jews are again being sold down the river.

We cannot stand idly by the wayside! Demonstrate your solidarity with your people. On Thursday, November 30, there will be a Chanukah demonstration for Soviet Jewry and for all oppressed Jews around the world. Also during the eight days of Chanukah wear an armband with the Star of David on it, a button, or anything to show your support.

We must not let our brothers down. If we don't help no one will. LET MY PEOPLE GO! NEVER AGAIN!

Good Work, J. Arthur

To The Editor:
I would like to express my approval of J. Arthur Gorham and his niece with the long limbs and soft bosom, which he so amply described in Tuesday's Collegian. Too long have the proponents of goodness and purity waited to express their outrage at the lewd and lascivious behavior of the students here at UMass. I was shocked to read that students are actually cohabitating without sanction of the church.

Those students are just destroying their minds with S E X when they could be applying themselves to their studies. Until S E X is banned from this campus, until people realize the evil of cohabitation, until more people emmulate J. Arthur Gorham and his long brown limbed soft bosomed niece, then I shall continue to lock my door after my seven o'clock snack of milk and crackers, and allow no scarlet temptress into my domain.

Illiberal Bystander

To The Editor:
UPON ASKING AN ILLIBERAL BYSTANDER TO SIGN THE PAUL CHANDLER

PETITION

You don't know him, but he knows you
he feels you as much as he in his chest, in his mind, in his soul.

You say: I don't know him
I can't sign for him for people I don't know.
(Did you vote; did you know Nixon?)

Would he say: i can't work i can't struggle
i can't study
i can't teach i can't think i can't fight
i can't love
i can't die
for you?
i don't know you.
The length and breadth of his signature is for you me we

Would you have given up anything to sign your name?
Caught in the swirling flush of this university with your white flag held above the drowning bilge you have no voice, no body, no mind, no hope drowning
Should he, we, walk our way by....we do not know you, you say.

It is time to offer more than drying ink.
Lucha Siempre!

To The Editor:
The members of the Fifth Floor, Webster House, Orchard Hill, would like to express our deepest gratitude and appreciation to Mr. J. Arthur Gorham III, for shining a little light upon our depraved lives.

We have unanimously agreed to turn our backs on the licentiousness around us, and therefore shall in the future bring a halt to all weekend orgies, in order that we may save the flowers of virginity on the floor.

Even though they may be a bit wilted, better late than never!!

Find Boggs

To The Editor:
If we can spend millions and millions for the people of Bangladesh who have never done anything for us, it seems only fair that we could continue the search for Senator Hale Boggs, our fallen compatriot. We ought to deploy a few B-52's with their sophisticated infra-red detection devices, if necessary. It's better for us to locate and return the remains of this outstanding citizen, with all due respect and honor, rather than discover some years hence on the CBS Evening News that some hippies have discovered his bones and wristwatch in some wolf's cave. Let us continue to search for Hale Boggs, and the cost be damned!

Shocked

To The Editor:
I have been attending UMass since 1970, and I was shocked and dismayed at J. Arthur Gorham III's letter in Tuesday's Collegian. The despicable goings on that accusses this University of harboring must be exaggerated allegations. If anyone knows of such sinful "cheap night's adventure", birth control pills passed out "willy nilly", dirty books (OK'd by Nixon's committee, but we all know they're dirty), or most horrible of all, people sleeping together unwed, please let me know. I must assume that he is mistaken, and sitting on his "shaft".

'WE CAN'T GO ON MEETING AND MEETING AND MEETING LIKE THIS!'

Unforgivable Night

To The Editor:
One Saturday nite this semester was an unforgivable nite for me and the UMass Security. The incident occured in front of the dorm J.F.K. I was getting ready to go out to dinner and at roughly 6:25 I was looking out from my window and saw two UMass police cars in front of the building. They must have been ticketing. Well my girlfriend's car was parked out in front of the dorm, so I quickly put my coat on, grabbed the keys to her car and in my haste I forgot my wallet with my license. I ran down 14 flights of stairs like a bat out of hell, went outside and walked over to a group of officers and asked them if they were towing. One officer approached me and said they were and "don't give me any shit," was his reply. I didn't provoke the officer and I asked him a question while I felt calm and collected. I then turned around and proceeded to walk over to my girlfriend's car to park it somewhere else. I might also add that my car had already been ticketed as were most of the cars. The officer followed me to the car and asked for my license and registration. He then asked me who the owner of the car was. I said it was my girlfriend's. I told him that I would run upstairs and get my license, for it wasn't on me, and get the owner of the car, who was my girlfriend. A few moments beforehand he opened his coat to show me his illustrious badge, and said "don't give me any shit." He again used the abusive language while addressing me, and I didn't even give him the slightest hassle. He then added, with what I felt was a wry smile, a regular shit-eating grin, "No problem, that's okay we will tow the car away for you." I stood there in pure amazement and thought to myself that I am probably having a bad dream. Then to my astonishment he called over to a tow truck which was waiting, pointed to my car and said, "take this one first." He couldn't take anyone else's he took mine first. With that I ran upstairs got my girlfriend and my wallet and we both ran downstairs only to find that indeed my car was towed and that Sgt. Taylor the one who was giving me the hard time had also left. He towed the car just because I was there. I was alone when I conferred with him. Well, I hitched a ride with another tow truck back to the towing establishment, and luckily I had seventeen dollars on me to pay for the goddam towing. Only cash not checks did the place accept. My girlfriend and I drove directly to UMass Security so I could register a complaint against Sgt. Taylor. I told the officer on duty the whole incident between the Sgt. and I and he seemed to agree with me. He was much more understanding than Sgt. Taylor, who I felt carried a grudge against the student. The officer on duty called in the Sgt. upon my request. Sgt. Taylor walked in a few minutes later. He told me that he didn't want to discuss anything, which is his right, and told me to file a complaint sheet, see my lawyer, or go to Whitmore, with that he left. I see here two extremes, one the understanding officer who listens and gives me advice, as was the case with officer on duty, and two the Sergeant or men like him on the force who do not care for the student and who seems unreasonable, cold, and inhuman. Yes, I am taking this case to the higher authorities and see what can be done. I think the student/UMass police relationship stinks, and something has to be done to prevent such abusive language, and incidents like this one. True I was parked illegally, the car was there for ten minutes, but he should have been more kind and given me a few minutes to produce what he wanted. This is yet another true incident where I have to pay for Sergeant Taylor's bullhead actions. By the way I never went out to dinner that evening, first, I was too sick to my stomach, and secondly, I had no money left.

Meditation Aids Creativity

By TERRY METROPOLE

In this scientific age, nothing is allowed to be presented until it has been scrutinized, sifted and sieved through the scientific method. Every study is a science-sociology, educational psychology, physiology, health science, agronomy--Creative intelligenceology? why not?

When academia finds that every subject should be studied in a systematic way, when the world as a whole sees scientific proof as the most respected endorsement to any hypothesis, the science of creative intelligence comes into being. The basis of all sciences, the science of creative intelligence systematically studies the origin, nature, development and application of creative intelligence.

The term "creativity" has been used frequently but with admitted uncertainty of meaning by educators and psychologists alike. Basically, we define creative intelligence as the potential and kinetic energy within us which has the qualities of bringing our desires and goals to visible fruition. Like all sciences, "S.C.I." has two aspects, a theoretical to provide intellectual understanding and a practical to provide direct experience.

Transcendental meditation is the practical aspect, the lab work, of this science. Through the practice of this natural technique just twice a day for fifteen minutes, the qualities of creative intelligence can be directly unfolded to enrich all aspects of life.

Although personal experience is the first verification of the unfoldment of creative intelligence, we can now express the more concrete evidence which is being continuously revealed through scientific experiments. A small pamphlet has been prepared which shows in graphic form the results in physiological and psychosociological terms.

The most interesting study is that done by Wallace and Benson which shows the oxygen consumption during the practice of transcendental meditation decreasing 16% during just five minutes of meditation. During a full nights sleep, the decrease is only about half this amount. This indicates that the body is functioning more efficiently and therefore needs less oxygen--also that one is experiencing a very deep level of rest. The conclusion of the pamphlet effectively summarizes the possibilities of transcendental meditation:

PHYSIOLOGICAL: TM produces a deep state of restful alertness which rejuvenates and normalizes the nervous system.

PHYCHOLOGICAL: TM eliminates mental stress, promotes clearer thinking and greater comprehension; it enriches perception, improves outlook and promotes efficiency and effectiveness in life.

SOCIOLOGICAL: TM eliminates tension and discord and promotes more harmonious and fulfilling interpersonal relationships, thus making every individual more useful to himself and to others and bringing fulfillment to the purpose of society.

SIMS is pleased to announce the third event in the distinguished visitor's series. Mr. Charles Donahue, the finest lecturer in the country on transcendental meditation will speak this Thursday evening, November 30 at 8 P.M. in Herter 231. The pamphlets on scientific research will be available at this time and individual slides on the research will be shown and explained more fully.

Sargent Has 'No Simple Answers'

Three University of Massachusetts officers Tuesday downplayed Gov. Francis W. Sargent's suggestions for changes in public higher education and warned that there are "no simple answers" to the question of how to provide quality education inexpensively.

University President Robert C. Wood said many of the suggestions contained in Sargent's "white paper" delivered to trustees of all state institutions of higher education last month have been discussed in a university-sponsored study and that some innovations already are going on. But, he said, some of the suggestions, if implemented, may not be cheap and he maintained he must also worry about "intellectual excellence."

'Unquestioned Growth'

Wood, who observed that 10 years of "unquestioned growth (of the university) are clearly over," said that there is now a debate over the direction and character of higher education-together with a discussion of finances-going on throughout the nation as well as in Massachusetts. "This kind of debate is welcomed and we undertake it with a good deal of spirit and zest," he said.

The university president discussed these issues during a visit to the offices of the Worcester Telegram and The Evening Gazette. He was accompanied by Randolph Bromery and Roy Hamilton, chancellors of the Amherst and Boston campuses respectively.

Wood, a soft-spoken man who almost constantly fingers a set of worry beads strung on rawhide cord, referred early in the interview to the Framingham meeting at which Gov. Sargent made suggestions for "major reform" in public higher education.

Proposals By Sargent

Sargent had proposed implementation of three-year undergraduate programs as an option; establishment of an "open university;" a revamping of the tuition structure to include raises in tuition fees coupled with more aid for low-income students; an "all-out" program of cooperation between public and private institutions; and establishment of faculty and tenure policies based on teaching excellence.

Hamilton said all these suggestions are now being tried at various places aound the country, "with a variety of results."

"Some of them do make a difference and some of them don't. And many don't cost any less," he said, adding, "These things are not new."

Wood said implementation of a three-year program "may help some students" but it would not change the university's program and it "can't be offered as an escape from intellectual excellence."

University Without Walls

A "university without walls" along the lines of the "open university" concept and featuring a greater flexibility as to where and how academic requirements are to be completed has been in operation for three years on a limited basis in Amherst, Wood said. Many new ideas will be implemented as the Boston branch of the university grows, he said.

Wood said he would go along with a tuition increase if there was a guarantee of greater financial aid first.

Moving Off

Students planning and who are eligible to move off-campus for the Spring Semester, 1973, must fill out the necessary forms for the return of the Security Deposit at the Housing Office, 235 Whitmore Building.

Students eligible to reside off-campus are students who will be:

1. Married
2. Seniors (Class of 1973)
3. Commuting from the home of parents within a 40-mile radius of Amherst.
4. 21 years of age as of January 25, 1973

Students not covered by the above categories will be required to reside in a University residence hall and will be billed accordingly.

Students Planning to Withdraw

Students planning not to return to school next semester must inform the Registrar of their intentions so that the Security Deposit can be refunded to them.

'Advocates For Human Potential' Enters 2nd Phase

The Center for the Study of Human Potential of the School of Education has begun the second phase of its program-Advocates for the Development of Human Potential. The A.D.H.P.-Advocates Program with an annual budget of $134,855 combines the University's ability to develop academically the professional skills of its students while simultaneously serving the Commonwealth in the care of its troubled youth.

The Advocates Program is just one part of a state wide effort by the Department of Youth Services to move from an institutional model in the rehabilitation of youth to one that is based in a community setting. This controversial move by the Department has been motivated by reports of brutality, high costs, and high recidivism rates within the large training and reform schools. The Advocates Program has the opposite goals in mind.

This University sponsored program began in September with the admittance of two of the twenty youths to be in the program. As the youth population under A.D.H.P. nears capacity program, officials are still looking for qualified graduate students interested in the long term care of youth to complete the program and more importantly expand it for the Spring Semester.

The basic objective of the program is to provide individualized treatment of youths in the care and custody of the Department of Youth Services. Treatment is delivered by placing selected youth between the age of 7 and 17 in the immediate care of graduate students who can demonstrate an ability in handling youth.

The impact of such a relationship is to further develop the skills of these graduate students by bridging the gap between the reality of dealing with troubled youth and the classroom. Students as part of their required course work deal with youth in relation to the home environment provided by the graduate student with financial support from the program.

The long range goal for the University and participating graduate students is the development of an academic program within the field of juvenile corrections and education. Traditionally, staff people in this field had only to meet civil service requirements to obtain youth service jobs. Interest in youth was not a consideration. What is being conducted at the University of Massachusetts is that Department personnel and other qualified persons with a sincere interest in youth are entering the University to obtain degrees in related areas. A majority of the students admitted under the Advocates Program were Department personnel from Western Massachusetts.

For youth within the Advocates Program the rehabilitative effects it has on them can be measured in the difference between this University based program and the correctional institution. The supervision component of the Advocates Program is more intense because the youth is living with an advocate on a one-to-one relationship. Combine this relationship with a stable home environment the youth's other needs and identity are more easily reconciled.

The Advocates Program is geared toward treating youth on an individualized basis while an institution or even a halfway house deals with youth on a group basis. Also because youth live in separate homes within a community it is easier for them to integrate back into society without the possibility of being identified as part of a program working with "juvenile delinquents."

This characteristic of the Advocates Program where youth are set apart does not imply complete isolation from the potential resources that could be generated from a program of twenty graduate students. The advocates in the program act as individuals toward their charges but work as a group in developing an on going source of information and contacts at the University and in the community that will help in getting a youth back on the right track.

The idea that youths also live in different homes and in different communities is also the concern of individuals who worry about community resources and the drains new programs may put on them. In the case of the Advocates Program youth are dispersed in severl communities so no town or school system feels the burden of twenty new faces.

Still the Advocates Program is an experiment in human responses to a University based program's intervention into the cycle of juvenile delinquency. However, the taxpayer should take this into consideration. The Advocates Program costs slightly more than half of what it cost to keep a youth in a reform school on a weekly basis. In taking this into account it should also be remembered that within 90 days 80% or more of the youth in these institutions returned to them.

As an alternative rehabilitative service the Advocates Program replaces bars and concrete with a family environment close to the youth's home. The experience of the program directors is that even a gradual reconciliation between youth and the home is occurring. This would not happen at all if the youth were sent to the institutions located in the east.

Program officials feel that its Advocates Program has established itself as positive program having the desired learning and rehabilitative effects on its participants. Currently the direction the program is taking is toward expansion. Again the need is for graduate students who can handle youth and provide a stable environment on a long term basis. Applicants should call Ernie Reis at the Center for the Study of Human Potential at 545-0873(75) for more specific information concerning selection procedures and program financial support.

Popkin Calls Grand Juries Threat To Freedom

BOSTON (AP) - The use of grand juries as a weapon by prosecuting government attorneys has become a threat to the freedom of speech and individual liberty, Harvard Prof. Samuel L. Popkin said Tuesday after he was released from jail for refusing to answer questions during an investigation of the Pentagon Papers.

Popkin was jailed Nov. 21 on a contempt citation after he refused to answer 14 questions before a grand jury regarding information he had learned from sources in connection with the release of the once-secret Pentagon Papers, a government study on the origins of the Vietnam War.

He was released from the Norfolk County Jail in Dedham after the federal grand jury investigating how the Pentagon Papers' were given to the press disbanded in Boston without returning an indictment.

The grand jury had deliberated nearly a year.

Popkin said at a Tuesday news conference that he still was not certain why he was called before the grand jury, and that many of the questions he was asked had nothing to do with what he was told the grand jury was about.

Grand juries in this country "have become the government's tool for gathering intelligence," Popkin said.

"There is an incredible bag of tricks that go along with grand juries in this country.

"With the grand jury as the instrument, the ability of scholars and journalists to provide citizens with information essential in a democracy may be threatened," Popkin told a news conference.

Popkin had been scheduled to stay in jail until the grand jury expired Jan. 12, and he said at the news conference he thought the grant jury might have been ready to disband earlier, "but they might have stayed in session long enough to make me go to jail."

"My week in jail probably didn't prove anything," Popkin said, "except that I meant what I said in court - that I had certain ethics and principles. And maybe I proved that grand juries need to be looked at in this society."

"If scholars and journalists cannot talk in confidence with officials," Popkin said, "the 1st amendment will protect nothing more than polemics and official handouts."

Popkin said that as a scholar, he considers himself part of a "free press - what's the difference between writing a book or a newspaper?"

Popkin left the Dedham jail at about 10:45 Tuesday morning with his wife and his attorney, William Homans.

His wife Susan said she was "surprised at the release. It certainly will be a nicer Christmas."

Popkin said his first thought when he was told about the release was that "I'm going to be able to hug my wife again."

The 30-year-old assistant professor of government said he plans to relax for a week and will resume teaching his classes at Harvard University next Tuesday.

Homans said that although Popkin is out of prison, it is not necessarily the end of his involvement in the case. Homans said he does not expect it, but Popkin could be called before another grand jury at any time.

U.S. Atty. James Gabriel said the grand jury was taken before U.S. District Court Judge Frank J. Murray Tuesday morning and the court was told there would be no more evidence presented to the grand jury "between now and the time it would naturally terminate." The termination date was for Jan. 12.

He said Popkin was automatically released at the time the grand jury was discharged.

Since the Popkin case has received national publicity, Gabriel said the publicity might hinder Ellsberg's chances of receiving a fair trial. The panel was discharged, to avoid this, Gabriel said.

He said it is possible a new grand jury might be empannelled in Boston after the completion of the Ellsberg trial.

Daniel Klubock, an attorney for Popkin, said he had been informed by the U.S. attorney's office that the government would present no more evidence until the completion of the trial of Daniel Ellsberg, who is being tried on charges of releasing the secret documents about U.S. involvement in Viet-'nam.

In a statement before he was jailed, Popkin said, "My grand jury testimony made clear that I have no knowledge about the distribution and publication of the Pentagon Papers.

"I have refused to answer questions which require me to name confidential research sources and which have no bearing on the stated purpose of the grand jury."

Popkin has done research into U.S. involvement in Vietnam and was an associate of Ellsberg, a professor at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

U.S. attorneys finally insisted that Popkin answer only three of the 14 questions - two dealing with whom he had interviewed to find out who participated in the Pentagon Papers study and a third asking if he had discussed the study with Ellsberg between Jan. 1 and June 13, 1971.

Special Hiring Programs Supported

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP)--The hiring of more women and racial-minority members by America's colleges and universities has practical political and economic value as well as moral worth, the president of Wellesley College said Wednesday.

Special hiring programs, Barbara W. Newell told the National Conference on Affirmative Action, are justifiable even if they require resources of our institutions to assure employment opportunities for women and the racial minorities.''

Aside from the moral rightness of equal opportunity, she said, "the political reality is that the majority of Americans who are concerned in the current human rights renaissance, noting that women and non-whites comprise more than half the population.

Affirmative action also is an outgrowth of the increasing number of women who have joined the job market out of economic necessity, Mrs. Newell said.

Many women must work because they are their family's sole support, while others take jobs "in order to preserve the new and higher family life-style to which contemporary couples have become accustomed," she said.

She urged the 200 representatives of higher-education institutions in the audience to admit and treat their women students on the same basis with men.

"TV may enjoy the dumb blonde role, but colleges shouldn't reinforce such behavior," Mrs. Newell said. "Only until women students speak out in class, defend positions, take leadership roles on campus and participate fully is their education equal."

Syracuse University Chancellor Melvin A. Eggers, whose institution is conference sponsor, and Thomas Barnette, contract compliance specialist for the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare's civil rights office, were afternoon speakers.

J. Stanley Pottinger, HEW civil rights director, noted that his office released a set of employment guidelines for colleges Oct. 1, but he denied that the regulations amounted to ordered reverse discrimination against white males.

"Neither women nor racial minority members are asking for preferential treatment," he contended. "In fact, it would be an insult to them to know they were being hired because of their sex or color and not because of their qualifications."

☆ By SYDNEY OMARR ☆

Aries is independent, unique, fiery and original. These natives can also be domineering, aggressive and insistent on having things their own way. The Aries individual seldom does anything halfway, especially where love is concerned. Aries is the inventor, the innovator and the person who, at times, can be soft, affectionate and a pushover for a compliment. Aries is Mars, a natural fighter and a pioneer.

ARIES (March 21-April 10): Some partnerships, special relationships could be overturned. Key is to bide your time. Control tendency to act on impulse. See in light of reality. One you admire is puzzled. Don't push for decision.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): There are pressures but you can overcome them. Capricorn plays significant role. Pace yourself. Study Aries message. Don't insist or demand. Co-operate with older individual. You get chance you deserve.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish what you start. You are due to attract attention in favorable manner. Apply unique methods. Be creative. Don't follow usual routine. Changes are necessary. Work associate may be ill. You are called upon for aid.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Study Gemini message. Stick to individual style. Be independent, creative. What appears to be opposition is due to melt. Means you get your way if you adhere to principles. Build for security.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Questions, answers apt to be riddled by confusion. Older family member could be ally if you throw aside false pride. Review plans. There have been changes in situation. Become aware of them.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Money may come and go freely -too freely. Forces tend to be scattered. You make interesting contacts but nothing serious is apt to be resolved. Key is to have sense of humor about your own foibles.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your way of dressing, expressing could undergo abrupt change. You can tear down now in order to rebuild. Be aware of details. Maintain confidence. Accept need for some revisions. But stick to basic principles.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You gain information by checking behind scenes. Means don't base final judgment on surface indications. There is apt to be special contact now with Gemini, Virgo individuals. Accent is on group, club, institution.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Entertain at home, include family in special affair. Strive for harmony at home. Promote friendships which can lead to important professional contacts. Taurus, Libra persons are apt to be in picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You get boost from unorthodox source. You are given friendly advice about boss, authoritative figure. Be analytical. Review plans. Study goal. You may want to change path. Leave yourself room.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look beyond current dissension. You can build, plan for future, including travel and special study. Utilize lessons learned in past. Accept responsibility. You can seize opportunity for financial gain.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Don't take promises too seriously. Some persons now, including friends, may imply one thing but mean something else. Know it and be discerning. Check with more than one source. Get balanced view.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you travel, study, have fine sense of humor and a tendency to put on weight. Two months ago there was domestic change which was beneficial. Next month you get rid of burden. Your credo is apt to be an open road and open mind. You are exciting, humane individual.

Free checking accounts with $100 minimum balance at Hampshire National Bank!

That's right—Hampshire National Bank has done away with service charges on personal checking accounts—just so long as you maintain a $100 minimum balance in your account.

The average cost of service charges is $15 to $20 a year. This is the cost that you'll save by maintaining a $100 minimum balance. Where else can $100 earn you that kind of money?

And it's easier to balance your checkbook, too! There's no service charge to remember to deduct. Just add your deposits and subtract your checks—that's the only bookkeeping necessary!

If your balance should drop below $100 in any month, you pay a $3 charge for that month.

This minimum balance checking account is offered to individuals only—not for business accounts.

Part II: Bullock Leaves the Gridiron

Ed. Note: This is the second and final part of a two-part series by Jack Berryman and John Loy on Matthew Bullock, who's thought to be the first black head coach at a white school.

Bullock's services were again acquired by Massachusetts for the 1908 season, but this would be his last year coaching in New England. The 1908 M.A.C. team had lost the majority of its varsity players from the successful 1907 squad and Coach Bullock did well to finish with a 3-3-3 record. Upon completion of his coaching duties, he accepted a position as director of athletics and teacher at Atlanta Baptist College (Morehouse) in Atlanta, Georgia.

Bullock produced "some of the fastest and cleanest football teams in the South"; and in collaboration with Edwin Henderson established the annual selection of All-College Negro teams. He taught a variety of courses at Morehouse College, including economics, history, Latin and sociology. One of his most notable fellow faculty members was W.E.B. DuBois. Bullock remained at Morehouse College for four years and then gave up his position to practice law in the city of Atlanta for two years. Also while in Atlanta he married Miss Katherine H. Wright on September 21, 1910, who bore him two children; a son, Matthew W., Jr. and a daughter, Julia Amanda.

In 1915 Matthew Bullock was asked to become Dean of the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Normal, Alabama. He accepted this position for two years and then returned to Boston where he was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar in 1917. Shortly after returning to Boston, Bullock went to Camp Meade, Maryland where he served as YMCA Educational Secretary for three months before leaving for France with the 369th Infantry Regiment. He served in the American Expeditionary Forces for fifteen months as a YMCA War Work Physical Director. In keeping with his keen athletic interests he attended the Inter-Allied Games in Paris in July, 1918.

Upon his return to the States in 1919 he began a long and distinguished career as a civic leader. From 1919 to 1921 he served as executive secretary of the Boston Urban League; and from 1925-1926 served as Special Assistant Attorney General for the state of Massachusetts. In 1927 he was appointed a member of the Massachusetts Board of Parole and served on the board in various capacities, including that of chairman, until 1948. In addition to these duties and a very active law career, Matthew Bullock held memberships in the Knights of Pythias, the Masonic Order and the Omega Psi Phi college fraternity.

This brief biographical sketch reflects a rags-to-riches story of a remarkable man. However, the above biographical account fails to document the many difficulties Matthew Bullock experienced as a black American. As a boy in Boston, Bullock lived in several different tenement quarters as his parents moved from one location to another in a continual effort to acquire better housing for the family. As an athlete at Dartmouth he often had to face opposing teams that had explicit designs "to get the colored end." Most tragically, Bullock as a highly educated and qualified professional person had great difficulty in finding suitable employment as a young man. Thus, notwithstanding his great love for football, he was largely forced to take up coaching because he could not find a satisfactory position in law. Finally, throughout his career he was not always accorded full friendship from his white colleagues. A poignant example is the case of a Dartmouth classmate he met often over the years at Class Reunions. After the elapse of some forty years his classmate finally condescended to introducing his wife to Bullock.

THIS IS HOW MATTHEW BULLOCK looked, apparently after his coaching days were over. The date of the photo is uncertain. Both the story and the pictures that have run with it are courtesy of Jack Berryman and John Loy.

Matthew Bullock, however, seldom let such matters blunt his optimistic outlook on life or diminish his trust in people. His faith in his fellow man is reflected in time, money and effort he devoted as a leader of the Baha'i National Assembly. As elegantly expressed in the honorary degree citation from his alma mater:

Concern for your fellow man continued to occupy your energies after retirement. You are a recognized leader of the Baha'i Faith, and you have traveled all over the world, at your own expense, in the interest of that religion. You believe very deeply that the establishment of universal justice and freedom requires the spiritual and moral awakening of all people.

Matthew Washington Bullock retired from active law practice at the age of 84. Since 1966 he has lived with his daughter, Julia Gaddy, in Detroit. With his son Matthew, Jr., currently a judge for the Court of Common Pleas in Philadelphia, Matthew, Sr. has made annual pilgrimages in recent years to Hanover, New Hampshire to be in attendance at Dartmouth's Homecoming Games. This past September he celebrated his 91st birthday and a long life as an outstanding black leader in American society.

Obituary

Ego Eagle Dies Suddenly

AMHERST–Ego Eagle, 60, of Chestnut Hill, Boston, died unexpectedly Saturday, following a head-on collison with a Minuteman machine, Mass Aggie News sources said last night.

Despite attempts to rescue the bird by Eagle owner Joe Yukica, medical examiner Victor Keedy of Amherst pronounced the victim died on arrival at Alumnae Stadium Hospital.

Keedy ruled the cause of death was apparently asphyxiation due to pride inhalation and multiple wounds of the ego inflicted in the crash with the Minuteman vehicle.

Driver of the Minuteman, Richard MacPherson–a touch football coach at the Aggie school, said that he pitied the Eagle, but claimed that it was negligent driving on the part of Yukica.

As MacPherson put it: "We were both driving in the same direction, and the road was just too narrow for the both of us to travel."

"I want you to know that I feel sorry for Yukica, but by the same token, I want you to know that I'm glad our people survived the crash. (Others from the Mass Aggie School haven't been as fortunate.) It's one of those things."

MacPherson recalled that the Minuteman party was New Jersey-bound when the Eagle called out: "You've gone far enough Mass Aggie!" MacPherson slammed on the brakes and accepted the challenge which resulted in immediate impact.

MacPherson yelled back: "Any driver that thinks he can get away with being a smart aleck, is a loser!"

Funeral services will be held in the Pub. Burial will take place when the Boston Colleagues of the fallen Eagle come in for a special service to be held in Curry Hicks Cage with Rev. Jack Leaman officiating.

Reserve System Talk of Meetings

HONOLULU (AP) — Commissioner Bowie Kuhn admitted Wednesday that "there is a considerable difference" so far in negotiating sessions being carried on between major league baseball and the players association aimed at avoiding a repetition of last spring's strike.

Kuhn revealed the proposals that baseball owners have made to the players so far and said:

"It has been indicated to the club's negotiators that these proposals are not adequate in the minds of the players to bring about a settlement."

The players association is currently meeting in the Bahamas, studying the multi-part package submitted by the owners. Kuhn said that the initial reaction of the player's negotiators was negative.

Meanwhile, three more player trades spiced Wednesday's action. Wednesday's major swaps sent reliever Wayne Granger from Minnesota to St. Louis in exchange for outfielder Larry Hisle and pitcher John Cumberland, and pitcher Tom Bradley from the Chicago White Sox to San Francisco in exchange for outfielder Ken Henderson and pitcher Steve Stone.

In another trade, Houston and St. Louis exchanged four young players, the Astros getting catcher Skip Jutzke and infielder Milt Ramirez with infielders Ray Busse and Bobby Fenwick moving to the Cardinals.

But Kuhn's packed news conference dominated most the day's interest. The commissioner outlined in great detail the latest offer by the clubs and said that while he is not apprehensive at the moment, "a repetition of last spring's strike could have a devastating affect on baseball." The commissioner said that 13 formal negotiating sessions have been held since early September.

"Firstly, on the matter of the reserve system," Kuhn said, "the clubs have proposed that a player with five years of major league service becomes a free agent unless his club offers a salary of at least $30,000 for his sixth year. A player with eight years of major league service becomes a free agent unless his club offers a salary of at least $40,000 for his ninth year."

Also the owners propose to create a draft pool of three players from each major league roster available for selection by other clubs at the price of $35,000 to create more playing opportunities. The clubs also offered to reduce under control rosters from 40 to 38 and major league rosters from 25 to 23 and that players with 10 years of major league service, the last five with one club, be consulted and asked for consent of any reassignment of their contracts.

Swift Don is Back!

MIAMI (AP) - Two years ago horse-lover John Birdsong of Detroit purchased a broken down thoroughbred named Swift Don for $1 to save the four-year-old animal from destruction.

So far the investment has earned Birdsong $6,433 as Swift Don won three of his first five comeback starts at Miami's Calder Race Course in the last two months.

A 26-year-old recreational therapist at Detroit's Mount Sinai Hospital, Birdsong and horse breeder Joan McNicth nursed Swift Don back to health from a broken leg, but the real credit for the success story belongs to well-known trainer Mickey Giardelli of Detroit. Last September, he volunteered to take the stallion to "see if I could do anything with him."

"I really worked on him and got him going sound enough to take a chance and run him," Giardelli said. "I just wanted to see him get around the race track in one piece. He only beat one horse but he did close quite a bit of ground. I ran him back a week later, a mile and a sixteenth, and he won. Then I shipped him down to Calder and you know the rest."

In his first start at the Miami track last month, Swift Don was beaten by a nose. Next time out he won by 17 lengths and has been going strong ever since.

"I don't think any horse I ever had has given me more satisfaction," Giardelli said. "Being able to win some races for a great kid like John is really beautiful.

"When my wife called him up last Friday night to tell him the horse had won again, he was so happy he started crying."

It was about time Birdsong's luck with horses changed.

He received word of Swift Don's success story from a Detroit hospital bed where he is recovering from a form of temporary paralysis contracted when mucous from the mouth of another horse he was inspecting got into a cut on his hand.

"He's still in Mount Siani, flat on his back," Giardelli said. "He's out of the woods now, though, and he's going to make it back soon. Just like his horse."

Rusty Skaters Win Opener, 3-1

By BILL BALLOU

BOSTON--The UMass Minutemen, supposedly long on offense and short on defense, turned the tables around last night to come out of the Boston Arena with a 3-1 opening night win over Boston State.

The man of the hour (or minute) had to be senior goalie Peter Erickson. Erickson, who sat out last year with bad knees, came back to hand in a brilliant performance in leading the Minutemen to victory.

Erickson, playing in classic stand-up style, stood the Warriors on their heads while making 24 saves. The only shot to get by him was a trickler off the stick of John Caccomo late in the third period, during a short handed situation.

Erickson's counterpart, Doug Brooks was equally brilliant in the Boston State nets. Brooks stopped 50 UMass shots, a school record, as the Minutemen poured at him from every angle.

The Minutemen weren't particularly impressive on offense and couldn't get it by Brooks until Lonnie Avery fired a power play goal by him at 12:15 of the second period.

Despite that power play goal the Minutemen had a terrible time of it with the man advantage. Boston State, who was supposed to be killing the penalties, actually mounted their best attacks while a man short.

The Minutemen were especially lucky early in the game as the Warriors blew consecutive two-on-0 breaks while a man down.

Scoring "star" for the Minutemen was (who else) Pat Keenan. The senior centerman figured in all three UMass goals scoring one and assisting on the other two.

The other UMass goal scorer was freshman Billy Harris who, after Boston State had cut the deficit to 2-1 at 13:32 of the third period, flipped home a pass from Keenan at 14:03 to put the game on ice.

Back to Erickson and the UMass defense. "Leif the Thief" who hadn't played for over a year was particularly great in the first and third periods. His goaltending kept the Minutemen in the game in the early going. And late in the third period when the Warriors pressed a power play advantage Erickson kept them off the board with some sparklers.

Also impressive for the UMass defense was sophomore Mike Ellis. Ellis moved the puck well all night and teamed up with Bob Shallalie to do a good job defensively.

Scoring Summary

First Period: No Scoring.

Second Period: UMass–Avery Keenan, Harris) 12:15.

Third Period: UMass–Keenan (Riley) 9:08.

Boston State--Caccamo (Legrow) 13:32.

UMass--Harris (Keenan) 14:03.

Aggies Vs. Aggies?? Really...

By EARLE BARROLL

While there is a break in this extended football season, this seems to be the best time to aquaint you with UMass' opponent in the Boardwalk Bowl, the University of California at Davis.

Right away this team has something about it that we can all identify with to some degree and that's its nickname: The Aggies. Seriously, no kidding. And yes, I can see it now in the Eagle's Eye – Aggies vs. Aggies.

Next, if you wish to get political, the Aggies are in the Far Western Conference which also includes a college named Whittier. If you have any knowledge of President Nixon's background, you know that Milhous was a gridder for Whittier College.

It should be interesting to see if Dick MacPherson receives a phone call from the President, if the Minutemen win the Bowl. Being that Mac is the head coach for the football team of the state university of the only state in the Union that voted for peace.

On a serious vain, though, UCal at Davis is a good football team. The Aggies won their conference this year with a perfect 5-0 record and have an overall slate of 6-1-2 dropping their last game, 36-26, to major college Pacific University, after leading at one point, 14-0.

If you ask who Pacific plays, the answer is L.S.U. and Washington and some other pretty good schools. And that should suffice.

The Aggies feature the top small college passing offense in the country, so it should come as no surprise that they also have the number one small college passer in the country, Bob Biggs (189 for 327 or 59 percent, 2200 yards and 15 td passes) and likewise the top receiver in Tay Thompson.

Thompson did miss the last two games of the season with a broken collarbone, but with the layoff he should be ready for the December 9th game. UCal had ended its season on the 18th of this month, but with Deleware refusing to accept the bid, the Aggies were asked to come east.

The very fact that this Bowl will feature East vs. West makes it even more attractive. "We want to carry the name of UMass to the far West," said MacPherson yesterday at practice. "We're going to work like hell to be respectable for this game."

Right now both schools have films in their possession of their opponent. This does make it difficult to fully prepare for each other, as films don't always tell the entire story. As Mac explained, "I really miss it that our chief scout Bob Harris won't be able to get the feel of the opposition."

UCal is probably saying the same thing right now.

Halfback Paul Metallo received the Golden Helmet Award in Boston on Tuesday for his performance against Boston College. This award goes to the outstanding New England player of the week.

Quarterback Peil Pennington won the award twice during the season.

At yesterday's Varsity M Club luncheon MacPherson noted that Steve Schubert had been nominated each week for this honor and should be chosen as the top player of the year in New England.

In the final New England AP poll, Dartmouth College was voted as the Number One Team in the region. The Big Green (7-1-1) polled 174 out of a possible 180 points while UMass (8-2) was second with 161 points, and four first place votes.

The Minutemen had their number one hopes hurt by Yale's strong showing in the polls. The Elis, who handed Dartmouth its only loss of the season and finished with a 7-2 record received one first place vote and 140 points. They also placed second on four ballots and third on two.

Overflow Crowd Cheers MacPherson

By BILL BALLOU

It was before my time, but I've heard that in the "golden age of radio" days there was some guy who used to hit his audience with the line, "Is everybody happy?"

Well, that same guy would have had a ball at yesterday's Varsity M Club luncheon as everybody, except those who grumbled about the dessert, was in a gala state of mind.

The reason's simple–Saturday's win over Boston College.

It was because of that game that an overflow crowd at the Newman Center gave Dick MacPherson a standing ovation when he walked in.

The atmosphere rubbed off on freshman basketball coach Fan Gaudette, who was there to talk hoop for awhile. Gaudette mentioned that he was with some top high school round ball stars at the game on Saturday and he said that they left the campus thinking nothing but "UMass". Games like that, Gaudette said, "help out the overall recruiting program."

MacPherson brought along a big group of seniors to the luncheon, courtesy of Varsity M, and they all came in for their share of MacPherson ribbing.

The highlight of the deal was when MacPherson read a letter from Paul Metallo in which Metallo described his attitudes toward smoking, drinking and the like. The football staff had all the members of the team do it over the summer as kind of a "commitment" to their style of life as football players.

The gory details of the Metallo philosophy aren't necessary, but the manner in which he closed out the letter is priceless.

"I might be number 44 in the program, but I'm number 1 in your hearts." I wonder where he stands in Joe Yukica's heart?

MacPherson called on Dick Cummings, as the oldest of the seniors, to speak for them. Cummings used a limited amount of adjectives to describe his feelings.

"The season was great," he said, "the team was great, and the fans were great." He didn't comment on the raviolis that he had just finished.

There were several surly comments from the people sitting at my table when the drawing for the door prize took place. Everyone around me had gotten there nice and early so they had low numbers. As usual, the winner had gotten there late and had a high number.

I suppose every party has its pooper.

Yesterday's sports head was Marty "Mugshot" Kelley.

Why The Patriots Are So Bad

It has been said many, many times by an even larger number of people. But it should be repeated many more times, because it is perhaps the most disgusting story in the history of professional sports. Disgusting because the group of gross incompetents that run the Patriots have managed to garner a large group of fans who pay good money to see the worst team in professional football.

That's right, fans, the Patsies are the worst team in professional football.

It may not be the worst, player for player, but as a team, it does not even come close to warranting the adjective "professional".

And no matter how many coaches the team fires, it does not belie the fact that the front office has not put together enough talented players at any one time to produce a winner (except for 1963, but who remembers that?).

The following short statements are admittedly non-constructive. But the New England Patriots' front office has been nothing but destructive to professional football in this area.

Well, Phil Bengtson has succeeded in simplifying the Patriots' situation–he's proven that without a doubt they're simply terrible.

Considering that two of the Baltimore Colts' three victories in a row were against the Patriots, maybe the talk of a Colt comeback is a bit premature.

Any Patriot player who cannot crack the starting line-up should really sit down and ponder where his future in professional football lies.

Billy Sullivan should make Upton Bell play quarterback for one quarter in the Pats' next game. Then, when Uppie is flat on his back, someone should ask him what difference it makes who coaches a bunch of non-talents.

The Patriots are lucky they don't have to play the Washington Redskins again.

The Patriots are paying Phil Bengtson $4,000 per game to "re-evaluate the teams' talents." Well, Phil's certainly earning his keep. After all, Gladieux's gone.

There is an unsubstantiated rumor floating around that Bengtson will try to convince Bell to trade the Pats' first round draft choice to the San Diego Chargers for the rights to attempt to make Duane Thomas say four words in a row.

How can anyone blame Carl Garrett? If that's what practicing does to those guys, why bother?

The Patriot Revolution is revolting.

Fac-Sen Extends Course Change Deadline

By JIM DEMPSEY

The Faculty Senate yesterday extended the deadline for all changes in undergraduate registration to four weeks after classes begin. This would provide students with additional time beyond the current ten-day limit to drop a course without a record takes effect in the Fall of 1973.

In other business, a motion to include Faculty Senate members on a Student Senate sub-committee was pased. Also, Provost Robert Gluckstern indicated that there are too many problems involved with establishing a January academic term to officially endorse the idea at this time.

The extension of the course change period will give students more time to evaluate their courses and decide whether or not to stay in them. It will also provide more time for exercising the pass/fail option.

On the other hand, it will limit to four weeks the period of dropping a course and receiving a grade of W. Currently students are allowed eight weeks for this change.

If a student drops a course after the deadline, a grade of F would be automatically recorded. Students would however have the option to petition their dean for a W.

The new procedure would compel students to base their decision to drop a course on reasons other than a low mid-term exam mark.

Registrar Robert Jones questioned the idea of a student beginning a course in the fifth week of classes. His comments came during a meeting of the Academic Matters Committee, who submitted the new deadline proposal to the Faculty Senate.

Some Committee members pointed out that a student could add a course at that time only with the permission of the instructor.

A few student committee members said that in general, students do not begin to work seriously in a course until the fourth or fifth week.

In presenting their proposal the Committee urged all faculty members to distribute reading lists and outline their objectives at the earliest possible class meeting. This will help students evaluate their courses and provide enough time for any necessary changes.

A special motion from the Student Senate to include three faculty members on their sub-committee on Personnel Policies won Faculty Senate approval. The sub-committee will consist of five students and three faculty members.

Some faculty senators felt that such a committee's opinion would be a threat to the Faculty's Tenure and Grievance Committee, also concerned with Personel Policies. They envisioned conflicting opinions from each committee negating each other.

Student Senator Laura Emmons said that "It is not our intent to take any authority away from Tenure and Grievance. Our purpose is to simply discuss these things in a student committee."

Faculty Senate Secretary Robert Wellman pointed out that this committee would register more of an advisory opinion on personnel matters than a final vote.

The possibility of a January academic term this school year was dismissed by Provost Gluckstern yesterday. He indicated that there are too many problems that couldn't be worked out before the intercession.

Major problems he cited were - the closing of all dormitories and dining commons during January; the difficulty in granting credit for such activities as field trips and independent study projects; a lack of funds; and general logistics problems.

He also indicated that faulty disapproval would run high. Gluckstern noted that "Some faculty members might say - I teach three courses in the Fall and three courses in the Spring. I'll be damned if I'm going to teach one in January."

He added that faculty members would be obliged to work in January. Their contracts say they are available for nine months of the year, including January, according to Gluckstern.

Gluckstern told the Senate that UMass had previously considered the proposal. "The administration decided they would not try it," said Gluckstern, "partly out of cowardice and partly out of confusion."

UMass-Boston Prof. Raps Administration

By MARK VOGLER

BOSTON - A University of Massachusetts-Boston source said last night that it is impossible to determine exactly how many people at the campus have not signed the Massachusetts loyalty oath because of "the Boston administration's refusal to cooperate."

Kenneth Ford, a UMass physics professor and a spokesman for the three plaintiffs in Boston who waged a class action suit against the oath two weeks ago, said the administration has refused to disclose the names of those still unsigned and the number of people involved in the opposition party.

"It surprises me very little," Ford commented. "Since we brought legal action, they are the defendants. We have restrained them from bringing any punitive action. So they have stopped giving us information and have refrained from making any statements."

Ford's group, represented by Att. Stephen Oleskey, filed a class action suit two weeks ago in Middlesex County Superior Court, Cambridge. Judge John W. Coddaire granted a temporary restraining order November 15 which is scheduled to be reconvened in the Middlesex court this morning after two postponements.

According to Ford, the state attorney general's office requested the delay. He said he was uninformed as to the reason why the office declined to pursue the case as originally scheduled.

Much the same attitude of indifference by the administration against oath opponents has been demonstrated at the Amherst campus where a group of 18 faculty and staff members, under the legal counsel of William A. Norris of Cummington, have a preliminary injunction pending.

Chancellor Randolph Bromery, as other UMass administrators have indicated they will do, has made no comment on how he feels about the oath issue. However, Bromery said that he will give advice as to the best legal route for those opposed to the oath to travel.

Meanwhile, UMass President Robert Wood has magnified his doubts of the oath opposition's success. A Boston source said of a Tuesday press conference that Wood was of firm belief that the current movements would fail.

Last week Wood looked unfavorably upon the recent court actions taken by university opponents to the oath. He argued that the issue brought to the court would solve nothing.

Wood said that he believed the requirement did not prohibit academic freedom and he called the recent court action "a Don Quixote effort by faculty and staff members."

While the stronger action is being asserted in the courts by the UMass-Boston group, influence and notoriety is definitely stronger in Amherst.

Asked for a major reason why this has occurred, Ford admitted it was an interesting point for discussion.

"There's been no significant coverage by the Boston papers," Ford stated. "The presses just haven't picked it up in this area. And because of the lack of coverage, the oath issue hasn't come to the consciousness of the people."

CCEBS Election

An election for CCEBS Undergraduate Student Representatives to the CCEBS Board of Directors will be held Tuesday, Dec. 5, from 6:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. in the lobby of New Africa House. Every CCEBS student is encouraged to vote and should vote. Voting will be by ballot and the representatives will be determined by popular vote.

Everywoman's Center Coming In January

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

The Everywoman's Center is presenting a six day Everywoman's "University" in the Campus Center January 8 to the 13.

The six day "university" will include workshops on women's problems at UMass, and feminist films, dance and arts and crafts exhibit.

Annette Townley, one of the organizers, said the thrust of the event was to draw on "local talent" in the valley. Townley said the Center hopes to involve female staff, faculty and students in the six day university's events.

A tentative schedule for the week was partially worked out yesterday by the steering committee of the Center.

Registration will be Monday morning January 8th on the concourse of the Campus Center, with the Arts and Crafts display tentatively opening at 10:30 a.m. in the art gallery behind the Student Union Ballroom.

Throughout the week on the eighth floor of the Campus Center there will be workshops in the morning and the afternoon. On Monday and Tuesday from 12 noon to 1:30 film shorts will be shown and discussed on the eight floor. That floor has been booked for the week by the Everywoman's Center.

Other events include a dance concert Thursday night and two feminist plays Friday night. One will be "Variations on a Dream" by UMass undergraduate Judy Katz. Both events will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8 p.m.

Saturday evening in the Blue Wall there will be a dance. The "Deadly Nightshade" will be performing starting at 9:00 p.m.

A full schedule will be released on December 11th.

Everywoman's Workshop Offered

Everywoman's Center is offering a 3-day mini workshop to classified women employees, students and area women. Paula Howes of the Amherst Record will lead a discussion on the female/male relationship and coexisting with women's liberation.

Participants will meet on December 5, 6 and 7 from 6 to 7:15 p.m. at Everywoman's Center in Munson Hall. To register for this free workshop please call Mary LaSota at 545-0865 or 545-0883.

SIMS Explained

By KERRY MELLO

Speaking before a large audience at Herter Hall last night, Charlie Donahue, a nationwide SIMS (Students International Meditation Society) instructor, explained the nature and physiology of the science of Transcendental Meditation.

"Meditation is not a religion," Donahue stated, "but a preparation for activity." He added that in addition to the obvious implications of TM, such as a lessening of tension and anxiety, there are many more subtle manifestations.

"With meditation," says Donahue, "consciousness pervades all experience," allowing the individual to "develop the ability to experience each next experience."

This, Donahue explains, differs greatly from the usual process of experience by thought. In thinking, an individual uses the mind. Doing this he "consumes energy and performing an activity," the lecturer stated.

Meditation, on the other hand, is mind expanding. Donahue points out that this conserves energy and permits the individual to transfer his energies to some other activity in daily living. "The mind is more clear and action is more strong," he stated.

In an allusion to the philosopher Hume, Donahue stated, "the question of what we experience is less than who is experiencing it." He explained that with meditation, the process of experience becomes a source for the individual rather than an activity.

"In transcendention," he stated, "we systematically experience finer and finer levels of thought, until we reach the most intimate constituent of what we are. This inner level is known as consciousness and must be experienced rather than thought about."

Donahue pointed out the fact that "meditation has practical as well as intellectual advantages." He noted that in a study done of students in California, those who meditated found they could cope with daily situations much more easily and efficiently.

He added that, "This is the ultimate goal of meditation, the capacity to experience consciousness in each activity of life."

In demonstrating the physiological advantages of meditation, Donahue referred to a study done by the magazine Scientific American.

Using a series of graphs as proof, he pointed out that meditation relieves more stress than either sleep or hypnosis.

"The ability to accustom oneself to an object causing stress, a process known as habituation, is much easier, when an individual practices meditation."

When asked if there were pre-requisites to meditation, Donahue replied that all that was needed was the ability to think. "You don't have to be an intellectual," he stated, "you don't even have to believe in it to get results."

The lecture was the first in a seven part series, to be given over the next week.

Hatch Asks Bill Support

By HUGH OWEN

Speaking before the New England Regional Conference on Population Policy last night was Francis Hatch, minority leader of the Massachusetts House of Representatives.

Hatch first stressed the need for the passage of a land use bill which he and Representative John Ames (R—Easton) have introduced into the House. This bill Hatch said, would be, a better version of the one which Hatch introduced last year.

"For every day, every month that we wait more and more land is being consumed by rapidly spreading housing developments. Where two families reside now, by the year 2000 there will be one extra family," said Hatch.

Hatch also stated the hope he has for technology to solve some of the current land use problems. He continued, however, by saying that technology is destructive by its very nature and only causes long range problems with the environment.

For example, California had to irrigate to provide housing developments with water. To provide more water the Army Corps of Engineers had to build damns which only served to use up more land. The cycle will continue, according to Hatch, until there is no more land left.

Switching back to some of the problems in New England, Hatch asked what use a deep-water oil port would be for the people of New England. Should industrialization be the goal of every New England state, or should their goal be to protect and conserve their natural resources, he asked.

Hatch said that if the primary concern of a deep-water oil port was to bolster economy, then perhaps it would be of more interest to look for ways in which the natural resources of New England could provide added wealth. More public recreation areas to draw tourist trade is one way in which Hatch said this could be done.

In order for these natural resources to be saved, Hatch said, there must be more public interest and support. Also, there must be an attack on all levels of government to initiate change.

"A good working start is critically important," according to Hatch." It will force us to look at the magnitude of the job facing us."

Hatch went on the cite a complete overhaul in the structural change of the state government as a step in the right direction. As it is now, he said, there are too many different organizations working against each other in the government. He said this battle would probably make the Battle for Bull Run look like a battle of tin soldiers.

One of the best ways to win this battle, Hatch continued, is to solicit support from the public. "The general public, however, is not concerned about these things. So it will be our job to find ways to make them concerned," said Hatch.

According to Hatch, different interest groups should be approached to throw some support to this battle. Also, he said, a referendum could be instituted to show just how much support could be mustered.

One other group which could probably be counted for support, said Hatch, was the youth group. "These people are highly susceptible to fads, and perhaps we could get them interested in lending us support."

The New England Regional Conference on Population has been holding workshops since Wednesday. Some of the panels have included discussions on topics such as what New England stated have already done to influence population growth and distribution and state and local actions to influence population distribution in New England.

Tomorrow at 12:30 Robert Wood, President of the University of Massachusetts, will be speaking before the conference.

C.C. Budget Surplus, But No Fee Reduction

By JAMES GOLD

After the Campus Center met all its obligations last year, it planned to have $510,000 left over (budgeted surplus) "like money it could put in the bank," however, it only had $232,000, according to Terry Grinnan, Campus Center Manager.

When asked in a Collegian interview why that money could not be used to lower the Campus Center fee, presently $62.50 per year, Grinnan explained that it would be like "declaring dividends on all your earnings."

The questions came in regard to several queries at the Collegian office whether or not student fees would have to be raised to cover the difference between the budgeted surplus and the actual surplus, after it was reported in Wednesday's edition.

In a later interview Chancellor Randolph Bromery said that this money is like a reserve. It is there in case of emergencies and in the long run to be used for renovation or expansion of the facilities.

When Grinnan was asked why the budgeted figure was not attained he cited two reasons: the budget was set too high, and there were certain economic facts.

Grinnan explained that when the budget was set, the Campus Center had only been operating for five months and there was no reliable data from which to draw an accurate forecast.

The economic facts included a price freeze in food services and an unanticipated wage hike for part time help in the bookstore due to a Health Education and Welfare Department ruling.

Although exact figures would not be possible to give, Grinnan explained that the student fee will go up when the building goes on a permanent financing arrangement.

He explained that in fiscal 1973 and fiscal 1974, only the interest on the building's bonds will have to be paid.

However, he said, in fiscal 1975, interest and principal will have to be paid. Then the balance will have to be made up in student fees.

On this long term basis, he indicated, the failure to attain the budgeted surplus each year could drive the student fee higher than if the surplus was reached. That would only be, though, if the budgeted surplus was planned to be used to pay for the building's amortization.

Ten Years After, Missiles Still Ready

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK, Fla. (AP) - The nuclear-tipped missiles that sprouted across south Florida during the 1962 Cuban missile crisis are still on 24-hour alert "to ward off an enemy."

Twelve missile sites from Key West, 90 miles north of Cuba, to Carol City, 10 miles north of Miami, are manned by 2,700 men of the Army's 31st Air Defense Artillery Brigade.

The Nike-Hercules and Hawk missiles "are purely of a defensive nature and are not designed for an offensive attack of our own," said Army Brig. Gen. David H. Sudderth, the man who has the authority to order the missiles into the air.

"But you can be damned sure that their presence acts as the best deterrent around to ward off an enemy."

Shriver Still In Debt

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) - The presidents of three Worcester cab companies said Wednesday that fares totaling $480 for service to Democratic vice presidential candidate Sargent Shriver on Nov. 3 are still unpaid.

The cabs transported the Shriver entourage from Worcester airport to Holy Cross College, when Shriver spoke at the college during the presidential campaign.

Cab drivers from Arrow Cab Co., Independent Cab Co. and Yellow Cab Col, said an official of the Shriver campaign staff promised payment within a week after the Holy Cross rally.

According to Charles Cert, assistant treasurer of the McGovern for President Committee, many bills and campaign related materials are in the process of being refiled.

Troop Withdrawal Delayed

WASHINGTON (AP)--President Nixon held an unexpected second meeting with South Vietnamese special envoy Nguyen Phu Duc as signs increased that a climax is near on setting a final allied position on peace negotiations.

The meeting was held shortly after the Pentagon said the White House would make no more formal announcements on withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Vietnam.

Duc was ushered into the President's office one hour after his scheduled 11:30 a.m. appointment. The South Vietnamese official left 35 minutes later. Shortly afterward, Nixon left for a long weekend in Florida.

White House spokesman Gerald Warren said yesterday's meeting with Duc, who is South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu's special representative, was "to review the entire situation in Vietnam."

The White House said Wednesday the President would only see Duc once.

That statement was made following the President's 2-1/2 hour meeting with Duc Wednesday afternoon and as the Saigon representative started another hour and 45 minute session with presidential adviser Henry Kissinger.

Immediately after leaving the White House, Duc and his party arrived at the State Department and took part in a 90-minute working lunch with Secretary of State William P. Rogers.

No official on either side would comment on any of the Thursday meeting. Warren declined to go beyond the White House's characterization of the Wednesday session in describing the second meeting.

Presidential press officer Ronald L. Ziegler called the initial session frank and detailed and "not unfriendly".

Meantime, the Pentagon said that no more formal announcements will be made by the White House on withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Vietnam.

The White House added that the 27,000 troop ceiling set for Dec. 1 has been reached and acknowledged that it would not make the type of announcements it has in the past concerning future pullouts.

The Pentagon added, however, that the Vietnamization program would continue, indicating some American forces will continue to come out, although in necessarily small numbers.

The Defense Department added that the end of formal announcements would give the United States added flexibility in negotiating with North Vietnam.

These negotiations resume Monday in Paris with Kissinger's return to the French capital where North Vietnamese negotiator Le Duc Tho has been waiting since last Saturday.

S. Viets Preparing For Cease-fire

SAIGON (AP)--South Vietnamese government officials and business leaders are preparing detailed recommendations to cope with any financial or economic crisis following a cease-fire.

Vietnamese planners said the motto of the top-level effort is "be prepared" for everything--and then hope that nothing happens.

"Our immediate objective is to maintain stability and maintain confidence," said one planner.

"After a cease-fire, the most crucial time is the first three months as far as finance and economics is concerned," he continued. "If there is confidence after three months, then confidence will build up."

The planners explained they are working under the assumption that there will be a high degree of uncertainty in people's minds after a cease-fire announcement and possibly in the government itself.

The planning is a joint effort of the Ministries of Economics, Finance with about 15 businessmen sitting in on various meetings and offering suggestions.

The planners have set up six committees whose names spell out the major postwar economic concerns of the Saigon government: stabilization, human resources mobilization, credit, monetary and banking problems, foreign trade, foreign aid and investment, reconstruction and development and taxation and finance.

In the next few weeks, each committee composed of several government experts and two or three businessmen will be meeting and considering research and position papers and captured Communist documents. They will be trying to come up with recommendations to such problems as:

--If there is panic, what do you do to cope with a run on banks?

--How do you combat strikes that could paralyze the country?

--How do you prevent the drainage of potential government tax money to the enemy?

--What is the government policy going to be on foreign trade and foreign investment and should the currency remain at the same rate or be devalued?

--What should be done about the thousands of refugees and the thousands of veterans trying to find work?

--How do you combat a shortage of rice or other commodities?

--How do you combat a shortage of rice or other commodities?

The planners have a month to finish their work with the government leaders having the final say on committee recommendations.

Rogers Stays As Staff Shuffles

WASHINGTON (AP) - William P. Rogers will continue as secretary of State in President Nixon's second administration but his top-level staff will be filled with new faces, the White House announced yesterday.

Ronald L. Ziegler, the President's press secretary, told reporters that Nixon will retain the 59-year-old Rogers in the interest of continuity in foreign policy.

Pressed on whether the decision to keep Rogers means that the same relationship between the White House and the State Department in making foreign policy would continue, Ziegler said:

"Secretary Rogers is a good friend of the President. Their relationship is pretty well in place."

Henry A. Kissinger has been a dominant policymaker in foreign affairs and adviser to Nixon at the White House, particuarly in the Vietnam peace talks. Rogers has played a strong role in trying to reach a settlement in the Middle East and a mutual reduction of military forces in Europe.

Ziegler announced that Kenneth Rush, now deputy secretary of Defense, will be nominated to succeed John N. Irwin II to be deputy secretary of State, the No. 2 man at the State Department.

William J. Casey, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commision, will be nominated as undersecretary for economic affairs.

Ziegler said that William J. Porter, a negotiator at the Paris peace talks, will be undersecretary of State for political affairs, succeeding the veteran U. Alexis Johnson, who was offered a "major new assignment" in the international field.

Sources said that Johnson, who is due to retire in about a year, may have been offered the job of ambassador to South Vietnam.

Ziegler said Nixon has known Rush since his student days at law school. Rush is a former U.S. ambassador to West Germany before he was named deputy Defense secretary on Feb. 7, 1972. He is 63.

Ziegler also announced that Curtis J. Tarr would remain as undersecretary of State for coordinating security assistance affairs.

Ziegler indicated that Nixon would make further announcements on his Cabinet in the second term while he is at the Florida White House.

Countdown Begins for Apollo 17

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) - Electrical power surged into a giant Saturn 5 rocket yesterday and the long countdown began for Apollo 17, America's last scheduled flight to the moon.

The launch team started the clock at 8:30 a.m., aiming for a launching at 9:53 p.m. EST Wednesday. More than half a million visitors are expected in the area to bid farewell to Apollo and to watch the first afterdark liftoff of a manned space flight by the United States.

Early activity in the countdown included powering up the three stages of the Saturn 5 and filling the water tanks of the command and lunar ships, America and Challenger.

Key events later will include installing pyrotechnic devices, activating batteries, loading the command ship's power-producing fuel cells and pumping more than one million gallons of fuel into the 36-story-tall booster.

As the count began, the men who will fly the mission, Eugene A. Cernan, geologist Harrison H. Schmitt and Ronald E. Evans, were in spaceship simulators, rehearsing the launching and firing out of earth orbit toward the moon three hours later.

It was their last day for formal training. On Friday they undergo an extensive physical examination which will determine their fitness for the mission and also provide baseline medical data for inflight and postflight comparison.

After that the astronauts will have their choice of how they want to prepare for the trip - in simulators, review sessions, geology briefings or flying T38 jet planes in proficiency runs over south Florida.

Cernan and Schmitt, the first scientist picked for space flight, are to land on the moon at Taurus-Littrow, a volcanic valley.

Panel Raps Military Justice

WASHINGTON (AP) - A biracial Pentagon task force yesterday supported charges by blacks of discrimination in the administration of military justice and recommended charges to standardize punishment for minor offenses and the recruitment of more black lawyers.

The panel also recommended that the system of selecting military jurors by commanding officers be revised to eliminate possible command influence in trials.

These recomendations, among more than 100 proposed by the military-civilian panel for dampening racial strife, were contained in a four-volume study of how the armed forces administer the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

In accepting the report, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird declared that "justice and discipline are inseparable and indispensable" and said a number of changes are in the works and others will be put into effect in coming months.

Black servicemen have often complained of receiving more severe punishment from commanders for minor offenses without requiring formal trials and of receiving disproportionate numbers of administrative discharges. Another complaint has been that blacks often are put under pretrial confinement while whites charged with the same offenses go free.

The panel said it found basis for these charges in interviews with scores of servicemen. It concluded this contributes "to racial animosity and tension" which afflicts the military services.

Though it praised the military for trying since 1949 to eliminate unlawful discrimination, the panel nevertheless concluded that:

"The military system does discriminate against its members on the basis of race and ethnic background. The discrimination is sometimes purposive; more often it is not. Indeed, it often occurs against the dictates not only in policy but in the face of determined efforts of commanders, staff personnel and dedicated service men and women."

Heading the 14-member task force were Nathaniel Jones, general counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; and Lt. Gen. Claire E. Hutchin, commander of the 1st Army at Ft. Meade, Md.

Irish Government Challenges Foes

DUBLIN (AP)--Prime Minister Jack Lynch's government yesterday flung an ultimatum at its divided opposition: vote for tougher action against the rocket-wielding Irish Republican Army or face the people in national elections.

The gauntlet was thrown down in the Dail--or parliament--by Lynch's labor minister, Joseph Brennan, during the second day of debate on a government bill to give police greater power to put the men of the IRA behind bars. A critical vote on the bill, first scheduled for Thursday night, was now expected Friday or perhaps next week.

Apparently in step with Lynch's stiffening resolve to break the power of the IRA, officials in Northern Ireland disclosed that Britain had rejected peace overtures from the IRA's extremist Provisional wing.

But in Belfast, the Provisionals denied they had made any cease-fire offer. The local headquarters said in a statement: "The approaches were made by well-intentioned local people and not by us. Nor were they made on out behalf."

The leader of the provisionals, Sean MacStiofain, jailed and weakened by 12 days of fasting, meanwhile appealed to the Irish people to take to the streets in support of his cause.

MacStiofain was reported improving Thursday after his decision two days ago to drink tea and water although maintaining his hunger strike.

He is serving a six-month jail sentence for belonging to the illegal IRA. He has vowed to fast to his death or until he is freed.

Northern Ireland had one of its quietest days in weeks Thursday.

In Dublin, political leaders struggled to work out a compromise that would avoid the threat of a national election--one that would inevitably be fought on the basis of "for or against the IRA."

Postponement of the vote improved Lynch's prospects of reaching a compromise with the main opposition party, Fine Gael. Fine Gael has long demanded tougher action against the IRA but now says Lynch has gone too far.

Fine Gael and Lynch's Fianna Fail party both derive from rival sides in the 1921-23 Irish civil war.

Prime Minister Edward Heath of Britain told the House of Commons various people had brought the IRA's offer of a truce to government officials in Northern Ireland.

Airport Police Plans Unveiled By Volpe

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Nixon administration is developing a plan to foil skyjackers by requiring law enforcement officers to be stationed at airport boarding gates for all flights.

The plan also would require all passengers to walk through weapons detectors before boarding. In addition, all carry-on luggage would be searched.

"We are working toward having a law enforcement officer present at each boarding gate from one-half hour before boarding through the boarding process on domestic flights and one hour before on international departures," Transportation Secretary John A. Volpe said in a telegram yesterday to Sen. Clifford P. Case, R—N.J.

On another feature of the plan, Volpe said, "walk-through weapons detectors are being delivered to the airlines as fast as possible. Our goal is to have such devices at all boarding gates."

A spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration said further details of the program still are being worked out.

Peace Talks

PARIS (AP) — The United States told the Communists at the Peace Talks yesterday that it is President Nixon's "firm intention to permit no avoidable delay in ending this war and entering a period of peace and reconstruction."

The North Vietnamese rejected South Vietnam's demand that the North must pull all its troops out of the country in cease-fire agreement.

Mayors Warn Nixon

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (AP) — A bipartisan committee of leaders of the National League of Cities warned the Nixon administration yesterday against cutting back federal urban aid programs.

Amherst To Cut Infirmary

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — Amherst College is thinking of ceasing in-patient infirmary service on campus.

College physician Stephen Brown said increased costs and declining use of the infirmary's 25 beds have led college officials to consider sending their sick to the University of Massachusetts for in-patient service.

Anti-freeze Sale Banned

BOSTON (AP) - The state fire marshal's office has ordered two firms to remove antifreeze products from sale because they are improperly labeled and affect public safety.

Fire Marshal Joseph G. Sneider said the products are quart cans of "Prestone Premixed Windshield Washer Antifreeze and Cleaner" and gallon jugs of "Windshield Washer Antifreeze" sold through Zayre outlets.

The marshal said the Prestone product carried no warning that the antifreeze is flammable, while the Zayre product has a warning but in type smaller than required by state law.

Sarge Ends X-Way Ban

BOSTON (AP) - Gov Francis W. Sargent, signalling the end of a three-year highway construction moratorium in the greater Boston area, unveiled yesterday his vision of a $2 billion, mass transit centered transportation system for the city.

The governor's long-awaited plan rejects any new construction of major expressways into or through the core city but calls for a two-lane limited-use tunnel under Boston Harbor to service Logan International Airport.

The transit proposals call for extensions of several existing subway and trolley lines out to the Route 128 perimeter, relocation of portions of two existing lines and ultimately a totally new line ringing the downtown area.

Sargent announced the proposals in an address prepared for delivery on a statewide television hookup.

He conceded that implementation of the program as developed by the Boston Transportation planning Review group was appointed by Sargent to advise him on transportation questions after the announcement of the highway construction moratorium in February, 1970.

"We will not build the expressways," said Sargent Thursday night. He said the proposed Southwest Expressway from downtown Boston to Route 138, for which large expanses of developed land had already been cleared, will be replaced by "a transit and commuter rail system that will move people faster than rubber tire vehicles can move them.

December Drama At Hampshire

Three original plays plus a Chekhov farce will open the December Drama Festival at Hampshire College. Performances will be December 1, 2, and 3 in the east lecture hall of the Academic Building, at 8 p.m.

Student Tim Angle will direct Chekhov's "The Proposal," with Doug Gessler, Per Larson, and Linda Carlson in the cast, while Timothy Landfield, faculty associate in theatre at Hampshire, will direct one act plays by student playwrights Craig O'Donnell, Apache Ramos, and Mark Fried. Cast members include Clark Brown, Andi Stander, Linda Carlson, Doug Gessler, and Mary James in O'Donnell's "A Piece for Five Players"; Steve Makowski in Ramos' "White Between Its Eyes You Know"; and Per Larson and Mark Bresnan in Fried's "Chess and Another Country."

Jean Anouilh's "Waltz of the Toreadors" will be presented on December 8, 9, and 10 in the Academic Building's east lecture hall at 8 p.m. Under the direction of student Andi Stander, cast members include Pogo Park, Joan Lanius, Lynn Grasberg, Maggie Hirsch, and Sharon Lerner.

The third Drama Festival presentation will feature "Noah's Flood," a Renaissance spectacle directed by student Toni Spadafora, plus "Upon Acquaintances," written by Yale playwright Gil Timm and directed by student Scott Moore. Performances will be December 12 and 13 at 8 p.m. in House III, building 5.

The final production will be Tom Stoppard's "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead." Directed by students Jim Rosen and Steve Stisel, it will be performed on December 15, 16 and 17 (place and time to be announced).

All Drama Festival events are open to the public. Tickets are available in the Dining Commons, House offices, or at the door, $2.00 for the entire festival or 50¢ per event.

HELP SOLVE A PROBLEM
RECEIVE 3 CREDITS
Course: G.B. 386 Legislative Research Seminar - Independent Study
Aim of Course:
Most state legislators lack the staff and research assistance necessary to make what many people would consider to be an informed evaluation of much of the legislation they must vote on. There is, therefore, a large void that students can fill. There are, for example, many bills dealing with a wide variety of social problems that would stand a better chance of passage if more research were done on them. In addition, there is unfortunately much ignorance as to how legislators and legislatures function. It is hoped that as a result of their work, students will become more aware of the intracacies of the legislative process.

UMass Wind Ensemble At Bowker Sunday

The UMass Wind Ensemble and the Collegium Musicum will present an evening of music for wind instruments, Sunday, at 8 in Bowker Auditorium. There will be no admission charge.

John Jenkins conducts the ensemble which will open the program with the "Anniversary Overture", composed in 1956 by Philip Bezanson, now head of the UMass music department, to celebrate the 75th anniversary of the State University of Iowa Concert Band.

The UMass Collegium Musicum is one of the music department's youngest performing groups. It was founded in response to student interest in performing Medieval and Renaissance music. Alan Harler will conduct the group as it performs 15th Century music by Guillame Dufay, using replicas of ancient wind instruments.

Also on the program will be: "Serenade in E Flat", for 13 winds, opus 7, written by Richard Strauss in one large movement embracing a carefully extended and developed short sonata form; Vaughan Williams' "Scherzo all Marcia", which was first performed in 1956 to celebrate the centennial of Williams' birth and which was composed as the second movement of Symphony No. 8 in D Minor; and Richard Wagner's "Trauersymphony", composed from Carl Maria von Weber's opera "Euryanthe" for the torchlight procession.

Smorgasbord

The provisional board of the International Club is planning a smorgasbord on Saturday evening starting at 5:30. Featured on the menu is gourmet food prepared by international students and their families.

Hampden Dining Commons will be the scene of feasting and dancing. $1.50 will buy four servings of food from such countries as India, China, Armenia, South America, Denmark and Nigeria.

The Five-College Folk Dancers will be on hand for after-dining entertainment and also to lead the feasters in some international folk dancing.

Tuberculosis Found In Heroin Addicts

CHICAGO (AP) - Tuberculosis in parts of the body other than the lungs is being seen in heroin addicts, a New York medical researcher reported yesterday.

Such tuberculosis is relatively rare in the general population and it is likely that many cases among addicts are being missed, he said.

Dr. Gustav Seliger, a radiologist at New York University Medical Center, New York city, reported on 25 such patients at the annual meeting of the Radiological Society of North America.

In a paper coauthored by Drs. Hossein Firooznia, Raymond Abrams, Vincent Valensi and Jack Shamoun, radiologists at the same institution, Seliger said a "relatively high incidence" of tuberculosis outside the lungs had been diagnosed in heroin addicts at Bellevue Hospital during the last four years.

Seliger said no other cases of this type of tuberculosis among addicts have been found in medical literature. Some of the patients at Bellevue also were on other drugs, such as morphine, barbiturates and amphetamines.

Elaborating in an interview, Seliger said many cases of extrapulmonary tuberculosis-that outside the lungs-are probably being missed because it has become so rare in recent decades with development of effective drugs for treating it.

Radiologists and other physicians probably do not think of this type when reading x-rays, he said.

With the presentation of the report at this meeting, he said, perhaps there will be greater awareness of the existence of this type of tuberculosis.

The important thing is to have an accurate diagnosis early, the radiologist said, because effective treatment then can be begun.

Needless Controversy

There is a controversy going on at the present time between the various merchants who can be seen daily selling their wares in the Campus Center. One group, those selling "craft goods", which are hand made, are crying unfair to those people selling manufactured goods, saying that the manufactured products are cheapening the atmosphere of the Campus Center and are in unfair competition with the student made goods.

Under the present rules for selling all manufactured goods must be sold off the concourse, the area between the Blue Wall and the coffee shop. At this time manufactured goods are only being sold near the Hatch, which is off the concourse level.

We can't see what the controversy is all about. At the present time there are no known sellers of manufactured goods on the concourse level.

One of the good things about the selling of goods in the Campus Center is that it allows students to be able to make some money to get by. The way things are financially at the present time many students are having a hard time just making ends meet. There is no reason why anyone should be barred from trying to make a few dollars as long as he/she is doing it honestly and living by the rules. All dealers who meet these simple qualifications should be allowed to stay where they are now, and the present controversy should end.

No Hard Hats This Year

By DEAN TUCKER

North Pole-Reaction to Prsident Nixon's appointment of Peter J. Brennan as secretary of labor came swift and hard at the toy making facility here today. A walkout of three hundred elve members of Local 21 International Brotherhood of Toy Makers was announced at midnight November 29.

Workers stayed away from their jobs today. The only visible activity was maintenance and janitorial crews who belong to Local 34 of the International Brotherhood of Janitors and Domestics.

The walkout could cause serious delay in the manufacture of Harry Hard Hat Action Dolls unless a solution to the "no work" policy is reached. The dolls are a popular item on children's Christmas lists this year, particularly in suburbia where an all out drive to make Christmas bountiful is being made by North Pole manufacturers.

Accessories for the dolls, such as the popular hard-hat vs. anti-war marchers kit will be unsalable unless production is resumed in the next few days.

The anti-war marchers half of the kit is completed by Radical Barbie and Communist Ken, two popular toys from bygone years. Without the hard hats, Radical Barbie and Communist Ken would be allowed to dominate this year, a situation that is quickly disappearing from the American scene.

Brennan could not comment today. He was painting a house in Long Island City, New York, and stopped only long enough to comment, "I never think about things like that when I work, I'm independent now."

The dispute between the Toy Makers and President Nixon comes as a form of protest by the Toy Makers who live communally at the North Pole and were strong backers of Senator George McGovern's unsuccessful bid at the presidency earlier this month.

I.M. Pax, spokesman for the Toymakers stated today that unless President Nixon retracts his job offer to Mr. Brennan, there will be no more hard hats this year.

A meeting between Santa Claus and Mr. Pax has been scheduled for November 30 at noon but Mr. Pax stated that he will boycott the meeting.

When it was suggested to Pax that he could be jailed for his passive resistance tactics, he commented only, "it won't be the first time, there will be no hard hats this year, that's all.

Representatives of the North Pole reacted to Pax's adamance with the suggestion that parents suggest an alternative gift to their youngsters. He suggested that perhaps this year's new hit, Electric Illuminated Roller Derby and Bigtime wrestling game would substitute for an action toy gift.

When Peace Is At Hand

WASHINGTON--When he came back to the United States after his peace talks in Paris, the first thing Henry Kissinger did was report to President Nixon at the Waldorf Towers.

"How was Paris, Henry?"

"Great, Mr. President. They have a new show at the Folies-Bergeres and..."

"I'm talking about the peace negotiations, Henry."

"Oh, yes. I think peace is at hand. It's just a question of buttoning down a few points."

"Good. Did Le Duc Tho agree to change the draft of the cease-fire agreement?"

"No, he didn't. He said he was sticking to the original nine-point plan, and his people wouldn't budge an inch."

"I see. What did Thieu's people say about that?"

"They said that unless the entire agreement was rewritten, Saigon would not budge an inch."

"It sounds like a stalemate to me, Henry."

"That's how it sounds to me, too."

"What do we do now, Henry?"

"I thought you might have some ideas, Mr. President."

"I thought you had some ideas, Henry."

"Well, why don't I go back to Paris and tell Hanoi that unless they change the agreement we will be forced to back President Thieu?"

"That's a thought."

"And then why don't I tell Thieu unless he agrees to the accord as it is presently written, we will be forced to back Hanoi?"

"Let me get this straight, Henry. We're telling the North Vietnamese that they have to change the agreement and the South Vietnamese they have to accept it without changes?"

"Exactly."

"That sort of confuses me, Henry."

"Well, if it confuses you, just think what it will do to them."

"Do you have any other ideas, Henry?"

"We got the North Vietnamese to agree to a peace settlement by bombing Hanoi and mining Haiphong Harbor. Since the South Vietnamese seem to be the stumbling block right now, why not bomb Saigon and mine Cam Ranh Bay?"

"But we can't bomb Saigon. Think of world opinion."

"We can't officially, Mr. President. But suppose we reactivated Air Force Gen. Lavelle and gave him very vague orders as to what he could or could not bomb in South Vietnam?"

"But if we mine the harbors of South Vietnam, how do we get Thieu the military aid we promised him?"

"Through North Vietnam, Mr. President. We sweep the mines out of Haiphong Harbor and ship our supplies in that way."

"Why would the North Vietnamese allow us to ship our supplies to South Vietnam through Haiphong?"

"That's the only part I haven't figured out yet, Mr. President, but I have my people working on it."

"Do you have any other ideas, Henry?"

"I have one more plan. You announce that a peace agreement has been reached with both the North and South Vietnamese and then we pull out."

"You mean announce it, even if it isn't true?"

"It's your word against theirs, Mr. President."

"That's all you've got, Henry?"

"That's it, Mr. President. There's only one more idea. What about implementing your secret plan to end the war in 1968?"

"All right, go ahead with it."

"Fine. What is the plan? You know you never told me."

"I'm sorry, Henry, I can't tell you. There are some things a President must keep to himself."

What Evil Lurks In The Heart

By STEVE SECHE

The scare is on.

It is on in Boston, triggered by the murder of a 19-year-old Emerson College sophomore two weeks ago. Police claim that the girl, who frequently hitched rides back and forth to school, was seen hitchhiking just prior to her death. Friends disagree, but with little effect.

Now Boston has a new anti-hitchhiking ordinance that at least two City Council members have described as "unenforceable", and "unworkable". Nevertheless, for the next month or two, until the crisis passes, Boston police will try and enforce the unenforceable, and those unfortunates apprehended during The Scare will pay $10 for the privilege of standing on a Boston street with their thumb out.

The Boston City Council, in their feverish attempt to save innocent lives, might rather have saved their time. Before the bill was even signed, the usual parade of female hitchhikers up Commonwealth Avenue had dwindled to almost nothing.

The Scare is on in Brunswick, Maine, where last week, Bowdoin College students walked around their campus at night carrying baseball bats and other weapons after two women had been assaulted near the Bowdoin campus.

"We were afraid some innocent person walking on the campus at night might get clobbered by a baseball bat, or something", said Brunswick Police Captain Lawrence Joy. Brunswick, like Boston, has got The Scare.

And now it looks like The Scare has arrived at UMass. It was in a Daily Collegian headline two weeks ago: "UMass Rapes Close to One a Week".

It is in a petition being circulated around the campus by several concerned women's groups. It reads:

"In respect to the large increase of rapes on this campus and in the surrounding area, we, the undersigned, deem it necessary that the University take immediate measures to protect the women of this college community...Women should not have to fear walking on this college campus."

Does the prospect of having to walk across campus scare women at UMass?

It scares Judy Katz. After years at UMass, Judy says that she is frightened when she has to walk back to her dorm after dark. But Judy, who is the director of the Southwest Women's Center, is not the only one who is worried about her safety.

"I won't hitch alone anymore," said Sue Bartlett, a resident of Knowlton House, who admitted that recent events in Boston had made her acutely aware of the dangers. Sue didn't think that her attitude would change when the current crisis subsided.

Diane Doherty, also a resident of Knowlton, agreed. "The article in the Collegian had a big effect on me," she said, adding that she no longer feels safe at night on campus.

Still, Director of Security, David Johnston insists that UMass is "a safe campus".

He disputes the claim made in the Collegian that "rapes and attempted rapes in and around the campus are occurring at the rate of close to one a week," not as totally inaccurate, but as distorted.

"The article is based on the statistics of only two months" (September and October of this year), Johnston said. "Up until that date, according to Johnston, his department had handled only 5 reported rapes since January, 1971. The fact that since September his department has investigated at least nine reported assaults on women-- with or without the intent to rape--remains, however. And that represents a sharp increase. Books

By Alan Frankfurter

As is typical of them during the holiday season, the publishing houses are offering a great number of new books which can be given to the woman or man who has everything. Some of these books deserve to be more than stocking stuffers. I'm sure that Truman Capote will announce on "The Dick Cavett Show" that at least a few of these are on his coffee table throughout the upcoming months.

The first book on the Christmas list is "Tippi", the biography of the beautiful and captivating actress who graced the screen in the early sixties. The real story of this mysterious woman is finally told in full detail, starting with her rise from a vibrant but obscure fashion model to her first big break in motion pictures in Alfred Hitchcock's "The Birds". Ms. Hedren was always remembered for her defiant manner in dealing with the critics-a trait which caused her to seek out another role in a Hitchcock film Marnie despite protestations from the critics. "Tippi" is a deluxe edition full of top quality photographs highlighting her career: a still of Tippi re-creating the Katharine Hepburn role in a Chicago production of "The Philadelphia Story", a ten page full color section from "The Birds" including the exquisite scene when Tippi is pecked unconscious by the birds, and, of course, a section devoted to her role as "Marnie". Printed on the finest paper available, this important work by the editors of "Photoplay" magazine is a must on every film buff or Tippi Hedren fan's reading list. Interestingly enough, Grace Kelly has written the introduction.

Also on cinema fanatics' reading list is the just-published screenplay of the 1959 film "Blue Denim". Certainly one of the most intriguing "cult" films of the fifties, "Blue Denim" works on at least three levels. It can be viewed as a social document, certainly embodying the most simple dialogue ever written for the screen, while dealing with themes of teenage pregnancy, abortion and alienation. It also is a landmark for Carol Lynley, who portrays the girl who conceives a child just by kissing Brandon de Wilde; Miss Lynley would be a superstar even if she never made another picture after this one. Thirdly the film can be taken as "just good old clean sex-fifties style" designed to make a lot of money at the drive-ins.

Another must on the book lists is the "Herman's Hermits Songbook" featuring the words and music of the rave English group and hundreds of pictures from the group's many world-wide tours. Now you can finally decipher the meaning of their many haunting lyrics:

"I'm leaning on a lamppost
On the corner of the street
In case a certain little lady comes by.
Oh me, Oh my!
I hope that certain little lady comes by..."

Certainly the "Hermits", as they were affectionately known by their fans, were one of the most important English supergroups and with the publication of this tribute, the boys can take their place alongside the Beatles, the Stones, and Cream. Peter Noone goes through the superstar trip (the nude centerfold included with the book). He has defended his posing as not just another publicity stunt, but as art: "Since I am exposing myself as an artist and a man then I feel it is warranted (that I pose nude)".

Jackie Susann's latest novel is out and it stands to be even better than "Valley of the Dolls" or "The Love Machine". Titled "Rich Man, Poor Man", it tells the story of the sexual escapades of the members of the banking industry. Insiders have said that the main character's life is based on the life of J. P. Getty and that the character is one of the most vibrant that Miss Susann has created. It should be a sizzler.

First was "The Sensuous Man" then "The Happy Hooker", now we can look forward to "Love and the Sadist". Edited by the New York Times theatre staff, the study devotes itself to the loves of five practicing sadists. It is not just another exploitation of sex in our society. "Love..." treats it theme with much care and sensitivity. Certainly the most touching story is the one of "Adolf", a young man who can only relate to fifty year old women who want him to mug them down dark alleyways. After three years of psychoanalysis Adolf finally learns why he has this "compulsion", and presently is developing an earnest relationship with a "bald masochistic girl his own age".

For the younger set a new Santa story has been published and it is positively enchanting. "Santa and the Movie Star" tells of Santa's exploits in Hollywood during his summer vacation and how he and Mrs. Claus join a wife- swappers club. Minnie and Mickey Mouse are the couple who sponsor their initiation in the club and Minnie hasn't looked better in years. The author, Mr. and Mrs. Happy Hooligan, say that kids want it "told like it really is and not doctored up like their parents did"; if so, then this fits the bill. Gahan Wilson did the illustrations and if this book clicks look forward to a sequel for Easter entitled, "Peter Rabbit and the Playboy Bunny".

Business Unusual

The "Compendium Kid", our dashing young friend with newsprint in his blood pondered one day on the question of Milhouse. Why is it, he asked himself, why is that flake of a man was resurrected for four more? Who brought him back when he was already to be stored away in that great sausage maker in the sky? The light struck down on our lugubrious lad. It was the latest of the majorities: "The Artificial Majority". Our hero was quite satisfied with this explanation, oh yes, quite satisfied. He humbly asks for all to see page thirteen.

Show Business

Richard is joyous over the centerfold this week. He recommends it highly. Famed French director Francois Truffaut, the man with the photographic memory, carries on highly detailed and gratifying interview with equally as famed American director, Alfred Hitchcock. Our friend is happy that they concentrate on the oldest of the Hitchcock thrillers. He suggests it for general audiences anyway; in fact, most highly, yes indeed.

Zombie Business

Sociologist as prophet? mused our friend Richard. All you need is imagination, he scoffed. Still, this business concerning robopaths and such seems quite serious, quite serious. Oh yes. The man claims, went on our illustrious if not gloomy confidant, that at least fifty per cent of the population has reached such a state of lethargy they have become humanoids. This is quite a state of affairs, the Poor Boy thought, quite a state. He resisted the temptation to turn on the TV by remote control and instead turned to page fifteen.

Our Hero Laughs It Off

Football Fan Nixon Gets His Just Dessert

By Howard Bloom
and Steve Ferber

Recently President Nixon declared that he would restrain himself from offering plays for professional football's Super Bowl game in January. He indicated to Miami Dolphin Coach Don Shula that he would keep his strategies to himself if Miami made it to the Bowl again this season. Coach Shula said he wanted "to thank the President for offering not to send any more plays."

We might well imagine the reverse situation. Down in Miami Florida Don Shula is placing a phone call, long distance to Washington, D.C. as we hear.....

"Hello, Mr. President, this is Don Shula of the Miami Dolphins and while you have been paying all that attention to football, we down here in Miami have been following your own game plan rather closely. We though we might offer you a few plays."

"Why Mr. Shula, that's very nice of you but I really don't think that...."

"To kick off our discussion, Mr. President, I'd like to say that your offense is doing a very fine job. We've looked extensively at your fine machinery and the only flaw we've found is that you're using the bomb play too much. In fact we think that your opposition expects it every play."

"Well, coach, we have been using the bomb quite a bit, but we really don't see any harm..."

"We've also looked closely at your air objectives and your field goals. Sending all of your jets on the same fly patterns seems useless. Instead we suggest that you send your first one down, then your second down, and your third and your fourth. If that doesn't work, try something else."

"Thanks for the suggestions Don," replied a somewhat shaken President, "and do call again."

"Just a few extra points Mr. President. As far as zone coverage goes, you seem to have done an excellent job, and the way you keep subsituting so freely really shows what great depth you have on your team. My coaching staff and I have agreed that by reducing the size of your squad you have made all of your fans quite happy but there are just a few other things we find fault with."

"What might they be?" said an overly worried Nixon.

Downtrodden President Nixon, as he appeared after phone conversation with Don Shula.

"We've been rummaging through your old play books and noticed that you haven't used the reverse in years and years, so we thought you might take that into consideration. In addition members of my staff pointed out that your game has gone into its 234th sudden death overtime period and we wondered whether or not you had any plans to end the game. After all, Mr. President, everyone must be rather tired after that many periods."

"Thanks for calling Don, we'll be speaking to you..."

"I'm not quite finished Mr. President. In fact I've got a question I thought you might have the answer to. Our philosophy here at Miami has always been to let the two teams fight it out, not to interfere. We were made an offer last week by the New York Giants. They asked me if I would lend them Larry Csonka and Jim Kiick for this Sunday afternoon. I didn't know what to tell them. I hated to say no, but I didn't feel it was right to bud in in the New York-Cincinnati game. What would you have done Mr. President?"

In vain Nixon tried to ease out of the conversation, but Shula wouldn't be dismissed quite that easily.

"We like to exercise caution too, Mr. President, but as far as your men retreating, I really wouldn't worry about the problem of safety."

Shula pressed on relentlessly, giving Nixon nary a chance to hang up on him.

"What has really had us going down here, sir, is exactly what your overall game plan is. We've heard talk of building up your suicide squad and of course the necessity of having that killer instinct is high up on your list. But what exactly have you been doing for the past 200 quarters?"

Moments pass, and a somewhat startled Miami Coach is heard saying, "Excuse me Mr. President, you mean to say that those are real fly patterns and real bombs that you've been using. Why sir, we never figured that...I mean we never dreamed...I mean, why sir, we thought you were just playing a game, who would ever have thought that someone would play around with real lives?

Willy Wins One Big

At least one election held during the month of November turned out the right way, but unfortunately, it wasn't held here in the United States. Miles away, across the Atlantic Ocean, Chancellor Willy Brandt of West Germany and his Social Democratic Party scored a surprisingly lopsided victory over his challenger, Rainer Barzel. On its own, the Chancellor's party just edged out Barzel's conservative slate of Christian Democrats and the Christian Social Union. The biggest surprise was the showing of Brandt's coalition partner, the Free Democratic Party. Throughout the election campaign, many people wondered whether the Free Democratic Party would be strong enough to win the 5 percent of the vote it needed to claim any seats in the Bundestag. In the end, however, the Free Democrats showed a total of 8 percent of the vote. As a result, Brandt's ruling coalition was returned to Parliament with a definite majority. The Germans are one people who know a great leader when they see him.

The election results were a victory for Brandt's foreign policies. Brandt had been extremely successful in negotiating agreements with the Soviet Union and Poland. Two weeks before the election he pulled a Dick Nixon and completed a historic treaty with East Germany. The East Germany treaty gained Brandt millions of votes, for it was a promise to them that they would be able to visit relatives and home cities under Communist rule that they had not seen in years.

At first, the conservatives tried to appeal to voters by suggesting that they could have gotten a better deal from East Germany had they negotiated the treaty. This strategy proved ineffective, so the Conservatives tried a different and much more effective tact. In Brandt's three years in office, the inflation rate had jumped from 2.7 percent to 6.4 percent. Barzel hammered away at that issue in every speech he made. He hit hard with denunciations of both creeping inflation and creeping socialism. In what amounted to a smear campaign, he insisted that if Brandt were re-elected, it would be Germany's last free election.

The German voters broke from tradition in this election with the emergence of the wanterinitiativen (voter initiative). The voters dumped their old habit of leaving the campaigns and the campaigning to the politicians, and they participated in tens of thousands, giving time and money. The Brandt campaign took advantage of this new voter initiative, and organized a Citizens for Brandt movement which canvassed and passed out campaign materials. The Christian Democrats, on the other hand, were extremely lax in taking advantage of the pool of German manpower, and they waited until the last few weeks of the campaign to counter the Citizens for Brandt with some voter initiative groups of their own.

During the last few weeks of the campaign, the substantive issues raised by both sides were given a back seat in importance to the issue of the personalities of the candidates. Brandt saw West Germany's role as a leader in world affairs and his as a leader among leaders. Barzel preferred to concentrate more on domestic issues and let other countries worry about themselves. Many people in Germany argued that the two candidates were not very different and that their views were very much alike. However much alike they were, the victory was a personal triumph for Nobel Peace Prize winner Brandt, who will now be West Germany's version of three more years.

What these statistics mean, of course, can be argued. The fear that many of the women on this campus feel is less open to interpretation. And a good deal harder to compute.

Yet Johnston, despite his position on the issue, is sympathetic to the claims UMass women are making. "I agree," he said, "that if a woman is afraid to walk across campus after 10 pm., that's a real loss of liberty." He is less certain about what to do.

"I have increased the number of evening security guards around the campus," he said, "but I'm not sure that more and more police around the campus would please too many people, either."

Judy Katz doesn't agree. "I don't think that increased police protection would provoke such an outcry from students, if the campus was made aware why they were there," she said. "And they would be there to protect students–both men and women–from assaults, not to bust those students for smoking pot."

The number of assaults on men on this campus provides an interesting comparison. For the period from January, 1971 to July, 1972, Johnston's records indicate: 5 men assaulted with a gun; 3 with a knife; 2 with a dangerous weapon (i.e. a club, a pipe); and 23 simple assaults, where no weapon was employed.

According to Johnston, the incidence of such crimes–on both men and women–is very low in relation to the average age and size of the population.

Still, Judy Katz insists that measures suggested in the petition would vastly improve the safety of the campus. They are:

1. Late night bus transportation, in and around campus;
2. Increased lighting throughout campus;
3. Increased and more diligent patrolling by security guards.

Ms. Katz claims that the present shortage of these three factors has much to do with the increased assaults this year.

Johnston feels that, more than an increase in the numbers of assaults and attempted rapes, what UMass is seeing is an increase in the reporting of such incidents. "I would like to think that some of this is due to a more professional police staff," he said.

On this point, Judy Katz agrees with him. "The policewomen on this campus have been very good dealing with rape victims", she said.

Judy is quick to add that it is the support women have begun to give each other, and their own increasing awareness about their role as "victim" in society that has led more women than ever to report a rape.

Still, Ms. Katz guesses that for every ten rapes that take place in the UMass area, only four are reported.

"It is a very humiliating experience for a woman to go through," she said. And it doesn't appear as though the humiliation stops after the rape has occurred.

Hospital emergency rooms have built up a great reputation for slow and insensitive treatment of rape victims, Ms. Katz said. Many times, she continued, women have had to wait for attention after they have been raped.

Dr. Robert Gage, formerly UMass Infirmary director, and now Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, explained that the Infirmary's first concern with a rape victim is to provide the necessary medical attention. "Our contact with any student is confidential," he said. "The examining doctor will try to review the circumstances surrounding the indicent, and determine, in a dispassionate way, what happened." According to Gage, the police are only notified with the woman's consent.

The importance of immediate medical attention was underscored by Richard Howland, Student Senate Attorney. "In Massachusetts, a medical witness needed to substantiate a charge of rape," Howland said that there is a popular misconception that a visually corroborating witness is needed. "This is not the case under Massachusetts law," he said.

Prompt medical attention, Howland said, should be sought by the woman for her own physical well-being, as well as to insure that medical evidence of assault and/or forcible rape is documented.

Evidence in a rape case is generally considered to be the presence of intact sperm cells, either on the person or on her clothing. Thus, the immediacy of the examination becomes an important factor if charges are to be pressed.

Howland feels that it has been women's "insistance on their own rights" that has brought more police pressure for convictions in rape cases. So far this year, he said, five cases of rape have been brought to his office, and four are still pending in court. Charges were dropped in the one case no longer in court.

Howland said that in his experience in Hampshire Superior Court, he knows of "only one instance where an assault with intent to rape case has not resulted in a jail sentence."

Libby Rich, an assistant to Howland, explained some of the difficulties encountered in bringing a rape charge to court. "A woman faces a great deal of humiliation in court," she said. "Frequently, the character of the woman is called into question, and she is often treated as though she was the defendant instead of the victim. There is always the question of enticement–did she somehow encourage the attack?"

The difficulty, Ms. Rich added, is that "rape is a sexist crime, that is viewed by a sexist society."

As a result of the humiliation and character assault that a woman often has to face when she brings a rape charge to court, Ms. Rich said that many rapes are dropped to the lesser charge of assault and battery, which can be settled out of court.

And while Massachusetts General Law calls for life imprisonment for a convicted rapist, it also leaves the option open for a prison sentence of "any term of years". According to Howland, sentence in such a case usually depends on the injury to the woman, and the certainty of guilt.

Meanwhile, women's groups continue to press for changes in society and society's attitudes that will keep women out of police stations, out of hospital emergency rooms, and out of court.

Here on this campus alone, there are several women's interest groups in existence, with several more forming. The Southwest Women's Center has been funded by the Provost's Office to provide classes for women in sex roles; consciousness raising, and other areas of concern to women.

There are other groups in the surrounding area, as well, in Northampton, and Greenfield. These women, along with others, be they in Boston, or Brunswick, Maine, wage their fight against a common enemy that appears in many different forms: it is ignorance, it is our traditional concept of "man" and "woman"; it is fear; it is the shadowy figure that has been walking behind you the whole way home; it is The Scare. And when The Scare is on, it makes no distinctions between men and women. It tries like hell to get us all.

Mailer In Miami: The Traveler In A New Mood

by Norman Mailer

St. George and the Godfather
New American Library paper.

"Politics is not an art of principle but of timing."

Such is one of the many assertions and theories Norman Mailer puts forth in his newest book, St. George and the Godfather. It is a collection of observations and thorough dissections Mailer made while attending the Democratic and Republican national conventions in Miami Beach this summer. With extensive use of symbol and metaphor, the art of which Mailer is perhaps the world's most fluent user, he describes what went on behind the scenes and behing the scenes within the scenes; that is, what the American TViewer saw but might not have realized.

For instance, everyone knows that this year's Democratic convention was the most heterogeneous in history. But how many people are aware that last July, while the Democratic floor delegates conducted themselves with apparent harmony in regard to their lifestyles if not in regard to who should vote and who shouldn't, that there was extensive friction on the issues of life-style as well? The few old pol Democrats left, the 16 per cent of the delegates who had ever held public office before, not only resented but detested the staff bearers of the new politics so much that they, as Mailer put it, "had exploded in rage against a thousand upstarts in the ranks of the delegates, and had come to realize in Chicago (in 1968) that there were Democrats he would like to kill before he even tapped the nose of a Republican." And how many knew that Women's Liberationists set fire to the Miami Playboy Club? Or that Shirley Chisholm told the Black Caucus "I'm the only one in this delegation with the balls to run for President." It's all in Mailer's new book.

Through the most prominent manifestations of Mailer's past writings are still there—the acidic references to feminism, the lucid and graphic third person that is, Mailer refers to himself but not as "I")—he has toned down his intensity a little from his previous works. He does use himself as the main character, the traveler through crazy Miami beach, but he refers to himself as "Aquarius". As he puts it, "He would be obliged to drift through events, and use the reaction of his brain for evidence. A slow brain, a muddy river, and therefore no name better suited to himself again than the modest and half-invisible Aquarius." There are fewer violent thrashings which highlighted The Armies of the Night and Miami and the Siege of Chicago, and more personal literary portraits. George McGovern's sticks out in particular. McGovern's decency and forthrightness, which are tainted for some after the Eagleton mess but still remained a theme throughout the campaign, are brought out in full by Mailer. The description is filled with revelations of all sorts, that politicians do not have to be walking facades, that they can look at you without looking through you, and that they can be introspective as well as elusive.

And, of course, there are the metaphors. It would not be inaccurate to say that Mailer's prose style is just one big metaphor. He compares Nixon to the father of the prodigal son, forgiving all who have strayed and now wish to come back to the party. The potpourri of seconding speeches for Nixon, 11 in all, are lucky 11, of, if added to the nominating speech, make the 12 apostles. Hubert Humphrey's is a "little electronic voice-box of a voice, his larynx grown rough enough to scrub floors". And McGovern, of course, is St. George, and he is decked out on the cover of the paperback edition in shining armor. One of the keynote speakers of the Republican convention is compared to Nixon himself, as a younger man and budding politician. And I don't have to explain who The Godfather is. The Godfather is that smooth tactician who turned his biggest opponent, the media, against itself by making the Convention so dull that there was nothing to cover but the podium speeches concerning his virtues. The Godfather is that genius Mailer does refer to him in that term of the timing, the exposure or the lack of it, and the precision of every cappilary of nominating procedure. The Godfather is that loving and forgiving foreseer of his party, our President.

All this, of course, in a very cynical vein. The only time Mailer ever says anything genuinely complimentary about any part of the Nixon clock (12 nominating and seconding speeches, 12 digits on the clock) is when he praises Spiro Agnew's use of (what else?) metaphor, as Spiro states, "a vice-president lies in the flickering strobe lights that alternately illuminate or shadow his written duties."

There is an unfamiliar Mailer technique introduced towards the end of the book. It is understatement, weary understatement. As Pat Nixon is introduced at the convention, a thousand Young Voters for the President go crazy, waving little American flags and simply letting everything that Nixon has instilled in them come out in a screeching, maniacal 10-minute ovation, the last seven minutes of which were not for Pat but for themselves, as if they'd never cheered before and found they liked it.

And Mailer states immediately afterwards that, in effect, these kids simply do not realize what the woman's husband has done in Vietnam. It is perhaps the most poignant part of the book. The gap between the two modes of thought is as wide as Nixon's final victory margin. And this weariness reflected in the observation typifies Mailer's new, less intense mood, and this book that is aimed more at being humorous and thoughtful than bellicose and scathing. In the wake of this non-campaign, it is a fitting change. In contrast to the Democratic convention and the close race of 1968, there was nothing in particular to get excited about this year.

Nixon's 33% Majority

by Daniel B. Itkin

NIXON TO WIN BY LANDSLIDE, NIXON LEADS BY 25 POINTS, NIXON TO SWEEP TO VICTORY– So blare the prophets, the soothsayers have their say, and so it seems they have their way. We find at this present moment, Richard M. Nixon entrenched in the White House for four more years–riding the crest of a wave so large as to flood over the towers of permissiveness, sloth, and indigestion. But wait, what is this?–the wave is merely a ripple, the water has run dry–in fact the emperor sits naked and suspended in air, the air which turns into pictures nightly before our eyes, and blares and cries–"George Gallop today picked our president, along with a little help from Lou Harris."

Are we to imply from the above paragraph that someone dares to scoff at the Nixon landslide, at the "New American Majority", at the shining light of wisdom of the "people" who have spoken, who have struck out at the forces of surrender and national dishonor represented by George McGovern. Far be it from your author to disallusion you, but H.C. Anderson knew what of when he spoke–"The emperor has no new clothes, he has no clothes at all."

According to all published reports Richard M. Nixon, President par excellance, has received a resounding victory over his Democratic challenger George McGovern. Nixon received 60.8% of the popular vote, and all but 17 electoral votes, to reach a peak of popularity surpassed by few men in the history of American politics, in an election which saw a record turnout of voters. All of these facts and statistics are true as far as they go, but perhaps they should be put into context. One fact not as widely disseminated, but easily accesible, is that this election had the lowest turnout of voters since 1948. This seems to contradict the above statement about a "record turnout", yet this apparent contradiction, like so much of politics, is pure illusion. Thanks to a lowering of the voting age to 18, the potential electorate, that is all persons of-voting age, reached a record high. Therefore, even with the lowest percentage turnout since 1948, that is with around 55% of the total electorate voting, we still had a record turnout of 75 million. The percentage turnout for the last four elections are as follows:

Year	Percentage Vote
1968	61.8
1964	62.9
1960	64.0
Voting Age Pop.	Total Votes Cast
148,000,000*	75,000,000*
118,465,000	83,203,760
112,250,000	70,644,510
107,597,000	68,838,219

So for example, in terms of a comparison if the 1972 election percentage turnout had been as high as the 1960 turnout, 94 million people would have voted in this election instead of 75 million. Everytime large new groups are added to the electorate a record gross turnout can be anticipated, but in actuality the percentage turnout decreases as newly enfranchised groups are notoriously slow in practicing their newly gained right, whether due to previous subjugation, frustration, lack of political awareness, or sheer boredom. But this leads us into the problem of low political participation. The fact that the U.S. has election after election the lowest voter turnout percentagewise of any of the advanced industrial nations is a question I shall deal with later. Right now I want to stay at the statistical level and examine what the relationship between 55% and 60.8% really is (for mathematical simplicity I shall use 60% rather than 60.8%–for as they say in statistics–"When you need to be profound, round").

Once we understand this one simple equation we begin to understand this past election: 60% of 55% is 33% (60/100 x/55, 10x 330, x . 33) So, having received 60% of the 55% of the total electorate that actually voted, Richard M. Nixon's landslide majority is made up of some 33% of the possible electorate. Is this some slight of hand, you gasp?–"What is real and what an illusion?"–Can Walter have lied to me, can't we trust our nightly father figure? Boys and girls the argument is flawless (up to a point, of course). No matter how many times you try to make it come out different:

60% of 55% is 33%.

Nixon by a landslide?

Richard M. Nixon has once again failed on his quest to become "President of all the people"; hell, he's not even president of half of the people–he's president of around one-third of the people.

The diehard Nixon supporter will merely scoff at all this folderol, and perhaps rightfully so. He will argue that if all the electorate had wanted a say in things, then they should all get out and vote like the rest of us, and not be so lazy, but if he understood who it is that does not vote I wonder if he'd be so quick to quip.

The run-of-the-mill liberal political scientist meanwhile has been heard to argue that people in the United States are essentially apolitical. They are more concerned about their day-to-day existence than about any political issues. In fact large segments of American society are so satisfied with their lot in life that they see politics as being peripheral to their lives; they have few problems to which political solutions could apply. Politics and elections then become a leisure pursuit, a sort of national game with very little at stake. How can we know all this–well, if they were interested in politics, they would vote, as do the more politically aware persons, and they would band together to form interest groups in order to make their collective weight felt. Lack of participation in politics in an "open" society therefore lends support to this calculus of apathy. Futhermore, low levels of political participation are seen as a virtue of the political system. If everyone were to bring all their demands into the political arena, the system would tend to become "overloaded", leading to system "breakdown", or in plain English political and social instability.

Now if political apathy is related to satisfaction and a general lack of interest in politics, we should find it at all levels of society. But an analysis of the makeup of the apathetic groups in this society begins to take us behind the rhetorical facade into the seedy reality beneath. For by all the indicators which come out of the voluminous voting behavior and public attitude studies of political science, it is certain that low political participation and low political awareness, as well as feelings of powerlessness in politics, correlates highly with low socio-economic indicators. That is, that persons who are poorly educated, unemployed, underemployed, and poorly paid, persons who are young, black, or in some other low status ethnic or racial groups, persons at the bottom rungs of the social ladder are those who are least politically aware and politically active in terms of electoral politics. Yet, these are the same persons said to be satisfied with the system and thus inactive politically. Can we realistically believe that groups which are, by all objective standards, at the bottom of society in terms of education, employment, and especially wealth, are at the same time the satisfied apoliticals of "political science"? Can their own subjective understanding of their situation be at such variance with the objective indicators, when their day-to-day existence is shaped and driven by their objective class situation? In a society where a person's worth as a human being is determined by his wealth and his material possessions, can we realistically hold that those who have the least material wealth, and therefore the lowest self-image and sense of self worth, are also the most satisfied politically and therefore the least politically active? If satisfaction and low political activity were actually related, Nelson Rockefeller, Charles Percy, and all the rest of the wealthy members of the ruling class should be apolitical, while members of the least satisfied and most active groups would come from all the lowest social groups, and in a democratic society we would then see a peaceful equalization of wealth and power. But anyone claiming validity for such a reality would quickly be put away in the looney bin. No, we must look for the answer to the enigma of low political participation elsewhere. But before concluding this topic, a further look at the 1972 elections is necessary, especially an emphasis upon the election polls (Mr. Gallop and Mr. Harris).

The public opinion polls attempt to be fastidiously neutral. George Gallop, it is reported, does not even vote because he wants to not seem at all partisan–they claim to be above all partisan politics and to be neutral predictors and reporters. And yet it can be effectively argued, and so I shall argue, that the polls as much as any other factor handed Richard M. Nixon his "resounding" victory.

In order to understand this argument we must once again underscore the fact that those who tend to be least politically aware and least politically conscious, are those who need the most motivation in order to get involved at all. Their lack of motivation stems from any number of reasons from a fully justified cynicism about the system to a fear of getting involved; from an ignorance about the workings of the political system to functional illiteracy; from an overwhelming day-to-day struggle for existence to pure laziness. But whatever the reason, those who cannot see solutions to their problems in political terms are unlikely to get politically involved and their interest in the political circus is fragile and uncertain. Problems such as unemployment, when viewed from the individual perspective, can be considered as problems of lack of personal motivation or as some other kind of individual failing, but when viewed in terms of structural unemployment (where "full employment" is considered to include 4% unemployment so as to keep inflation down) the problem can be seen as necessitating political action, for mass unemployment is a public problem. But in a society where individuals are fragmented and isolated from each other, where the individual's problems are seen as due to his failures and incapacities, political solutions are not likely to become important, especially where the political system operates on the basis of all the assumptions and biases which are the roots of the problem.

What role did the election polls play in this scenario, you might ask? The answer is that the polls by reporting a distorted and artificial Nixon landslide helped to guarantee its taking place. At this stage, I must make a number of assumptions, which I believe are essentially correct, but not, of course, perfectly accurate. I will assume that Richard M. Nixon was, and is, essentially a politician with a strong status quo orientation. I will further assume that George McGovern represented an anti-status quo orientation, if not personally, at least in terms of much of his constituency. Now of the 45% of the electorate who did not vote, I will accept the notion that some may have been Nixon supporters, who felt that their vote was not particularly necessary for his victory, and therefore stayed home; but this group was probably not particularly large or significant, as those who tend to favor Nixon, tend also to be in the average and above social groups and in such groups voting tends to be an ingrained habit whoever the candidates. The middle classes especially see voting as the ultimate act of citizenship and therefore habitually vote. I also think it safe to assume that most strong McGovern supporters got out and voted even in the face of a Nixon landslide in hopes of keeping things respectable or out of in the blind hope that the polls were wrong. I believe I can therefore assume that of the 45% who did not vote, a full 30-35% never vote, never take an active interest in electoral politics at all. I believe I can also safely assume that the vast majority of these non-voters are of the lowest social groups, who objectively would have the most to gain by changes in the status quo in the direction of social and economic reform. That is, that if they were aware of the choices offered by the two major candidates I am essentially ignoring non-major party candidates, but that does not mean they are unimportant; the McGovern platform of guarranteed annual income, rebuilding of the cities, national health care, and expansion of welfare rather than military programs, would be more in tune with their interests. That is, persons in the lowest social categories would be much more likely to favor anti-status quo policies than to favor status quo policies. But it is their lack of interest, lack of motiviation, and lack of hope, which makes for the greatest obstacles to their potential activity. If I can assume that of the 45% who did not vote, that between 20-30% are in the lowest social groups (a relatively safe assumption), then as a unified social class bloc they could essentially swing elections, even such a "landslide" as the last one. But their lack of participation effectively forecloses such a possibility at present and the biases and operation of the political system tends to operate against such a possibility, with good reason.

One political scientist at this university said that McGovern's tragic flaw was that he attempted to appeal to groups which are notoriously apolitical, and it was his inability to arouse much enthusiasm among such groups that lead to his resounding defeat. It is at this point of mobilization and motivation that the polls had such a devastating effect upon the election. Continued reportage of a Nixon landslide did much to keep the marginally interested McGovern supporter out of any active participation while keeping the apolitical, but potentially anti-status quo groups from becoming at all interested. The fragility of interest and low frustration tolerance of the apolitical groups is not easily overcome in the face of a media blitz reporting a Nixon landslide as predicted by the polls. But the one major fact that is not effectively disseminated is that the pollsters are in the business of predicting elections, not, in this case, of sampling public opinion. This means when it is reported that Nixon's lead over McGovern is 30 percentage points at a point three weeks prior to the election, Nixon is only more popular among those who are registered and planning on voting. Let me repeat the polls are interested in predicting the outcome of the election and not in sampling American opinion in general, therefore they concentrate upon those registered and planning to vote. Nor is it strange that this is so as the pollsters, as I said above, care not to survey opinion, but try only to predict elections. It is the fact people have an illusion polls measure "opinion" which leads to difficulties. The continued reportage of Nixon's potential landslide had the effect of freezing the situation and hurting the underdog candidate who was dependent upon mobilizing large segments of the least politically sophisticated groups to form his winning coalition. The polls clearly revealed their status quo orientation and acted to insure a Nixon landslide. The continued emphasis on a Nixon landslide and lack of emphasis on the real nature of polling (election predictors) closed off any chance for the McGovern campaign to reach potential supporters at the bottom of society. Furthermore, McGovern's essentially honest, intellectual-(shades-of Stevenson) image, lacked an essential ingredient needed to arouse the apolitical strata a strong emotional tie, i.e. charisma. This campaign was singularly unexciting in terms of the personal popular appeal of the candidates. Neither candidate was able to develop a strong, vigorous image. McGovern supporters were as attune to "the cause" as to the man, while many Nixon supporters were in many cases as much against "the cause" as they were pro-Nixon. Unfortunate as it may seem, it is precisely at the lowest levels of political sophistication and awareness that a strong emotional appeal has the greatest effect. This was evidenced by the almost reverential appeal of Robert Kennedy for large numbers of blacks, chicanos, and poor whites, or as seen in Latin America, in the personalistic relations between the caudillo-type leader, such as Peron of Argentina, and the urban masses.

Thus for a number of related reasons, Richard M. Nixon swept into the White House once more–but the broom itself is dirty, old, and ragged. His great "landslide" victory is pure illusion; but his attempts to use his "mandate" to justify greater and greater repression will be very real, indeed already speaks of putting an end to the "era of permissiveness". It is necessary that we understand what is going on here, so we can counter the myths being disseminated. An acceptance of the Nixon "landslide" myth is an invitation to repression and an acceptance of the un-democratic status quo.

American politics tends to move in terms of long range trends, and we need to separate these trends from the short term abberations. The "emerging Republican majority" is a mere artifact of non-democratic politics. It is dependent upon the continued effective non-participation of the lowest classes in society, those who would have the most to gain by seeking political power. A combination of forces for social change could well emerge as the major force in American electoral politics. The Roosevelt New Deal was not so much a reallignment of political forces as the addition of large new elements into the electorate which then proceeded to dominate American electoral politics for almost 40 years. It is no matter that Roosevelt co-opted a potential for radical change, or that certain of his original out-groups, such as organized labor, are now part of the status quo. The fact remains that there are some 25-30% of the population mostly from the lower classes, social and political allignment if they can be mobilized. The task is there and the challenge exists. Whether the more progressive and politically aware elements in our society tap this potential depends on a number of factors. First of all, the status quo forces will surely intensify their repression of attempts to mobilize this potential for radical change. The more successful, and therefore more dangerous a group or individual is at such mobilization, the more likely that they will be eliminated as the systematic extermination of the Black Panthers attests. The distance between the intellectual elites favoring social change and the lower classes must be effectively bridged and will not be bridged if intellectuals continue to talk generally about the "needs of the masses" while continuing along blindly in their elitist ways.

Whatever the outcome, the political challenge of the future is the same as it has always been. The fight for justice, equality, and social sanity depends upon the effective mobilization of all the potential forces for social change. The political scientists who see full mobilization as a danger to the system are correct–full mobilization could well entail the destruction of this elitist political system, but it may also open up the possibilities for social justice and liberation in ways the present system cannot allow.

Lewis Yablonsky

Lewis Yablonsky is both a crier of doom and a sociologist. That these two professions should be embodied so neatly in one man should surprise no one. Sociologists seem generally to either damn the human race or promise its salvation, especially when they are radicals by nature, as in Mr. Yablonsky's case. This writer is obsessed with categorization; every person must fit into a slot and if per chance, they do not, one is made for them. These are the first impressions I received from the book Robopaths by Lewis Yablonsky. The book has somewhat of a bulldozer effect on the unsuspecting reader; one is buried under heaps of cogent argument, unable to reply due to a flood of assertions by the author that one is incapable of challenging without facts in hand. However, looking back on the book I began to realize that Yablonsky has a tendency, putting it mildly, towards making presuppositions that he really has no right to. As well, he is prone towards exaggeration, much in the manner of a small child turning a trip to grandmother's into a journey of immense porportions. Since an active imaginations is a rare commodity these days though, a look at Mr. Yablonsky's theories may prove interesting. I must confess that I find myself in agreement with him more often than not.

Robopaths, in Yablonsky's words, are those people who have come "to the point where they have become the walking dead. This dehumanized level of existence places people in roles where they are actors mouthing irrelevant platitudes, experiencing programmed emotions with little or no compassion or sympathy for other people." Thus, robopaths are people in reverse. That is, while robots are made to simulate the functions of humans, but without emotions or consciousness, so people are losing those things which differentiate them from the machines they have created. Certainly a frightening prospect, but one which the author gives on to argue exists among us and is growing at an alarming rate. Possibly you see now what I mean by this author's tendency to exaggerate just a bit.

This condition, robopathology, has developed due to the massive dominance technology has gained over our lives. Mr. Yablonsky sees machines as the force in the world, and espcially America, today. The ultimate outcome of this situation will be that machines will eventually take over and control society. It will not however, be done in the normal science fiction manner, but rather in a much more insidious way, one in which the society as a whole cooperates. The takeover will occur when machines become more important than people, a situation when people's compassion is directed towards things, not other humans. This situation for many, the author states, has already arrived. He estimates, how I don't know, that about half of that population of this country is already leading a robopathic existence. The major problem at this point in the book is that, when dealing with human beings, stating absolutes is a very tricky business. To state that a certain portion of the population has achieved an entirely ahuman state is to border on the absurd. Aside from his statistics, or lack of them, the argument procedes well. He states for instance, situations where there has been a violent outcry against pollution due to the damage it has been doing to the exteriors of automobiles, irrespective of what it had done to people. The desire for technology is based on a desire for comfort, not really something you can blame people for. Essentially what Mr. Yablonsky is trying to say is that we must decide between being comfortable machines or uncomfortable people.

Yablonsky sees Nazi Germany as the first manifestation on a mass level of how people have become robopaths. Germany was a very technologically geared country at that time; their only chance to succeed in their guest was to become a superior technological force. The effect of this was to make the German people insensitive to the havoc they were causing. Consequently, there was no outcry against the genocide conducted in the name of improving the world. An almost direct parallel of that situation, the writer claims, has been Vietnam and Richard Nixon. He sees the people in this country, due to their robopathic existence, unable to perceive what is going on. Unfortunately, what the author fails to bring out is that one of the principal reasons people can not empathize with the Vietnamese is due to racism. That certainly is not a concept which has sprung from the soul of a technocratic society. As well, Shakespeare writes in many instances about man's inability to react to violence on a large scale. It can be argued then that all the problems in the human condition have not occured as a result of a machine society. It would seem more likely that technology and the resulting robopaths have served to intensify this condition to the point where we are on the brink of sealing our doom. Mr. Yablonsky's points on pollution are very well made and possibly are more in order with his argument.

Although this writer is a crier of doom, he does offer some glimmer of hope. Mostly it is in the form of quotes from Jerry Rubin and Abbie Hoffman, who become a bit laughable when posed as the saviors of humanity. Rubin's philosophy, more often than not, comes down to getting everyone stoned. In that way everyone can relax and forget all about playing all the absurd games in the machine. However, there are just a few particulars which he fails to expand upon, such as who grows food and provides the necessities of life if we are stoned all the time. Thus, this voice of salvation which Yablonsky offers us is probably more frightening than anything else that he has said. Though the author also perceives problems in this alternative, he seems to be desperately searching for something to remove him from this inferno he has created.

One of the most well-known examples of robopathic behavior in an individual is William Calley. His justification for his actions at My Lai was that he was following orders, haven't we heard that someplace before, and therefore he was absolved of any guilt for the action. That statement screams of robots, surely of a man whose mind has become a vestigial organ. It is as well though, the type of thinking, or non-thinking, that is demanded in a military organization. That this type of thinking is beginning to invade public life is more frightening. Richard Nixon is posed here by Yablonsky as the "legal" -criminal engaged in the same type of behavior as Calley. However, attacking Nixon now is like kicking a dead horse; he has already done so many things that nothing really surprises you anymore. This, in fact, is the principle robopathic rulers employ, make the people so insensitive to violence through the use of overkill, they will hail you as a peace-maker when you settle down to regular murder. Now we have Nixon as a mad robopath sitting before a huge control board, green and red dials glowing all around him, reflecting off his shiny forehead, manipulating the American public. However, I have neither the time nor the inclination to prolong this scene.

One point which detracts from this book it its lack of specifics and figures. Many people feel facts and the like merely detract from an argument, possibly termed irrelevant, but I gain some reassurance from at least a facade of professionalism as opposed to a sophmoric presentation of quasi-absoluted. Possibly Mr. Yablonsky felt that proceding in a more analytical manner would only confuse the points he was trying to make; this may very well be true. That is to say, a challenge usually does place certain obstacles in one's way, but if one is trying to obtain the truth, those obstacles should be confronted, not skitted.

The writing in this book is good, though the tone at times rises to an almost hysterical pitch which damages the credibility of the entire piece. So while this book has a tendency to go overboard, it is in many places, thought- provoking and worthy of some attention. In recommending it, I would say that if you get an opportunity, a little free time, read it, but don't put yourself out to do so.

Hitchcock On "Thirty Nine Steps" And "Notorious"

The following was taken from an interview which the French director and film critic, Francois Truffaut had with Alfred Hitchcock. The first part of this interview concerns the 1935 film The Thirty-nine Steps which along with The Lady Vanishes is considered Hitchcock's best film. The second excerpt from the Hitchcock-Truffaut interview discusses Notorious the 1946 film starring Ingrid Bergman and Cary Grant. Both films along with Psycho are being shown on campus next week.

F.T. With the sucess of The Man Who Knew Too Much, I imagine you were given a free hand in the choice of stories. The one you chose was The Thirty-nine Steps, about a young Canadian who leaves London and makes his way to Scotland in pursuit of a spy ring that has stabbed a woman to death in his flat. With the police thinking he's committed the murder and the spies out to get him, there are snares and traps wherever he turns. After a series of hair-raising, narrow escapes, the picture winds up with a happy ending. The screenplay was based on a John Buchan novel. He's a writer for whom you have great admiration, I believe.

A.H. In fact, Buchan was a strong influence a long time before I undertook The Thirty-nine Steps, and some of it is reflected in The Man Who Knew Too Much. He had written Greenmantle, a novel that was probably inspired by the strange personality of Lawrence of Arabia. Korda bought this novel, but he never made the picture. At first I considered this book, but on second thought I chose The Thirty-nine Steps, which was a smaller subject. Probably for the very reason we mentioned in connection with Dostoyevsky—my respect for a literary masterpiece.

What I find appealing in Buchan's work is his understatement of highly dramatic ideas.

F.T. The Trouble with Harry has that same quality of understatement.

A.H. That's right. Understatement is important to me. At any rate, I worked on the scenario with Charles Bennett, and the method I used in those days was to make a treatment complete in every detail, except for the dialogue. I saw it as a film of episodes, and this time I was on my toes. As soon as we were through with one episode, I remember saying, "Here we need a good short story." I made sure the content of every scene was very solid, so that each one would be a little film in itself.

Anyway, despite my admiration for John Buchan, there are several things in the picture that were not in the book. For instance, the scene in which Robert Donat spends the night with the farmer and his wife was inspired by an old story about a South African Boer, a black-bearded man, very austere, with a very young, sex-starved wife. On his birthday she kills a chicken and bakes a chicken pie. It's a very stormy night and she hopes that her husband will be pleased with her surprise. All she gets for her pains is an angry husband, who berates her for killing a chicken without his permission. Hence, a grim birthday celebration. Suddenly there's a knock at the door, and there stands a handsome stranger who has lost his way and requests a night's hospitality. The woman invites him to sit down and offers him some food, but the farmer, feeling he's eating too much, stops him and says, "Hold on, there. This has got to last us the rest of the week."

The woman is hungrily eying the stranger, wondering how she can get to bed with him. The husband suggests that they put him out in the barn, but the woman objects. Finally, the three of them go to sleep in the great big bed, with the farmer in the middle. The woman is trying to find some way to get rid of her husband, and finally, hearing a noise, she wakes him up, saying, "I think the chickens are out of the coop."

The husband goes out to the yard, and the woman shakes the stranger awake, saying, "Come on. Now's your chance." So the stranger gets out of bed and quickly gulps down the rest of the chicken pie.*

F.T. The story is good, but the episode in the picture is better. The mood reminds one of Murnau, probably because of the faces, and also because the characters are at ounce bound to the earth and to religion. Though that scene is a brief one, the personalities are striking and they emerge forcefully. The prayer sequence is really remarkable. While the husband gives thanks, Robert Donat notices that the newspaper on the table carries his picture. He turns to the woman, who glances down at the picture and then looks at Donat. As their eyes meet, it is clear that she is now aware that he is a wanted man. In reply to her unsmiling, unspoken query, his eyes voice an eloquent appeal. And the farmer, noticing this exchange of looks, clearly suspects a romantic understanding between the two, so he goes outside to watch them through the window.

The whole scene is a beautiful illustration of silent filming, and the characters are admirably well drawn. The husband, for instance, is clearly a fanatic, a man who is possessive, jealous, and excessively puritanical. And this trait of his character has a specific bearing on a subsequent development: the wife gives Donat the farmer's coat, and when he is shot at, his life will be saved because the bullet hits the Bible the farmer carried in one of the coat pockets.*

A.H. Yes, that was a nice scene. There was also another interesting chracter in the film, Mr. Memory. He's based on a true-life music-hall personality called Datas. The audience would ask him questions about major events, like: "When did the Titanic sink?" and he would give the correct answer. There were also trick questions. One of them was: "When did Good Friday fall on a Tuesday?" And the answer was: "Good Friday was a horse running at Wolverhampton race track and he fell at the first hurdle on Tuesday, June 21, 1864."

F.T. Mr. Memory was a wonderful character. I particularly liked the way you handled his death, by making him, quite literally, the victim of his professional conscience. When Robert Donat, in the music hall, asks him what the thirty-nine steps are, he can't help blurting out the whole truth about the spy ring, and the ringleader, who's in the audience, shoots him dead.

It's this kind of touch that gives so many of your pictures a quality that's extremely satisfying to the mind: a characterization is developed to the limit until death itself. Within a situation that goes from the picturesque to the pathetic, the incident is handled in the light of a relentless logic that makes the death seem ironic and yet grandiose, almost heroic.

A.H. The whole idea is that the man is doomed by his sense of duty. Mr. Memory knows what the thirty-nine steps are, and when he is asked the question, he is compelled to give the answer. The schoolteacher in The Birds dies for the same reason.

F.T. Recently, I saw The Thirty-nine Steps in Brussels, and a few days later in Paris I went to see the remake that was done by Ralph Thomas, with Kenneth More. The remake was poorly directed and rather ridiculous, but the story is so fascinating that the audience was interested anyway.

At times the breakdown followed your own very closely, but even these parts were inferior. And wherever there were changes, they were mostly all wrong. For instance, at the beginning of the movie, when Robert Donat is locked up in a flat in which a woman has been stabbed, he notices from the window two spies pacing back and forth in the street. You showed those spies from his viewpoint; the camera was in the room and the spies were outside, on the sidewalk. They were shown from a distance. But in the remake Ralph Thomas has two or three close shots of the spies in the street. Because of this the scene loses its whole impact; the two men are no longer strange and sinister and there is simply no reason to feel afraid for the hero.

A.H. It's really too bad; they miss the whole point. It's obvious that you can't change your viewpoint in the midst of a situation of that kind.

F.T. Incidentally, on reseeing your version of The Thirty-nine Steps, I realized that it's approximately at this period that you began to take more liberties with the scenarios, that is, to attach less importance to the credibility of the plot, or at any rate, whenever necessary, to sacrifice plausibility in favor of pure emotion.

A.H. Yes, that's right!

F.T. For instance, when Robert Donat is leaving London, on the train, he runs into a series of disturbing incidents. At any rate, that's the way he interprets what he sees. He thinks the two persons sitting opposite him in the train compartment are watching him from behind their papers. And when the train stops at a station, through the window we see a policeman standing at attention and staring straight at the camera. There are indications of danger everywhere; everything is seen as a threat. The deliberate build-up of this mood was a step in the direction of American stylization.

A.H. Yes, this was a period when there was greater attention to detail than in the past. Whenever I embarked on a new episode, I would say to myself, "The tapestry must be filled here" or "We must fill out the tapestry there."

What I like in The Thirty-nine Steps are the swift transitions. Robert Donat decides to go to the police to tell them that the man with the missing finger tried to kill him and how the Bible saved his life, but they don't believe him and suddenly he finds himself in handcuffs. How will he get out of them? The camera moves across the street, and we see Donat, still handcuffed, through the window that is suddenly shattered to bits. A moment later he runs into a Salvation Army parade and he falls in step. Next, he ducks into an alley that leads him straight into a conference hall. Someone says, "Thank heaven, our speaker has arrived," and he is hustled onto a platform where he has to improvise an election speech.

Then there's the girl who doesn't like him because he kissed her on the train. She comes in with two chaps who are supposed to take him to the police station, but who in fact, you will recall, are the spies. And Donat, handcuffed to the girl, manages to escape with her, thanks to a traffic jam caused by a herd of sheep. Still handcuffed to each other, they spend the night in a hotel, and so it goes.

The rapidity of those transitions heightens the excitement. It takes a lot of work to get that kind of effect, but it's well worth the effort. You use one idea after another and eliminate anything that interferes with the swift pace.

F.T. It's a style that tends to do away with anything that is merely utilitarian, so as to retain only those scenes that are fun to shoot and to watch. It's the kind of cinema that's extremely satisfying to audiences and yet often irritates the critics. While looking at the movie, or after seeing it, they will analyze the script, which, of course, doesn't stand up to logical analysis. So they will single out as weaknesses those aspects that are the very essence of this film genre, as, for instance, a thoroughly casual approach to the plausible.

A.H. I'm not concerned with plausibility; that's the easiest part of it, so why bother? Do you remember that lengthy scene in The Birds in which the people are talking about the birds? In that group there is a woman who is precisely a specialist on the subject of birds, an ornithologist. She happens to be there by pure chance! Naturally, I could have made up three scenes just to give that woman a logical reason for being there, but they would have been completely uninteresting.

F.T. Not to mention the waste of time for the public!

A.H. Aside from the waste of time, they make for gaps or flaws in the picture. Let's be logical if you're going to analyze everything in terms of plausibility or credibility, then no fiction script can stand up to that approach, and you wind up doing a documentary.

F.T. I agree with you that the ultimate of the credible is the documentary. As a matter of fact, the only kind of films that are, as a rule, unanimously endorsed by all the critics are such documentaries as Naked Island—pictures that require craftsmanship but no imagination.

A.H. To insist that a storyteller stick to the facts is just as ridiculous as to demand of a representative painter that he show objects accurately. What's the ultimate in representative painting? Color photography. Don't you agree?

There's quite a difference, you see, between the creation of a film and the making of a documentary. In the documentary the basic material has been created by God, whereas in the fiction film the director is the god; he must create life. And in the process of that creation, there are lots of feelings, forms of expression, and viewpoints that have to be juxtaposed. We should have total freedom to do as we like, just so long as it's not dull. A critic who talks to me about plausibility is a dull fellow.

F.T. It's sometimes said that a critic, by the very nature of his work, is unimaginative, and in a way, that makes sense, since imagination may be a deterrent to his objectivity. Anyway, that lack of imagination might account for a predilection for films that are close to real life. On seeing The Bicycle Thief, for instance, he's likely to think this is just the sort of thing he might have written himself, but that thought couldn't possibly occur to him in connection with North by Northwest. This being so, he's bound to attribute all kinds of merit to The Bicycle Thief and none whatever to North by Northwest.

A.H. Since you mention it, I might tell you that The New Yorker critic described that picture as "unconsciously funny." And yet I made North by Northwest with tongue in cheek; to me it was one big joke. When Cary Grant was on Mount Rushmore, I would have liked to put him inside Lincoln's nostril and let him have a sneezing fit.

By the way, since we're being so critical of the critics, what line were you in when we met for the first time?

F.T. I was a film critic. What else?

A.H. I thought so. You see, when a director has been let down by the critics, when he feels that his work has been passed on too lightly, his only recourse is to seek recognition via the public. Of course, if a film-maker thinks solely in box-office terms, he will wind up doing routine stuff, and that's bad too. It seems to me that the critics are often responsible for this attitude; they drive a man to make only so-called public-acceptance pictures. Because he can always say to himself, "I don't give a damn about the critics, my films make money." There is a famous saying here in Hollywood: "You can't take a review to the bank?" Some magazines deliberately select critics who don't care about films, but are able to write about them in a condescending way that will amuse the readers. There's an American expression; when something's no good, they say, "It's for the birds!" So I pretty much knew what to expect when The Birds opened.

F.T. Napoleon claimed that the best defense was attack. Wouldn't it have been possible to steal their thunder through some slogan in the advance promotion?

A.H. It's not worth the effort. I was in London during the Second World War when a picture by John Van Druten opened. It was called Old Acquaintance, and it co-starred Bette Davis and Claude Rains. The critics of two London Sunday papers both used the same tag line at the end of their reviews. What do you think it was? "Auld acquaintances should be forgot." In other words, even if the picture had been good, they just couldn't resist that line.

F.T. Well, in France they do the same whenever a film title ends with the word "nuit." Les Portes de la Nuit is automatically labeled Les Portes de l'Ennui, and Marguerite de la Nuit is invariably referred to as Marguerite de l'Ennui. Even if the picture is fascinating, there are found to be puns around the word "ennui."

Incidentally, one play on words I rather like is your own saying: "Some films are slices of life. Mine are slices of cake."

A.H. I don't want to film a "slice of life" because people can get that at home, in the street, or even in front of the movie theater. They don't have to pay money to see a slice of life. And I avoid out-and-out fantasy because people should be able to identify with the characters. Making a film means, first of all, to tell a story. That story can be an improbable one, but it should never be banal. It must be dramatic and human. What is drama, after all, but life with the dull bits cut out. The next factor is the technique of film-making, and in this connection, I am against virtuosity for its own sake. Technique should enrich the action. One doesn't set the camera at a certain angle just because the cameraman happens to be enthusiastic about that spot. The only thing that matters is whether the installation of the camera at a given angle is going to give the scene its maximum impact. The beauty of image and movement, the rhythm and the effects—everything must be subordinated to the purpose.

F.T. I'm impatient to get to Notorious because this is truly my favorite Hitchcock picture; at any rate, it's the one I prefer in the black-and-white group. In my opinion, Notorious is the very quintessence of Hitchcock.

A.H. When I started to work with Ben Hecht on the screenplay for Norotious, we were looking for a MacGuffin, and as always, we proceeded by trial and error, going off in several different directions that turned out to be too complex. The basic concept of the story was already on hand. Ingrid Bergman was to play the heroine, and Cary Grant was to portray the FBI man who accompanied her to Latin America, where she was to worm her way into the household of a nest of Nazi spies in order to find out what they were up to. Our original intention had been to bring into the story government officials and police agents and to show groups of German refugees training in secret camps in South America with the aim of setting up an enemy army. But we couldn't figure out what they were going to do with the army once it was organized. So we dropped the whole idea in favor of a MacGuffin that was simpler, but concrete and visual: a sample of uranium concealed in a wine bottle.

At the beginning the producer had given me an old-fashioned story, "The Song of the Flame," that appeared in The Saturday Evening Post. It was the story of a young woman who had fallen in love with the son of a wealthy New York society woman. The girl was troubled about a secret in her past. She felt that her great love would be shattered if ever the young man or his mother found out about it. What was the secret? Well, during the war, the government counterspy service had approached a theatrical impresario to find them a young actress who would act as an agent; her mission was to sleep with a certain spy in order to get hold of some valuable information. The agent had suggested this young girl and she had accepted the assignment. So now, filled with apprehensions about the whole thing, she goes back to her agent and tells him all about her problem, and he, in turn, tells the whole story to the young man's mother. The story winds up with the aristocratic mother saying; "I always hoped that my son would find the right girl, but I never expected him to marry a girl as fine as this!"

So here is the idea for a picture co-starring Ingrid Bergman and Cary Grant, to be directed by Alfred Hitchcock. Well, after talking it over with Ben Hecht, we decide that the idea we'll retain from this story is that the girl is to sleep with a spy in order to get some secret information. Gradually, we develop the story, and now I introduce the MacGuffin: four or five samples of uranium concealed in wine bottles.

The producer said, "What in the name of goodness is that?"

I said, "This is uranium; it's the thing they're going to make an atom bomb with."

And he asked, "What atom bomb?"

This, you must remember, was in 1944, a year before Hiroshima. I had only one clue. A writer friend of mine had told me that scientists were working on a secret project some place in New Mexico. It was so secret that once they went into the plant, they never emerged again. I was also aware that the Germans were conducting experiments with heavy water in Norway. So these clues brought me to the uranium MacGuffin. The producer was skeptical, and he felt it was absurd to use the idea of an atom bomb as the basis for our story. I told him that it wasn't the basis for the story, but only the MacGuffin, and I explained that there was no need to attach too much importance to it.

Finally, I said, "Look, if you don't like uranium, let's make it industrial diamonds, which the Germans need to cut their tools with." And I pointed out that if it had not been a wartime story, we could have hinged our plot on the theft of diamonds, that the gimmick was unimportant.

Well, I failed to convince the producers, and a few weeks later the whole project was sold to RKO. In other words, Ingrid Bergman, Cary Grant, the script, Ben Hecht, and myself, we were sold as a package.

There's something else I should tell you about this uranium MacGuffin. It happened four years after Notorious was released. I was sailing on the Queen Elizabeth, and I ran into a man called Joseph Hazen, who was an associate of producer Hal Wallis. He said to me, "I've always wanted to find out where you got the idea for the atom bomb a year before Hiroshima. When they offered us the Notorious script, we turned it down because we thought it was such a goddamn foolish thing to base a movie on."

There was another incident that took place prior to the shooting of Notorious. Ben Hecht and I went over to the California Institute of Technology at Pasadena to meet Dr. Millikan, at that time one of the leading scientists in America. We were shown into his office, and there in a corner was a bust of Einstein. Very impressive. The first question we asked him was: "Dr. Millikan, how large would an atom bomb be?"

He looked at us and said, "You want to have yourselves arrested and have me arrested as well?" Then he spent an hour telling us how impossible our idea was, and he concluded that if only they could harness hydrogen, then that would be something. He though he had succeeded in convincing us that we were barking up the wrong tree, but I learned later that afterward the FBI had me under surveillance for three months.

To get back to Mr. Hazen on the boat, when he told me how idiotic he had thought our gimmick was, I answered, "Well, all it goes to show is that you were wrong to attach any importance to the MacGuffin. Notorious was simply the story of a man in love with a girl who, in the course of her official duties, had to go to bed with another man and even had to marry him. That's the story. That mistake of yours cost you a lot of money, because the movie cost two million dollars to make and grossed eight million dollars for the producers."

F.T. So it was a big hit. Incidentally, how did Spellbound fair, in terms of dollars and cents?

A.H. Spellbound was less expensive; it cost us about a million and a half dollars to make, and it brought in seven million to the producer.

F.T. I'm awfully pleased to see that Notorious is re-released time and again all over the world. Despite a lapse of twenty years it's still a remarkably modern picture, with very few scenes and an exceptionally pure story line. In the sense that it gets a maximum effect from a minimum of elements, it's really a model of scenario construction.* All of the suspense scenes hinge around two objects, always the same, namely the key and the fake wine bottle. The sentimental angle is the simplest in the world: two men in love with the same woman. It seems to me that of all of your pictures this is the one in which one feels the most perfect correlation between what you are aiming at and what appears on the screen. I don't know whether you were already drawing detailed sketches of each shot, but to the eye, the ensemble is as precise as an animated cartoon. Of all its qualities, the outstanding achievement is perhaps that in Notorious you have at once a maximum of stylization and a maximum of simplicity.

A.H. I'm pleased you should mention that, because we did try for simplicity. As a rule, there's a good deal of violence in movies dealing with espionage, and here we tried to avoid that. We used a method of killing that was quite simple; it was as commonplace as the real-life killings you read about in newspaper stories. Claude Rains and his mother try to kill Ingrid Bergman by poisoning her very slowly with arsenic. Isn't that the conventional method for disposing of someone without being caught?

Usually, when film spies are trying to get rid of someone, they don't take so many precautions; they shoot a man down or they take him for a ride in some isolated spot and then simulate an accident by hurling the car down from a high cliff. Here, there was an attempt to make the spies behave with reasonable evil.

F.T. That's true; the villains are human and even vulnerable. They're frightening and yet we sense that they, too, are afraid.

A.H. That was the approach we used throughout the entire film. Do you remember the scene in which Ingrid Bergman, after having carried out her instructions to become friendly with Claude Rains, meets Cary Grant to report to him? In speaking of Claude Rains, she says, "He wants to marry me." Now that's a simple statement and the dialogue is quite ordinary, but that scene is photographed in a way that belies that simplicity.

There are only two people in the frame, Cary Grant and Ingred Bergman, and the whole scene hinges on that sentence: "He wants to marry me." The impression is that it calls for some sort of sentimental suspense around whether she's going to allow Claude Rains to marry her or not. But we didn't do that because the answer to that question is beside the point. It has nothing to do with the scene; the public can simply assume that the marriage will take place. I deliberately left what appears to be the important emotional factor aside. You see, the question isn't whether Ingrid will or will not marry Claude Rains. The thing that really matters is that, against all expectations, the man she's spying on has just asked her to marry him.

F.T. If I understand you correctly, the important thing in this scene isn't Ingrid Bergman's reply to the proposal, but the fact that such a proposal has been made.

A.H. That's it.

F.T. It's also interesting in that the proposal comes as a sort of bombshell. Somehow, one doesn't expect the subject of marriage to crop up in a story about spies.

Something else that impressed me—and you deal with it again in Under Capricon—is the imperceptible transition from one form of intoxication to another, going from liquor to poison. In the scene where Cary Grant and Ingrid Bergman are seated together on a bench, she's beginning to feel the effects of the arsenic, but he assumes she's gone back to her drinking and he's rather contemptuous. There's real dramatic impact in this misunderstanding.

A.H. I felt it important to graduate this poisoning in the most normal manner possible; I didn't want it to look wild or melodramatic. In a sense, it's almost a transference of emotion.

The story of Notorious is the old conflict between love and duty. Cary Grant's job—and it's a rather ironic situation—is to push Ingrid Bergman into Claude Rains's bed. One can hardly blame him for seeming bitter throughout the story, whereas Claude Rains is a rather appealing figure, both because his confidence is being betrayed and because his love for Ingrid Bergman is probably deeper than Cary Grant's. All of these elements of psychological drama have been woven into the spy story.

F.T. Ted Tetzlaff's photography is excellent.

A.H. In the early stages of the film, we were doing the scene of Ingrid Bergman and Cary Grant driving in the car; she's a little drunk and she's driving too fast. We were working in the studios, with transparencies. On the transparency screen we showed a motorcycle cop in the background; he's getting gradually closer to the car, and just as he goes out of the frame, on the right side, I cut to a cross angle and continue the scene, with the motorcycle cop inside the studio this time, showing him as he pulls up to them and stops the car.

When Tetzlaff announced he was all set to shoot, I said, "Don't you think it would be a good idea to have a little light on the side, sweeping across the backs of their necks, to represent the motorcycle headlights that are shown on the transparency screen?"

He had never done anything like that, and he was not too pleased that I should draw his attention to it. And he said, "Getting a bit technical, aren't you, Pop?"

A little incident came up while we were making the picture that was rather sad. We needed to use a house in Beverly Hills to represent the exterior of the big spy house in Rio. The head of the location department sent a minor member of his staff to show me the house they'd selected, a very quiet, little man who said to me, "Mr. Hitchcock, will this house do?" That little man was the same man to whom I originally submitted my titles at Famous Players-Lasky when I was starting out in 1920.

F.T. That's awful.

A.H. Yes, it took me a little while to recognize him; when I did I felt terrible.

F.T. Did you show him you knew who he was?

A.H. No, I didn't. That's one of the occupational tragedies of this industry When I was shooting The Thirty-nine Steps, there were some odd, extra shots to be done, and in order to speed up the production, the producer offered to get someone to do it. When I asked him whom he had in mind, he answered, "Graham Cutts."

I said, "No, I won't have it. I used to work for him; I did the writing on Woman to Woman for him. How can I have him come on as my assistant?"

And he answered, "Well, if you won't use him, you'll be doing him out of a job and he really needs the money."

So I finally agreed, but it's a terrible thing, don't you think so?

F.T. It is, indeed. But, getting back to Notorious, I wanted to say that a key factor in the picture's success is probably the perfect casting: Cary Grant, Ingrid Bergman, Claude Rains, and Leopoldine Konstantin. With Robert Walker and Joseph Cotten, Claude Rains was undoubtedly your best villain. He was extremely human. It's rather touching: the small man in love with a taller woman. . .

At the end of Notorious (1946), Cary Grant takes away Ingrid Bergman while her husband (Claude Rains) stands helpless, paralyzed by the presence of his fellow spies. . .

A.H. Yes, Claude Rains and Ingrid Bergman made a nice couple, but in the close shots the difference between them was so marked that if I wanted them both in a frame, I had to stand Claude Rains on a box. On one occasion we wanted to show them both coming from a distance, with the camera panning from him to Bergman. Well, we couldn't have any boxes out there on the floor, so what I did was to have a plank of wood gradually rising as he walked toward the camera.

F.T. Working these snags out can be pretty funny, especially when you're shooting in CinemaScope, because there, for each separate shot, you've got to have the chandeliers, the paintings, and all wall installations brought down, while at the same time, the beds, tables and chairs, and anything else that happens to be on the floor, have to be raised. For a visitor who accidentally wanders in on the set, it's truly a ridiculous sight. It's often occurred to me that one might make a first-rate comedy on the making of a movie.

A.H. It's a pretty good idea, and the way I'd do it is to have everything take place inside a film studio. But the drama would not be in front of the camera, but off the set, between takes. The stars in the picture would be minor characters and the real heroes would be the extras. In this way you'd get a wonderful counterpoint between the banal story being filmed and the real drama that takes place off stage. You might have a great feud between the cameraman and one of the electricians, so that when the cameraman sits down on the crane, it rises to the rigging loft, and the two men take a few minutes out to swap insults. Of course, you'd have satirical elements in the background of the whole thing.

F.T. We had a picture along those lines in France, Jacques Prevert's The Lovers ov Verona, which was directed by Andre Cayatte. But there seems to be a general impression that backstage stories don't make box-office hits.

A.H. It depends on the way they're handled. They made a movie here called What Price Hollywood? that was a big success, and A Star Is Born, which was very good.

F.T. That's true, and there's also Singin' in the Rain, which had some wonderful gags on the early days of talking pictures.

Correspondences, Regards, Accolades, and Roses

To The Editor:

Regarding Steve Feld's review of the Nuggets album in the November 17 issue in which he says, and I quote, "Ecchhh! Hand or no hand, this guy Moulty must be the biggest asshole that has ever lived!"

Well, Steve, as I'm sure many people in this town and dozens of people throughout the state will tell you, Moulty is most certainly not an asshole at all.

As for the comment itself, musical and journalistic naivete, however pernicious, are still forgivable. Ignorant and groundless slander of another human being never is. It reminds me of young kids (or adults) who call effeminate boys "queer" and then look around to see how much attention tye get.

Open up your eyes and grow a little, Steve, it feels good.

And besides, as the Grand Wazoo say, your asshole isn't the ugliest part of your body.

It's your mind.

Richard Bean

Dear Mr. Tinder,

You'll have to excuse me for being so late in replying to you but I have been very busy with my studies and, as a result of this, my time isn't my own. However I did want to give you a personal reply to your letter of November 8.

I'd like to know where is it that you got those facts of yours from. But, just for the moment let assume that they are true.

Galen, communism isn't run from Moscow or Peking. It is run from Paris, London and New York. There is a book out, which only costs a buck, which is entitled "None Dare Call It Conspiracy". The author, Gary Allen, was a history student: first at Stanford and then at Long Beach State (Cal). He found that his courses had been highly slanted through research that he did on his own. This book he wrote is what he found out by doing this independent research. What he found is that there is a conspiracy, involving Nixon, the Kennedy's, the Fords and Rockefeller's and others like them throughout the world, to [illegible] over and rule the world using Communism as a tool to do so.

I am not going to feed you facts and figures but I will let the book do that. As I said before, it costs $1 and can be ordered from: The American Opinion Library, 161 South St., Northampton, Mass. Read it, I think you'd get something out of it.

I'm being rushed right now so I'll make one final comment on what you said regarding my stand on busing. I am not in favor of segregation, as you seem to think. What I am against is forced social relationships. Let me ask you one question: If someone were living in a decent neighborhood with decent schools that the taxes he pays supports, why should his kids be forced to go to schools in a high crime area in an area where this guy does not live? Think about it.

I should like to get in touch with you as soon as possible to discuss these things with you. I find you do not have a listed phone number so, if you can, please contact me at 546-4656 aso we could arrange something.

Cordially,
Bob Estelle

Orchard Hill Never Had It So Good

By Gary Gomes

Larry Coryell (with Foreplay) and the Art Ensemble of Boston

It was a dull and dreary night when fourteen of us trooped our way to Worcester Dining Commons to witness the far-famed abilities of one Larry Coryell, guitarist extraordinaire. Coryell belongs to an odd breed of musicians – respected and popular, but not popular enough to warrant superstar status (not really important, but this factor does limit, through the way that the music industry functions, the amount of people that can hear his music). He is also reputed to be a jazz musician, and as well as his music benefiting from this activity (mostly with Gary Burton), it has also tended to make him quite inaccessible to most people (Jazz is an inappropriate word, it must be remembered, but the complexity of different types turns quite a few people off. "Good old rock'n'roll, you know, captures the public fancy.)

Coryell had two or three (take your pick) important factors going in his favour however. He grew up playing rock as well as jazz, so he found himself equally at home in both idioms. Burton's attempts (as well as Coryell's previous work with Chico Hamilton and his recent work with the Jazz Composers' Orchestra) at fusions of jazz and rock were well-received by jazz audiences, and Coryell was building a solid reputation for himself by playing with such rock worthies as Jack Bruce and Mitch Mitchell. It was a one shot type of thing, but at the best some good music was turned out, and that one tour he had with the two British superstars at least got his name on some people's minds. (You know, the type of thing where people think, "Well, Bruce played with Clapton, and Mitchell played with Hendrix, so this guy Coryell must have something going for him...")

Unfortunately, Coryell only played the Fillmore once, as I recall (with Bruce, Mitchell, and Mandell, but by God, his reputation was growing, and his albums (especially the electronically-oriented ones) began to have an impact. And let's face it, we're still in an Age of Guitar heroes, and with Clapton using his ability to a more limited degree, with Hendrix dead, Zappa still a little bit scary, and Alvin Lee and Jimmy Page getting repetitious (choice of material), someone has to fill that void. So now we have John McLaughlins and Larry Coryells emerging, because these guys know their instruments. For the people who find McLaughlin a trifle boring (and these people exist), Coryell fills the void. His playing is fast and inventive, and he also throws in enough electronics to satisfy the Hendrix crowd.

Worcester Dining Commons does have horrible acoustics, though, and it marred everything but the clearest lines (Mike Mandel's Moog shone through, however.). Unfortunately, where else on campus could you hold a concert of this size.

The Art Ensemble of Boston were really excellent. They featured an array of percussion devices, a really, really inventive drummer, a steady bass player (acoustic), a superb trumpet player, and a gentleman who I'd seen the year before with organist Webster Lewis, on saxophone and flute. However, the group seemed a trifle bizarre to the audience at large, probably due to more than one factor. First, people were there to see (and hopefully listen to) Larry Coryell, which is really here nor there, but which is always tough on the back up group. Secondly, the Art Ensemble of Boston succeeded in screwing up quite a few heads when they went into their preliminary rap: "You know, we're really not performers, even though we're up here on stage. The audience is the music' why do you fight–no matter what anybody tells you, you're always right." It's my suspicion that the audience wasn't prepared to be dealing with philosophic questions about the nature of music (though I wish they were). Anyway, there was some fine playing happening, and the flautist blew an excellent full-toned solo, had an incredible technique, and so did the trumpeter. It was a question of being the wrong time. (Then you begin to think to yourself, when is the right time, especially when you're informed by Joey Baron that the group is getting about as much to play opposite Coryell as Rush is to play at a party. The suffering artist syndrome strikes again....) Well, I just hope that people just won't shut off things like the Art Ensemble of Boston, since there's a lot to be gained by this kind of music, and you could think about it...

After a bit of a delay, the musicians from Foreplay took the stage: Mike Mandel, blind pianist and synthesizerist, was the first on stage, making delicate adjustments on the lectric instruments. Steve Marcus came on stage, an excellent saxophone player, and one of the first to realize (in the legitimate jazz idiom, at least) the possibilities inherent in playing freely over an electronic background (he released an album in 1967 called "Tomorrow Never Knows", which utilized that Beatles' song and Hendrix' "Third Stone From the Sun" as vehicles for improvisation; and the album still sounds as fresh as it did then). Another "fusionist" along with Coryell.

The rhythm section was made up of Harry Wilkinson on drums and Mervin Bronson on bass guitar. They were solid, reliable, and well-rehearsed, but loose enough to be able to follow Coryell and Marcus when they really took off - (which they did quite often).

Coryell himself was late to get on stage, but he finally arrived, to a pretty damn good audience response, so it was fairly pleasing to me that Coryell was at least known. Coryell did little in the way of announcements: the first number was a piece by Wolfgang Dauner, a German pianist whom Coryell and Jon Hiseman had played with at a European Jazz Festival. The selection was 12-tone in nature, with shifting rhythms, and it sort of caught some people flatfooted. Then they began to get into the mood of the concert, as soon as Coryell's chops snapped them into attention. Coryell is the type of player that has chops on top of chops, and his speed is slightly beyond credibility, so when he really starts playing he zips up. Marcus had somewhat the same effect. They shifted through about three numbers before they stopped Coryell and Marcus taking turns, and Mike Mandel occasionally throwing in a sound extravaganza on Moog, sometimes a quiet rush of water, other times a growling sound. They worked their way through one more number, and then moved on to more familiar material, such as "Sex" from the Coryell album. It was good, although I couldn't hear Coryell's voice that well (If you've ever heard Coryell's voice, you might consider me fortunate--it's sort of flat, whiny, and not very powerful.). Then the group broke into some rather loose jamming, Coryell quoting lines from other albums he'd done, and pulling tricks like sustaining a note with one finger, and running up the guitar neck with his hand. Quite impressive, and the buildup went along with the Moog and Soprano sax playing quite well, and these energy surges were very uplifting.

Finally Coryell ended his hour-and-a-half set with a composition by pianist Mike Mandel, which was very loose and swinging, with a lot of attention paid to tone colour. Not quite a finish yet.

Coryell began to think of something, and started playing "Johnny B. Goode", mostly because he wanted to keep on playing I think, both Mandel and Marcus sat this one out. It was really Coryell's show now, and "Johnny B. Goode" isn't the type of number that you have to have a good voice to sing, so...

Then, Harry Wilkinson tried to beat a fast retreat, because the man was tired, but Coryell insisted that he stay for one more thing–a version of "Green Onions".

Everyone in the group was fine, and Wilkinson was quite good exploring the drum kit well. He as well as Mandel, proved themselves to be very sensitive musicians, taking careful note of their instruments, while Coryell and Marcus were the pushers and expanders–technically good to excellent, and both taking more chances than the others. Perhaps Mervin Bronson wasn't inspired that night, or maybe he just wasn't loud enough to be heard, or maybe I wasn't listening closely enough, or maybe he just enjoys staying in the background. Whatever it was, he still did his job well, and set up a sturdy foundation for the rest of the group.

In any event, recognition (possibly Stardom?) is finally coming to Larry Coryell, who put on one of the finest semi-popular concerts this campus has seen. Now we'll see how long a group like the Art Ensemble of Boston has to wait, before that golden day when they, too, will stand on the hallowed steps of popular acceptance.

Ry Cooder
Bonnie Raitt

By Mike Kostek

Ry Cooder/Boomer's Story
Reprise MS 2117 time: 37:57
Bonnie Raitt/Give It Up
Warners BS 2643 time: 36:04

Next time you run through a hard, hard two weeks, in which, added to your daily battle with UMass, your pet dog of thirteen years dies, thus cutting your last link with your childhood, and then your steady girlfriend of a year and a half leaves you, it might be a good idea to have these two albums on your shelf. When you do hit occassional dry rot stretches like that and you turn to music to help you along, there are only a few types that will give you much consolation. You can go to the old blues, and give B.B. and Howlin' a tumble, but it's hard to relate to fifty year-old blacks, and besides, the real old blues won't really help you, unless you really enjoy feeling sorrier and sorrier for yourself.

Hard-line rock should just bounce off your tender psyche; perhaps soft jazz will be the ticket, but that's dubious. Skilled songsters like Dylan and the Beatles may connect right into your troubles, but the odds are against it. Certainly pop fluffs away in the face of any real emotion whatsoever.

So it is that the best answer is modern 'blues' refiners who sing and play old songs (and old-sounding songs) with verve and a high degree of skill that will comfort the most battered and forlorn of souls. These contemporary stylists are people like Paul Butterfield, Dr. John (Gumbo style), Taj Mahal and the hero and heroine of this piece, Ry Cooder and Bonnie Raitt.

Ry Cooder's third album and Bonnie Raitt's second are leaders in the wave of 'rock-popular' music that's quietly establishing solid standards for the rest of us. It's one thing for Led Zeppelin to steal, electrify and sensationalize old blues standards, turning them into hollow shells of teenage emotion. It's quite another thing for someone like Dylan to sing "I Ain't Got No Home In This World Anymore" and make it count. The difference lies in intent, emotion, maturity, lust for success, and desire to create something meaningful. Let's face it, the young music scene is getting very little respect from people outside of rock-pop, and deservedly so. If all we can do by now is the 1099th and 1100th cover versions of "Johnny B. Goode", then we're in trouble.

Before we can start making any great music, we must have great musicians, people who can look back and play older music better than the originators. Stepping into this time gap is Ry Cooder, slide guitarist and mandolin player supreme.

Ry's story is well-known. The best of all the sidemen-turned-star, he's established one of the best reputations in the business playing sessions for Captain Beefheart, Taj Mahal, and others. He reached some sort of peak in familiarity with the Jamming With Edward album that came out a year ago. Although the record is a bore and contains very little (imagine if they sold that for $5.98!), it did start to get Ry's name tossed around in the "popular market". About time too, because he deserves it.

Right now, no one plays better slide guitar, but Ry's versatility is his strong point. The session hours have honed his skills to a sharp point of clarity, crispness, and directness.

Boomer's Story is a solid addition to his stable of fine music. Where his first album, Ry Cooder, is very dark and bluesy, and his second, Into The Purple Valley is much lighter in tone, Boomer's Story is sadder, more down than the others.

As usual, Ry's picked a batch of old choice cuts and given them a new coat of paint with his sensitive arranging, singing and playing.

"Boomer's Story" sets the tone of the album, being a sad tale of a wanderer who never could settle down. The album lacks playing credits so we don't know who's backing Ry on drums, bass etc., but it's a fine band throughout.

"Cherry Ball Blues" is the best piece of up tempo playing on the record and is a tasty little ball of fine playing by Ry and company. "Crow Black Chicken" is a slapphappy number that is as raspily happy as you can get. Side One ends on a sadly quiet note with "Maria Elena", a Spanish-sounding lament.

Side two is highlighted by a fascinating trio of political of songs. "Rally 'Round The Flag" is sung so simply, softly, slowly and sentimentally that it sounds like it was recorded at the last reunion of The Army Of The Potomac. Next we're updated to World War II's standard, "Comin' In On A Wing And A Prayer". Ry gives it a deceptively light arrangement which underscores the tension and seriousness of the situation. "President Kennedy" is a "decayed lament" sung almost inaudibly by Sleepy Joe Estes (good nickname).

At no time does Ry or the band drop below excellence in their performance.

Closely related to the spirit of solid music that Ry embodies is Bonnie Raitt and her new album, Give It Up.

Bonnie is 22 and lives in Cambridge, which accounts for all those 'local talent' rumors you hear. If you've ever noticed a large hole in your record collection under the category of Female Rock, you're not alone. Besides Tina Turner and Janis, there just aren't any top level rocking sisters. Why?

Anyway, if you like the sound of the female voice, but Laura Nyro, Judy Collins, Joan Baez, Joni Mitchell, Buffie Sainte-Marie and Carole King are too soft and sweet for you, and you're turned off by would'be Janises like Genya Ravan (formerly of Ten-Wheel Drive) and Candy Gibbons (Zephyr), I suggest that you get better acquainted with Bonnie Raitt (Tracy Nelson of Mother Earth is also fine).

Give It Up is a pleasing selection of old and new songs, given old and new arrangements. She updates tired old stuff like "If You Gotta Make A Fool Of Somebody" and "I Know" while taking new songs like Jackson Browne's "Under The Falling Sky" and her own "Give It Up Or Let Me Go" and making them sound like classics.

Bonnie sings with more restraint than Janis, but far more emotion than Grace. Backing her up is a top notch group from the infamous Woodstock circle in upper New York State. Paul Butterfield stops by long enough to drop in some lethal harmonica in "Under The Falling Sky". "Stayed Too Long At The Fair" is a beautifully soulful song and "Love Has No Pride" is outstanding, with Bonnie on acoustic guitar and piano, and singing backed by only a bass. However, the standout here is Bonnie's own "You Told Me Baby". John Hall plays some great laid-back guitar in the break, and the entire song is 3:43 of building, pushing, yet relaxed funk.

Both Ry Cooder and Bonnie Raitt obviously love music. Both show a great maturity in turning out tuneful albums of 'traditional' music that reflect a deep understanding and appreciation on their part. By learning the real roots and hitting the note consistantly while eschewing the latest idiot fads, Bonnie and Ry have proved their worth. They'll be around long after the last T. Rex album has found its way into the used record bin.

Both of these artists exude a positive feeling of hope and happiness. Certainly Bonnie runs through a lot more musical modes that Ry does, with ragtime, up-tempo Dixieland blues and other traditional horn arrangements throughout.

It's so nice to know that at least some of our contemporaries care enough to not only play the great songs of years ago, but play them well and with authority.

Ry Cooder and Bonnie Raitt may not be able to bring your dog back to life, but they may make you feel well enough to try and get your girlfriend back. Back at least for a while.

Joni Mitchell

By Richard Bean

For The Roses
Asylum SD 5057

Women have played a strange role in the history of popular music. From Brenda Lee through Marianne Faithful and on to the queens of fire and ice, Janis and Grace, the voice of the modern woman has been either blindly overlooked or tragically misused. In a scene exceeded in male domination only by sports and politics, (and here I must make the notable exception of black music), the woman's voice was used basically to embellish male music in all too many cases. The past few years have seen the arrival of Carole King (whose main body of work is basically genderless, i.e. "You've Got A Friend", "Goin' Back", "Music") Judy Collins (pleasantly done covers of mainly male-written songs) and Nina Simone (Mostly interpretive) but to my mind the female consciousness has been given its greatest voice in song by four unique ladies. One is Laura Nyro, another is Tammy Wynette, and of course Aretha.

The fourth is Joni Mitchell and she has given us this holiday season a collection of thoughts and music which transcends tired bullshit jargon like "new album" and "long awaited" that people like me are always spewing to each other. It's more like a letter you get from someone, not 'cause it's "due" or it's "right" but because something bigger than all of that made it happen.

Well, this "review" is going to be hell to write, because the critical vocabulary, nay the English vocabulary I have at hand simply doesn't provide for the experience I've gotten from this record. The underlying theory of criticism, that you can somehow deal with art through words, is tenuous indeed, but when something like this comes along it flops like an angel cake on Everest. And lest you think I'm just another music junkie running off at the hyperbolic mouth, what I'm talking about is not "greatness" or any other superlatives, really. It's the "nature" of the beauty, which like a Piccaso painting or a Bergman film, simply does not lend itself to verbal interpretation beyond a simple "yes" or a nice long sigh.

For The Roses make it, friends. It's in the words.

The music is exquisite, an extension of the spare, flowing river of sound that has weaved through all her past work. Her piano is impeccable, with a strong sense of dynamics. The piano is Joni's other voice. And this time around she has added another voice, one that melts into her music like a deep green meadow into a clear blue sky. That would be Tommy Scott, whose windwoods and reeds float through Joni's melodies with unnerving grace and restrained power. It always amazes me how in this day of the multi-billion dollar record industry and publicity overdose a man of such obvious skill and maturity can suddenly appear as if found in some unexplored reaches of the Black Forest. But it's delightful nonetheless.

Well, as I stated before, it all comes down to the words, and if a reviewer's chief function is to stimulate interest in a potential listener, I shall in this case cede to Joni's own words, because they tell the tale, despite the absence of the vital second dimension of the music.

"You've got to shake your fists at lightning now
You've got to roar like forest fire
You've got to spread your light like blazes
All across the sky
They're going to aim the hoses on you
Show them you won't expire
Not till you burn up every passion
Not even when you die
Come on now
You've got to try
If you're feeling contempt
Well then you tell it
If you're tired of the silent night
Jesus, well then you yell it
Condemned to wires and hammers
Strike every chord that you feel
That broken trees
And elephant ivories
Conceal
A landmark album from a beautiful lady.
It's a gift. Take it.

One Man Dog--James Taylor (Warner Bros. Records)

enchantment. Eighteen (yes, eighteen) songs and songlets comprise an eloquent potpourri of mesmerizing musicality known as One Man Dog. Included in the celebration are the Taylor family (except lonesome Livingston) and friends Linda Ronstadt, Carole King, Carly Simon (Mrs. J. Taylor) and Taylor's trusty but inept group, The Section.

What is so good about this album is that brings about an audio deja vu (deja entendu?) that is most refreshing. A melody or phrase will suddenly evolve out of nowhere, settle into place, and make way for a new one. The songs run in length from twenty-nine seconds ("Mescalito", James' tribute to mescaline) to the comparatively long "Someone", at three and a half minutes. It's most assuredly a record you can hum to.

Taylor's singing has never been masterful, his narrow range falters when it's pushed too far. In spite of this, his songs are designed for him, with his lonely lost vocals suitably complementing the tender lyrics and soft melodies. When Taylor attemps to do that mandatory rocker song (which every self-respecting superstar must do to fulfill an unwritten law) like "Don't You Know" and "Fool For You" on this album, he's at his weakest.

So much of One Man Dog aptly fits into Taylor's motif, though, resulting in a memorable outing for all. "Nobody But You" is the quintessence of Taylor's moody, simplistic style, as are several others on the first side, "New Tune" (ambitious title!), "Back on the Street Again", and "Don't Let Me Be Lonely Tonight". A James Taylor "Hymn" on side two succeeds as the most charming cut on the record.

The last half of the second side is an Abbey Road-type collage of bits and pieces--which we all know is a COP—OUT! IT'S MERELY AN INEFFICIENT EXCUSE TO COVER UP. A SONGWRITER'S INADEQUACY TO CONSTRUCT A COMPLETE MUSICAL STATEMENT. Ask John Lennon--he'll tell you. Because of it's piecemeal approach, it fails to move. Somewhere in that ending there is a double-tracked vocal that is also inappropriate for Taylor.

The two instrumentals ("Instrumental I" and "Instrumental II", naturally) serve mostly as long intro's into the next song. The latter especially--it is guitarist McLaughlin's solo spot, leading into his composition. "Instrumental I", meanwhile, should have been titled "Olde English", for it captures the stately elegance of Edwardian England.

The festivities boast several highlights. "One Man Parade" (from whence the "one man dog" line originates) is a veritable supersession with the whole gang aboard. As a result it treads on the syruppy side of the street, making it good AM jail bait. "One Morning in May" is a Taylor-Ronstadt duet that features a short, captivating Ronstadt solo. Her scant seconds are so good that she steals the whole song from her partner. (And she subsequently wins the title of Rock's Second Best Female Vocalist, behind amazing Grace). Guitarist heavy John McLaughlin plays on a song he wrote, "Someone," that is Taylor-made.

As a whole, One Man Dog succeeds. It sounds more like Mudslide Slim than it does Sweet Baby James, and it shows that even if James Taylor is becoming slack (this record follows an absence of almost two years) he nevertheless has plenty of good sounds to share.

Happy and Artie Traum at the Amherst Folklore Center, November 11.

"Excuse me. How did you first hear about Happy and Artie Traum?"

"A friend of mine once took guitar lessons from one of them."

"Excuse me. Why did you come to the Folklore Center tonight?"

"I got Happy's book he wrote."

"I went through a Happy Trauma."

"That's bad. A friend of mine told me to come. I came."

"I saw them playing during my City College days in 1967."

"Eddie Greenberg told me to come. He was also the first Beatle manic."

"Excuse me, ms. Where did you hear about Happy and Artie?"

"Around 1965, they were on WBAI radio in New York."

"Someone in Pierpont told me they were good."

"I had these Chinese fortune cookies, see, and they're finger-pickin' good."

"The day the men landed on the moon, July 24, 1969, they played at Newport and sang 'Uncle Jed'."

It was a strange generation. They were borned and raised in Manhatten, spiritually, if not physically. When they began singing, the world was being seen through new eyes--the torment, the misery, the ecstasy, and injustice. And now that people don't care much anymore, they are going back to their "roots", which, surprisingly enough, has more in common with the homilies of a McGovern, than with the sophistication of a Kennedy or an Abzug.

Dylan, Dave Bromberg, Judy Collins, Fred Neil, Phil Ochs, Tom Paxton, Dion, Jackie Washing on, Odetta, Belafonte, Peter, Paul and Mary. That's the generation.

Happy and Artie Traum have been around a long time, but not so long that their music has grown stale like many of their contemporaries.

Yes, the social significance of their songs is muted. Their song about Nixon--"Pickpockets, perjurers and thieves"--could be applied to any politician in recent years. "Refugees", on the other hand, is effective precisely because it is muted and unspecific:

Seems like we're homeless again...
They have turned us into Refugees
You see us everywhere
Refugees of love
Refugees of war
Refugees
See us forever more

Although the Traum brothers do lapse into those subtle "protest" songs, their forte can only be described as funk.

Let me tell you, Sam
This is the way I am
If my luck holds out
I'm gonna move on out
If not then,
I don't give a damn

Happy and Artie concerts are less the foot-stompin', hand-clappin' experiences, than the swaying, head noddin', feelin'-good-all-over kind. Cajun alligator men, truck driving men, fishing, muskrats named Sally Ann, Botticelli's nieces, and strange tales about Duberry Oldberry of the Newbury Liberry who discovered that Teddy Roosevelt drank armadillo skins to increase his sexual prowness; now that the Movement is forgotten, these are Happy and Artie's roots.

Traum and Traum have traditionally neglected the standard sing-a-longs. Instead, they developed eerie and often complicated systems of noises, grunts, and lyrics which cannot resist.

"Crabjoint" (that was the chorus) and "Uncle Jed" are two examples:

Wooooooo wee, Uncle Jed say,
Isn't everybody getting older each day.
Wooooooo wee, who wants to fly
I only want to live until the day that I die.

The Traum's bass player, Tony Brown, played several pleasant guitar songs during the second set. Although they were lyrically fine, after the first two, they started to sound like Judy Collins without her background musicians. Happy and Artie should have joined in with some finger picking stuff, banjo, or harp.

Perhaps what is needed in the Seventies is not more protest, but just sanity subsistence. Maybe the best we can do is just keep our own heads together. If that's the case, Happy and Artie Traum are like soothing psychological manna from heaven.

Jezebel (1936)
Many critics and historians consider this romantic melodrama set in the South prior to the Civil War as Bette Davis's screentest for a role she never received: that of Scarlett O'Hara in Gone With The Wind. She did win her second Oscar for her portrayal of an imperious, arrogant, "Siren of the South." William Wyler directs this film in an efficient and handsome manner. A number of memorable sequences: a well-staged ball and one portion which depicts a yellow fever epidemic with its mourners, bodies, smoke, and black signs on the white mansions of the Southern aristocracy. With Henry Fonda, Donald Crisp. Channel 30.

Wilson (1944)
Part one. Twentieth Century Fox magnate Darryl F. Zanuck's lavish tribute to the World War I President. A prestige production in the grand manner, it takes over 2 1/2 hours to trace the rise and decline of Woodrow Wilson, idealised in Lamar Trotti's screenplay and Alexander Knox's performance into a figure of almost saintly rectitude. Zanuck spared no expense to give the film a "big", crowded look, particularly in its superb restaging of the 1912 Baltimore Democratic Convention: a huge congested auditorium, fans flapping in the heat, the hurly-burly of big-time politics marvellously well suggested. A large cast of players of the calibre of Thomas Mitchell, Cedric Hardwicke, Charles Coburn and Geraldine Fitzgerald contributed markedly to the film's effect, one of solid, unfussy movie-making, conscientious if somewhat bloodless. Directed by Henry King. Channel 3.

The African Queen (1951)
One of the most likeable films of all time; John Huston's most affectionate film about the romance of a prim missionary spinster and a hardened riverboat seaman as they travel down the Congo during the First World War. The film is superb comedy and adventure and contains two flawlessly entertaining performances from Katherine Hepburn and Humphrey Bogart. Bogart won an Oscar and a New York Film Critics Award for his performance. A great film and our pick of the week. Channel 3.

Theater

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW
The University of Massachusetts Theatre will continue its 1972-73 season with a free-form production of Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew. The play will be presented on Dec. 7-9 and 14-16 in Bartlett Auditorium at 8:30 P.M. The University Theatre Ensemble, under the direction of Gary Stewart of the Theatre faculty, considers the play as a comment on the complexity and ambiguity of male/female roles and relationships. While respecting the essential Shakespearian forms and language, the production explores unusual visual, physical and musical means of commenting on the text.

The Taming of the Shrew is the first of a continuing series of "Ensemble" productions, a special form of theatre which focuses attention on the actor and his art. Stage space in the ensemble concept is meant to be neutral: the wardrobe, of indeterminate style and period; properties and set pieces, generalized extensions of the actor rather than particular objects in time and space. Thus, in the absence of external supports, the ensemble production must rely exclusively on the interplay of actors' and audiences' imaginations for constructing the specific verbal and visual world of the play. The ensemble experience is perhaps the most crucial - and demanding - in the actors' training. Of all theatrical events, it is certainly one of the most stimulating and challenging for audiences.

Tickets for The Taming of the Shrew may be obtained at the Bartlett Auditorium box office beginning Monday, November 27, or by calling 545-2579.

The box office will be open from 10:00 A.M. to 4:00 P.M. Monday through Friday and on the evenings of performances. Tickets are $1.00 for UMass. students and $1.50 for the general public.

Films

ANNE OF A THOUSAND DAYS (1970)
An overrated historical pageant. Hal Wallis produces these heavy-budgeted, talky, static spectacles which gain respect because they are ever so reverent about their subjects. It's half-baked Maxwell Anderson. This story of Anne Boleyn and Henry VIII has Genevieve Bujold, pretty, monotonous queen patterned against Richard Burton's dynamic king. Hg's the only thing worth watching in the picture and it's easy to see why he put her away, you only wish it would happen sooner. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, 12/2, 7 and 10.

THE BIRDS (1963)
Along with Marnie, this Hitchcock film has divided critics as to worth. It concerns the chance meeting in a pet shop of a young woman and a wealthy young man. He takes her to his home on the California coast to meet hismother. While there all the birds in the area begin to attack the inhabitants. Some have found fault with the symbolism, others with the obvious technical naivete; second rate Hitchcock with third rate special effects. Others have found stunning allegory in the story of birds who arbitrarily and unpredictably furn on men. We tend towards the second opinion; Hitchcock's view of the apocalypse is devistating. With Tippi Hedren, Rod Taylor, Suzanne Pleshette, and Jessica Tandy. Student Union Ballroom, Monday 12/4, 7 and 9:30.

BLUE WATER, WHITE DEATH (1971)
A boring self-indulgent documentary about sea explorers filming sharks. The film's only effective sequence is its concluding one in which some men swim amongst the largest predatory of them all The Great White Shark. It is beautifully photographed though. Mahar Auditorium, Saturday, 12/2, 7, 9, and 11.

BORN LOSERS (1966)
A cut above the average bikie picture about a Vietnam veteran who returns to his native California and almost single handedly fights a gang of renegade motorcyclist. The plot is similar to the the Fifties Brando film The Wild One, but here is presently much more graphically. Members of the gang rape teenage girls from the town then frighten the authorities into inaction. Some of it's quite violent and sensational, still better than most American-International films of this sort. See ad for time and place.

BUTTERFLIES ARE FREE
The play ran for more than three years on Broadway and was a successful comedy-drama cut from the Neil Simon-Jean Kerr mold. Fast one-liners and the quick jab to the sentimental jugular. The story concerns a blind boy who breaks away from his well-meaning, but over bearing mother to live in a city apartment. He meets the girl-next-door, an amoral kook, and immediately falls in love. Complications arise in the shape of his meddling mother and her annoying boyfriend. Two dimensionally filmed, as if still on stage, it's only interesting in the performance of Eileen Heckart as Mom. Otherwise the blandness of Edward Albert as the blind boy and the mindlessness of Goldie Hawn as the kook prevail. Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

THE BOYFRIEND
Ken Russell's scintillatingly reinterprates Sandy Wilson's 1954 stage parody of the musicals of the Twenties. It is a wide-eyed, colorful affectionate valentine to the genius of Thirties filmusical director Busby Berkeley. The story blends stage and screen techniques as it tells of backstage intrigue and love, this time concerning a third-rate theater troupe performing their show The Boy Friend in the British provinces during the early Thirties. There hasn't been a bigger, more successful camp extravaganza since the Musical's heyday in the Forties. Although it pales when compared to Berkeley's The Gang's All Here, Russell is, as usual, a victim of grosse indulgence, but here is such an apparent virtue that the whole film, in fact every frame, shines. A surprise too, is the performance of Twiggy in her first starring role; she sings well enough, dances even better, and has a most appealing screen personality. Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 12/2, 7:30 and 9:30.

CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS (1936)
Victor Fleming's film version of Rudyard Kipling's novel about a fisherman who tames a spoiled rich kid. It brought Spencer Tracy an Oscar for Best Actor; it's essentially a romantic melodrama with good, sentimental performances from Lionel Barrymore and Freddie Bartholemew. Campus Center Auditorium, Wednesday, 12/6, 9.

491 (1965)
The film the Swedish director made prior to I Am Curious (Yellow and Blue) about the affairs of a group of amoral youths. It would be difficult that a filmmaker could have made a film more boring than I Am Curious (Yellow and Blue), but he did it with 491 which only shows how essentially boring promiscuity and politics really are.

CLOSELY WATCHED TRAINS (1966)
In Czechoslovakia during World War II a diffident youth starts his first job at a village railway station. The film explores his problems adjusting, socially and emotionally, to his fellow workers an the war. Jiri Menzel's first feature recalls the work of Milos Forman in its elliptically funny, but tender observation of the quirks of humanity. Its funniest scenes are uproarious; the regular guard tearing up the stationmaster's couch in a moment of passionate abandon; the same guard rubber-stamping the backside of a peasant girl; the visits of a Nazi controller. But it is also marvelously perceptive both in its observation of everyday behavior and in the way it reveals the boy's maturation; the scene of the boy losing his virginity to the partisan girl has an especial charm. Closely Watched Trains was the second Czechoslovak film in three years to win an Academy Award. Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, Sunday, 12/3, 7 and 9:30.

DOCTOR ZHIVAGO (1966)
David Lean's adaptation of Boris Paternack's modern epic amounts to One Man's Family Cossack style. This slick production is long and overly romantic. It reduces the novel to slick magazine pulp. The direction plods, the performances are stack and sloppy, the screenplay is academic and confusing, and the overall effect is as empty as the Maurice Jarre music score. A large cast is led by Omar Sharift as Zhivago, Julie Christie as the ever-patient Lara, and Geraldine Chaplin, Tom Courteney, and briefly radiant in a supporting role is Rod Steiger. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

DUMBO (1941)
The Disney cartoon about the separation of a baby elephant from his Mother. Pauline Kael has written emphatic, impassioned pieces of this film's frightening effect upon children. Showcase Cinema, West Springfield.

ECHOES OF SILENCE
A film of the New American Cinema by Peter Emmanuel Goldman. Jonas Mekas in the Village Voice has written:

"...He makes his people come to life simply and believably--more believable than most of the people in the Chabrol and Truffaut cinema...the film has a thematic and formal beauty that is remarkable."

Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 12/3, 7:30.

THE ENDLESS SUMMER (1966)
Bruce Brown's splendid documentary about two surfers who search the earth for the "perfect wave". It is a beautiful film to watch, filled with some spectacular footage of surfing on some of the Earth's most breathtaking beaches. Brown has made a number of sports documentaries since, but none have the warmth or beauty of this one. Hampden Dining Commons, Friday, 12/1, 7 and 9:30.

EVERYTHING YOU EVER WANTED TO KNOW ABOUT SEX...BUT WERE AFRAID TO ASK
Six questions from David Reuben's maddening best seller are given an intensive comic treatment by Woody Allen. Each of the skits opens with a title card ("What Happens During Ejaculation?") and Allen proceeds with a sharpness that many have felt tasteless. He probably would have been an errand boy during the inquisition. Each skit seems a satire on a particular film genre: the futuristic fantasy the Fifties, sci-fi film, the Antonioni films, etc. Allen is a maddening funny man and his film is best when he is disarmingly cool about incredibly ridiculous situations. Gene Wilder, amoured by a sheep, lovingly carrying her through a hotel lobby; Lou Jacobi in drag conquettishly dancing in front of a mirror or Allen himself as one tiny sperm having an identity crisis during the final moments of ejaculation. Academy of Music, Northampton.

HEAT
The latest release from the Andy Warhol factory is written, directed, and photographed by Paul Morrisey (Flesh and Trash). The film starring Joe Dallesandro (Lonesome Cowboys and Trash) and Sylvia Miles (nominated for a Best Supporting Actress in Midnight Cowboy) is being likened to a 21-years-later view of Sunset Boulevard only set in New York this time. Ms. Miles plays a much-married, middle-aged, B-movie actress with little talent but lots of body. Dallesandro plays his usual stud role with the little snitch being that in this film he was once a child star who finally made it big on a tv series called "The Big Ranch." The film also contains a fantastic performance by the late Andrea Feldman as a freaked out lesbian with an illegitimate child living with her lover. Was everybody's darling when premiered at the New York Film Festival recently. Not ours, see review elsewhere in issue. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

IN THE HEAT OF THE NIGHT (1967)
Norman Jewison sweet liberal idyll that masquerades as a murder mystery won an Oscar for Best Picture. Hollywood found its soppy liberalism more palatable than The Graduate's anarchial view of romance and sex. It is the story of a Northern black policeman who enters the deep South to investigate a murder and makes a shaky alliance with a bigoted sherriff. The racial angle is played to its hilt, so much so that it is unnecessary in terms of the mystery. The murderer, though, is pretty obvious from the start. Jewison has made a career of capitalizing on Big Issues or Ideas in films which cannot hold their thematic weight. He's the Stanley Kramer of the late Sixties. This is the most honored example of this sort of film. Rod Steiger won an Oscar for Best Actor, although it has been generally felt it was for his superlative performance in the equally pretentious The Pawnbroker. Sidney Poitier is featured. The sort of movie which should have critics eating their reviews. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College.

LADY SINGS THE BLUES
This musical bio of Billie Holdiay oozes all over the screen with typical Hollywood razzle-dazzleness. Contrary to what the ads say Diana Ross is not Billie Holiday, but she makes a decent movie debut. The film lacks direction: it can't decide whether to be a depiction of the degeration of a musical great or a super spectacular vehicle for Miss Ross. Some award should go to this film for its audacity of having Miss Ross singing "My Man" near the film's close, a la Streisand in Funny Girl. Billy Dee Williams is commendable as the unidentified man in Billie's life. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE MECHANIC
Charles Bronson is currently the world's most popular star even though he is still considered a B movie actor in this native country. This film will maintain his reputation: he plays a hired assassin who rues his victims in [illegible] Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

NOTORIOUS (1946)
[illegible] Ingrid Bergman comes into to do her commissional espionage thriller: a beautiful American agent in South America marries the head of a group of German spies in order to watch him, although she loves another American agent. This spy thriller includes some brilliant stylistic exercises: a traveling shot beginning in a ballroom and ending in close up on a key held in a hand; an enormous close up of a poisoned cup of coffee; close up of dancers' faces, etc, with Ingrid Bergman, Cary Grant, and Claude Rains. Of all his Forties films, one of the best. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, 12/5, 8.

RAGE
George C. Scott's directorial debut, he also stars in this film about a man who, with his son, is endangered by nerve gas which has escaped from an army storage center. Not a bad film, but the sort of stuff for the ultimate Scott enthusiast. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield, Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

SABOTEUR (1942)
Another one of Hitchcock's best suspense thrillers from the Forties. This one concerns a World War II espionage ring and has a stunning climax on top the Statue of Liberty. With Robert Cummings and Priscilla Lane. Amherst Folklore Center, Tuesday, 12/5, 7:30.

SCROOGE (1970)
Despite this being painfully tuneless musical, the recent adaptation of Dicken's classic story is worth seeing for its fine script and the brilliant characterization of Albert Finney as Scrooge. The production is handsome, the wonderfully acted, and the results are enormously entertaing, the only major fault is lacklustre Leslie Briscusse score. A fine cast is featured led by Alec Guinness, Edith Evans, and Kenneth Moore. Amherst Cinema, Saturday and Sunday matinees.

A SEPARATE PEACE
John Knowles classic story of the relationship between two boys at a New England prep school during the Second World War is filled with dialogue lifted from the book and spoken all over the lovely grounds of Philip Exeter Academy. Fine if you enjoy tours. Director Larry Peerce's attempt at naturalism eliminates the story's dramatic value. It unfolds in a series of lyrical scenes which lead nowhere. The non-professional actors do well enough. One of the year's major disappointments. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

Doctor Zhivago

SLAUGHTERHOUSE—FIVE
Kurt Vonnegut Jr.'s college classis was obediently transformed by George Roy Hill into a sleek, lifeless, and shallow film which time trips decades with ease, but never approaches the interesting implications about time and space. The story concerns an Army medic who jumps from the bombing of Dresden to Babbitt-like life in a Midwestern city ot congugal speldor in an interstellar penthouse. Vonnegut's point, it seems, is life but a random sampling of events and one should emphasize the good and ignore the bad. The film emphasizes the silly sort of satire about Middle America that young people would feel manic toward if it were aimed at them. Here they laugh. Worse is the power-of-positive-believing which is at the center of Vonnegut's argument. The film is admirably edited yet cold in its machine-like precision. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

STAGECOACH (1939)
This classic western by a pioneer director of westerns has a favorite John Ford theme: the behavior of and revelation of character in a group of people under stress. Though the plot is from an American short story, Dudley Nichols' sprip has many of its roots in Maupassant in its depiction of the changing relationships in a group of characters during a voyage in a country in turbulence. The most famous sequence is the Indian attack with a swift pan revealing the Indians on the skyline, but this superbly mounted and edited sequence is perhaps of lesser value than the film's memorable portraits of typical American pioneers.
Student Union Ballroom, Wednesday, 12/6 7 and 11.

TAKE THE MONEY AND RUN (1969)
Some consider this to be the best Woody Allen comedy. In some ways they're not far from the truth. It is clearly his most vibrant and absurd. Simply, it's concerned with a bank robbery, or as much as a Woody Allen film could concern anything more than his perverse comic visions. The scene where his parents attempt to disguise themselves for a press interview is a gem. Thompson 104, Saturday, 12/2, 7:30 and 9:30.

THE THIRTY—NINE STEPS (1935)
A secret service agent assassinated in the London apartment of Richard Hannay but Hannay escapes both the police and the assassins in order to find the members of the spy ring called "The 39 Steps" in Scotland and thus clear his name. Freely adapted from Buchan's novel, this is Hitchcock's most virtuoso and most famous work during his English period. Its chase is handled with great technical finesse and with marvelous touches of macabre humor and banter, moving the hero from a train to a leap from a bridge, across the nicely observed Scottish landscape to a party in a large house (whose owner turns out to be the chief of the spy ring), to a political meeting, to a Salvation Army rally, through yet another flight across the landscape handcuffed to a girl, and finally to a musical hall in London. Though its plot is unbelievable, Hitchcock's continual mastery of suspense keeps it alive. He was to return many times in later films to similar situations, but he never truly matched the finesse of this one. Campus Center Auditorium, Monday, 12/4, 7 and 9.

THREE IN THE ATTIC (1969)
This American International quickie, one of the first sexploitation films, could be also titled "Andy Hardy Discovers Sex". The story concerns itself with Paxton Quigley (Christopher Jones), the B.M.O.C. when it comes to the bedroom and how three of his recent conquests hold him prisoner in an attic where they take shifts making him perform various [illegible]. Everything else in the film pives up to the pastiche of the [illegible] screenplay. The Three Stooges are also on the program. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, 12/1 7 and 9:30.

THE TIME MACHINE (1960)
One of the best adaptions of an H.G. Wells story, "The Time Machine" is noteworthy for several reasons: An intelligent screenplay, consistently fine performances led by Rod Taylor and Yvette Mimieux, and excellent special effects all add up to a superior fantasy excursion. The story is of an inventor at the turn of the century and the machine which enables him to travel through time. Mahar, Thursday 12/7, 7 and 9:30.

THE TRIAL (1962)
Orson Welles's version of Kafka's novel (which he says in the prologue "has the logic of a dream, of a nightmare") is the only one of his films apart from Citizen Kane over which he has exercised complete control, including control of the editing. Even though it contains necessary transpositions and adaptations to update the action, it is entirely faithful to the novel; beyond this, it is Welles's reflections on himself and on the modern world. Much of the action was filmed in the vast, fantastic setting of the disused Gare d'Orsay, which Welles turns into a kind of antechamber of hell. Though one could fault Tony Perkins' uncertain and often ambiguous performance as Joseph K, the film is replete with traditional Wellesian baroque images. Most of the acting is unexceptionable, but in this extraordinary film the atmosphere and sets should perhaps be more important than the characters. Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Friday, 12/1, 8.

200 MOTELS
A film by Frank Zappa, featuring the Mothers of Invention filmed with a video-tape-film process which makes it look like a freak tv variety hour. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 12/3, 7 and 9:30.

THE VALACHI PAPERS
Terence Young's dumb Mafia picture, taken from the true story of Joe Valachi the film capitalizes shamelessly on the success of The Godfather but isn't as nearly as good. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield, Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

The People's Market Is Coming

People of the UMass Student Community:
On Friday, November 17, the Commuter Assembly of the University of Massachusetts decided to make a committment to a long sought-after ideal; a new concept in the development of the UMass Community. The Assembly has loaned the UMass People's Market the sum of $4,000.00 to allow us to begin operation.

Year after year the student community at UMass spends thousands of dollars which are taken out of our community instead of being returned to us in the form of lower prices, more services, jobs for students and reduced student taxes. The Peoples' Market is being set up as an alternative to the economic exploitation of our community by some members of the local economic system. We stress the fact that we are an alternative institution, and we stand for more than merely "bargains" or "low-cost". If you don't like the way the system operates it does little good to just complain about it--you must build alternatives. As a non-profit oriented organization, the Peoples' Market will feature lower prices as a matter of course. But we will do more than that. By our very existence and actions, the Peoples' Market will allow us, as a community, to take control of our own lives, and not force us to rely on a system of private profiteering and human exploitation. We will exist to serve us: the Student Community of UMass.

The Committee for the creation of the Peoples' Market has been and remains in close contact with several other like organizations. We owe a deep debt of gratitude to the Amherst Food Conspiracy for their assistance and support; to the North American Student Co-Operative Organization and the Wisconsin Student Association for their invaluable information, background material and written materials which have been and continue to be used extensively throughout our proposals; to the New World Coalition for their advice, support and time freely given; to the New England Co-Op for their aid and direction in ordering; and to countless others who have been so generous and helpful with their knowledge and active participation.

People, we have done our best to create an alternative institution for us to use. We have given ourselves, all of us, the opportunity to do more than merely pay lip-service to our ideals of alternatives to a corrupt system and to putting an end to discriminatory practices and profiteering. We have before us an opportunity to reawaken those ideals of alternatives to a corrupt system and to putting an end to discriminatory practices and profiteering. We have before us an opportunity to reawaken those ideals and make a commitment to them, to take control of our community and our own lives. If you are concerned about our future, the Peoples' Market is the best place to spend your money. We are here to serve all of us. Our future is in our own hands, and that's what community control is all about. Support us and we support each other. We have a right and an obligation to choose how we will use our own money.

The Peoples' Market will be open for business the first day of school of the Spring Semester, 1973. It will be YOUR store, YOUR alternative institution. We must pool our ideas, our resources and our abilities for OUR benefit. We must work together toward our common goals and recognize our responsibility to make a commitment to each other in this mutual venture. We need your support and your help, but most of all we need YOU, the Student Community of UMass, behind us. We are starting in a New Year with a new direction. Join us NOW for a better tomorrow!

The Committee for the Creation of the Peoples' Market

Naughty Faculty

To The Editor:
Remember how upset the Faculty was that the Rhetoric Program was, how we say, "less than adequate?" Remember how the Faculty was so concerned that they set up a special committee to "study" the "problem". Well, if you remember the whole thing, then you probably have a pretty good memory because that was a whole month ago. It's been a whole month and our "concerned" Faculty still haven't appointed any people to that committee. The Student Senate had appointments to the committee that next week, but it seems that the "concerned Faculty" have needed at least a whole month. A whole month, while 3,500 students have to put up with a program that everyone, including the Chairman of the English Department, admits is bad. If it takes a month to make appointments to a simple committee, one wonders how long it will take that committee to come out with its recommendations. Will we have to suffer through another year of Rhetoric while the committee decides when they meet? Maybe another two years while the Faculty "study the problem". I think that the Faculty have shown exactly how "concerned" they are. May God save us from such "concern."

Where Stand You?

To The Editor:
We the undersigned residents of Springfield, Mass., acting as members of S.M.A.R.T., a non-profit education corporation whose principle place of business will be Springfield, Mass., petition the Model Cities Policy Board of Springfield Model Cities Agency to recognize, legitimatize by your process and publicize our existence and being as a delegate agency of Model Cities. We the young of the community are unique in that as students, both college and high school, have unified our efforts and concerns into a viable vehicle whose focus and thrust will be the education of our black brothers and sisters.

We feel confident, and have demonstrated same, that our awareness of the problems of education and the mechanisms to deal with them are relevant, substantive and contemporary. We petition you also because you have long performed services on our behalf and made decisions and judgments on our behalf. We, therefore, feel we not only are capable of assuming those roles, but more importantly, we compliment your effectiveness and make real that dimension so beautifully set to prose: the best education for our children. We realize that this request is unique. It is also unprecedented, and we expect to earn our credibility, for we are the future adults and leaders of our community, and that recognition will always be in front of us.

On the other hand, we expect to profit from your experiences under your protective umbrella, and we beg the issue of responsibility and cooperation. This milestone will be replicated all over America, and both of us, through M.C.P.B. and S.M.A.R.T., will have bridged the gap between students and adult, between community agencies and community, between rhetoric and pragmatism. We stand ready to assist in the educational development of our community.

Where stand you?

Editorial Points

Mr. Dooley (a famous piece of 1920's Americana) was speaking on our country's enthusiasm for war: "Th' enthusyasm iv this counthry, Hinnissy, always makes me think iv a bonfire on an ice-floe. It burns bright so long as ye feed it, an it looks good, but it don't take hold, somehow, on th' ice."

Give It To Belchertown

To The Editor:
Not to doubt the sincerity of Charles Davignon but there already exists a very high budget on Campus for such maintenance, upkeep and repair that he is suggesting the Commuter Assembly Fund for pot holes and mud in parking lots on campus. Furthermore does Davignon suggest that the commuter assembly money be used to repair campus roads? He certainly does. This is almost as good an idea as building another coffee shop or additional locker facilities for commuters. I, in six years as a student and four years as a commuter have never once used a commuter locker on campus. While I write this letter I cannot help but think that I would like to have funded the necessary amount of cold patch to cover up Davignon in one of his brilliantly observed and well documented pot holes. Do some homework next time. Old Boy, you have missed the point. Such things as mud, pot holes, and sand or stone or whatever in parking lots is already under the archdiocese of the Physical Plant. I believe if Charles Davignon directed his specific pot hole grievance to Mr. Ken Billings of the physical plant action on the specific pot holes in mind would be taken. By the way Davignon another suitable remedy for you may be to lock you in "G" building at Belchertown State School in the capacity of an attendant for at least a week and then examine your feelings on the Massachusetts Mental Health situation and specifically the condition of our state run institutions. I am sure for the 1st time in your life you may be concerned. Where is your sense of charity, humanity, compassion? I am not suggesting that the commuter assembly donate a gross sum to the law suit against the state of Massachusetts, however, a considerable donation would be put to good use and much appreciated in the long run by all concerned with crisis at hand.

On behalf of Residents of B.S.S. and Parent Friends Assoc.

Get Your Rationales In

To All RSO Groups and Potential RSO Groups:
We are attempting to contact everyone by telephone, but want to make sure that all groups are informed that they must submit their rationale for their group as soon as possible in order to present their group before the Budgets Committee for funding.

Groups are being taken on a "first come, first serve" basis; so it is to your advantage to submit your rationale immediately. Please leave your rationale, and a telephone number where you can be reached, in my Senate box as soon as possible. If you have any questions, I can be reached at 545-2145.

Time is of the essence.

Slow Boil Over Fees

To The Editor:
Over the past semester, my first at UMass, I have been reaching a slow boil over the incredible cost of student fees. After the initial shock of having to pay more in fees than tuition, I decided to keep an eye on how that money is spent. And the more I learn, the madder I get. Like over an athletic fee that buys me tickets to sports events I have neither the time nor interest to attend. And in the unlikely event I ever do go to a game, I guarantee I will root against UMass--I don't like people who take my money against my will. Considering their method of financing, it would have been more appropriate to rename the football team the UMass Looters, instead of the Minutemen.

But the Student Activities Fee is worse. Why should we be forced to pay for "activities" we may or may not be interested in? I came here to learn engineering, not to help finance every idiotic scheme and activity whose authors have enough pull to get their hands into my pockets with their own little compulsory fee. I resent the fact that my money is taken to fund everything from free politicized birth control pamphlets to blantantly racist groups like the Afro-American Society to drug counseling to sports clubs and radio stations. I resent the fact that I am paying for free office space for organizations such as the Young Socialist Alliance, the Student Homophile League, and similar collections of warped mentalities, not to mention covering the losses of half a dozen publications unable to get by on their own merits. Meanwhile I'm working three shifts every weekend, just to survive financially.

This is supposedly a university, not an amusement park with assorted side shows. Then why are the side shows costing me more than my education? I don't need all that junk, but I do need the money for food, rent, and tuition. In one year here I'll pay more in fees than I did in four years at two other colleges. And yet when the Philadelphia Orchestra comes to campus I still have to pay $2.50 to hear them. It's insane.

Then there's the Campus Center. For $60 -- or more -- a year, I can do without the Campus Center. Given the choice, I'd gladly keep my money, and so, I think, would most other students. What need is there for the University to enter the hotel and department store business -- particularly at a loss to be paid for by students? And they say there is a shortage of financial aid funds! I wonder why? The solution is obvious -- sell the Campus Center, and let the buyer worry about the bills. Even a sale at a loss would be preferable to making generations of students pay for someone's stupid policy mistakes and incompetence at management.

Let those who have the time and money for the sideshows cover their own expenses. And let those who don't go their own way unimpeded by extra costs they derive no benefit from. Abolish the Student Activities Fee. Abolish the Fine Arts Fee. Abolish the Athletic Fee and the Campus Center Fee. Cut back, abolish, or make voluntary any other fees to the greatest extent possible. And keep your hands in your own pockets from now on.

Liberalizing

To The Editor:

We would like to compliment Robert Medeiros for his November 28th story, in the Collegian, dealing with Mr. F. Lee Bailey's lecture at the Public Health building. The article was not like actually having been there to hear the lecturer, considering that Mr. Bailey is one of the foremost personalities in the field of law today. However, it was better than nothing.

We can be more than assured that Mr. Bailey would have attracted the "large influx of students" that the R.O.T.C. spokesman appeared to be worried about. It can be equally assured that Mr. Bailey's lecture, about reforms and the Uniform Code of Military Justice, had a "liberalizing effect" on the "fledgling lieutenents" or "glorified enlisted men" (take your pick of terms), and is one more aspect of the cadet's education that will make him a more mellow person when he pushes troops in Basic Training.

If we could all just take our minds on a little trip, then maybe we can all remember last spring, when the R.O.T.C. building was occupied and students made a bid to remove that facility from our campus community. The main objection from R.O.T.C. spokesmen at that time, was that training in a college environment had a "liberalizing effect" on our nations armed forces. His seems to us to be an outright contradiction and a perfect example of the military's double standards policy. In the military, officers are elitists, and they are trained to be just that. It seems to us that if the Reserve Officer Cadets at our school intend to change this situation, then they are going about it in the wrong manner. If to bring a man of Mr. Bailey's position to this campus and hide him for their own use is not an elitist maneuver, then what may we ask is it? Would it have been too much to ask for a larger room?

We feel that the person(s) in charge of running the lecture owe an apology to the University community and we only hope that Mr. Bailey upon learning how he was manipulated (possibly without real intent) is not insulted.

Tackeff Comics

To The Editor:

If one were to read through the maze of editorials that appeared in Wednesday's, November 22, Daily Collegian, he might arrive at this general conclusion as to the action that took place in the Collegian office on November 20.

It was a confrontation between proverbial "Third World" practioners of the art of "mau-mauing" (the cruder forms of which are used in the pursuit of Orwellian dreams by goons and gangsters) and white middle class, knee-jerk liberals who adhere to fashionable doctrines of liberalism and equality that are often shrouded in some far off land called racism. The spokeswomen for the Third World might be Maria Toughshit and the spokesman for the knee-jerks might be Jim Gold (quasi liberal, good guy, and a man with the unfortunate problem of only being able to see the truth through shotgun glasses). To add class to the situation, we are given a conservative superman, white and riding high on a Kryptonian carpet of traditionalism as the answer to present day dilemmas and savior from the dreaded disease "backbonus jellyfishus". The superman character comes to us by way of Tackeff comic books.

It is unfortunate that the readers of the issue were subject to the distortion of the fact without substantive thought of reasoning behind them. The problem which they sought to analyze go much deeper than the confrontation in a newspaper office. It involves institutional racism in its worst form, the ignoring of the existence of one people by another. Why would a people, Black people, be willing to risk so much for a few lines of newsprint? Is the situation of racism prevalent in Collegian reporting of events sensitive to Black people or were the Black people stepping out of line again. Are Whites so ignorant of themselves and their disease called racism that Black must riot in order to receive equal representation in a newspaper that they help fund?

If the purpose of our editorialist were to distort situations, so as to prejudice the readers thereby maintaining our decadent status quo, then they were successful. If the purpose of our editorialist were to offer a positive answer to the situation, analyze it and give more than past generation rhetoric as a solutic .. to present day problems of overt racism, then they have failed miserably.

It Can Happen Here

To The Editor:

On Monday, November 27, four White students were shot by a Black student wielding a gun in a high school in Pontiac Michigan. The story received little attention in both the Boston Globe and the Record-Traveler. The Daily Collegian failed to mention this "obscure" incident completely. Related to Rochelle Chandler's claim that only the shooting of Black students is ignored by a "racist" National media, we wish to cite this as evidence to the contrary.

Shouldn't we concern ourselves with the fact that guns and shootings have no place on any campus, without obscuring the issue by trying to pin the badge of racism solely on one party or another.

Sensationalism!

To The Editor:

The Daily Collegian professes to be a free and responsible press; it says so each day at the top of the front page. However the reader begins to question this statement when he reads some of the articles that have appeared in recent issues.

One in particular was the Dining Commons "expose" by Mark Vogler. In responsible press such sensationalism, over-exaggeration of the facts, and uncorroborated accusations are inexcusable.

Furthermore, the put-down of Joel Stoneham's request for public apologies to involved Dining Commons personnel, which was written up in Tuesday's editorial page, is further example of immaturity on the part of the Collegian. One may not agree with Dining Commons policy on campus but Mr. Stoneham's request was a valid one, for which he was accused, in essence, of farting in the wind.

So to you, my friends on the Collegian and Mr. Vogler in particular, I suggest that some forethought be used in the future before any more such ridiculous newsreporting is seen in your paper. Lest the word "RESPONSIBLE" be deleted from your letterhead and you lose your news-credibility altogether.

An Old-Fashion Contest!

$25 gift certificate to the winner

We're looking for a new name for the University Store. In an article, which will appear in Monday's issue, it is evident that most students feel the University owns the store. Our present name certainly helps maintain that falsehood. Thus, we are asking for students to submit names that reflect the relationship that exists between the store and the students.

Entry blanks and box will be found at the University Store. The contest will run until Sat., Dec. 9. The name will be chosen from the entries by a committee made up of Board of Governors, members and the staff of the Store. The winner will receive a gift certificate for $25.00 worth of merchandise at the store.

Schlitz-A-Rama Tomorrow For March Of Dimes

By EDWARD DOHERTY

Tomorrow Phi Sigma Kappa Fraternity, in association with the Schlitz Brewing Co. and the March of Dimes, will present the first annual Schlitz-a-Rama. Thomas Schortmann, co-ordinator of the program, said the day's activities are varied enough to interest almost everybody. Highlighting the day will be the final voting and crowning in the Schlitz Royalty Contest.

"Everything will get under way at noontime," according to Schortmann, "and will continue until after the crowning that evening," contests, competitions, and giveaways will continue for the entire day, he said. Some of the diverse activities include a chess match between a member of the Chess club and eight challengers. A live bull, representing Schlitz Malt Liquor will be displayed in the afternoon, challenging people to guess his correct weight for prizes.

Signs, posters, buttons, shirts, towels, mugs, and pictures will be given away by Schlitz, and several other prizes will be raffled off both in the afternoon and evening. Students are welcome to come down and compete in Pin-ball, wrist-wrestling, dancing, singing, drinking, and joke-telling for the various prizes.

Entertainment will be provided during the day by one of the area's finer groups "Rush." In addition both food and drink will be available throughout the program.

Sometime in the evening the winner in the Schlitz Royalty Contest will be crowned. Yesterday and today voting is taking place in the Campus Center Complex with one cent equalling one vote. The final voting will take place Saturday at the Schlitz-a-Rama. The candidate with the most votes will be crowned, with all proceeds going to the March of Dimes.

The five finalists, as selected by a panel of judges including administrators and businessmen, are as follows: Thea Puzurchek, a sophomore Theatre major, nominated by Chi Omega; Donna Whittier, a senior majoring in Dance, from Kappa Kappa Gamma; Sandi Reed, nominated by Iota Gamma Upsilon, who is also a senior and a Nursing Major; another Nursing major, nominated by Sigma Kappa is Deechi Cody, a senior; and Debbie Bauxar, a junior Anthropology major from Sigma Delta Tau.

"By dropping change into the cups beneath their photographs anyone can vote for their favorite candidate, and at the same time help a worthy cause, the March of Dimes, concluded Schortmann, "and I hope people enable us to reach our goal of several hundred dollars by helping their candidate to come out on top."

Boone Asks Police For Cooperation

WEST BOYLSTON, Mass. (AP)–Correction Commissioner John O. Boone urged police chiefs yesterday to cooperate with his department in implementing prison reform and helping ex-inmates adjust when they return to their communities.

Boone spoke to about 150 police chiefs at the monthly meeting of the Massachusetts Chiefs of Police Association.

Boone attempted to reconcile what he described as "some misunderstandings" between police attempts at enforcement and reform measures that seem to contradict police efforts.

"Recently we have not been doing a very good job," he said. "It was a source of embarrassment to us and you when we left a window open a few days ago." Boone was referring to a mass prison break last week at the Concord state prison.

Former Tass Chief Dies In Vermont

NEW YORK (AP)–Kenneth Durant, the first United States Bureau chief of Tass, the Soviet news agency, died Wednesday night in the Townshend, Vt., Hospital, Tass announced here. Durant was 83.

He served as first U.S. correspondent and manager of the Tass operation from 1923 when Tass opened its American office until his retirement to Vermont in 1945.

Durant was born in Philadelphia on Oct. 9, 1889. He was graduated from Harvard and worked for a time as a newspaperman. His interest in the Soviet Union began, Tass said, because his father, Frederick Clarke Durant helped build the railroad between Moscow and St. Petersburg.

According to Tass, during World War I, Durant worked for the equivalent of the U.S. government information agency and in that capacity went abroad in connection with the signing of the peace treaty at Versailles.

Job Bank Established

The Veterans Affairs Office is currently establishing a job bank for veterans. The program will include the recruiting of employers and employees. It will only deal with part-time employment.

As of Wednesday, November 29, 1972, a member from the Veterans Affairs Office has approached different employers in the area. If interest is shown by the employer, the Veterans Office will select possible candidates for the job.

The Veterans Office urges all veterans to come to Room 239, Whitmore Hall to fill out an application if they are interested in possible part-time employment.

FOOD INSURANCE

There is now an alternative available to commuters and others who do not possess board plans and who are tired of the standard snack bar bill of fare. The University Food Services Department is offering two five meal ticket plans to those who wish to eat at one of the dining commons for a change of pace, or as a convenience. We refer to these plans as our Insurance policies because they insure you against the loss of your valuable time and money during your stay on campus.

The first plan provides you with five lunch tickets which may be redeemed at any of the dining commons at any time during the semester. This plan insures you against the loss of your noon hour, which somehow seems to be squeezed out of existence by morning and afternoon classes. For commuter this means staying on campus rather than traveling home for lunch. For others, it means a short walk from most any place on campus to one of the dining commons. The end result is more time for you to relax between classes.

The second plan provides you with five dinner meal tickets which also may be used in any of the dining commons at any time during the semester. This plan insure you against having to leave the campus for dinner and return for an evening class, study at the library, or a social event. It allows you to dine on campus, thus eliminating the hassle of washing pots and pans. Either plan makes it a simple deal to eat with a friend who has a meal ticket, or to forego with winter ordeal of slogging across acres of slush and snow.

The cost of the lunch plan is $6.75, while the dinner plan is $9.25. Two factors make these plans a good buy. First, you are saving substantially over the cost of five individually purchased meals. Secondly, you are acquiring excellent reserve protection against an uncertain future. By investing your money now in one of these plans you assure yourself of a meal some weeks from now when your pockets may be empty. Both plans are available at the main office of the University Food Service Department located in Worcester dining commons. Whether you choose to look at it in terms of time or money, you're going to save.

UMass Debate Union Does Well In Tournies

By ED PEPYNE

The Debate Union continues to prove UMass a national debate power. UMass debate teams have continued to extend their excellent early season record by compiling impressive results at national tournaments in both varsity and novice competition.

Last weekend UMass debaters came home with an octo-finalist cup from the Dixie Classic at Wake Forrest. UMass also had undefeated records at both Vermont and Southern Connecticut and a highly respectable record by a telented young team at Pace College.

Terry Hoffman and David McCaffery, two of the best varsity debaters at UMass and in the East, travelled to Wake Forrest in North Carolina to test their talent at the Dixie Classic. After eight preliminary rounds of debate they achieved a 7-1 record and going into the elimination rounds UMass was seeded third out of 76 teams.

In the preliminary rounds Terry and Dave beat Emory, Redlands, Bowling Green, Richmond, Southeast Oklahoma, Northern Illinois, and William & Mary while losing only to Northern Iowa.

Terry and Dave got a tough break in the elimination rounds when UMass was pitted against Redlands. UMass had already beaten one team from Redlands in the preliminary rounds on the affirmative. In the octafinals Terry and Dave again saw a Redlands team on the affirmative. This gave Redlands a decided advantage and the result was a decision for the California school.

At the University of Vermont, UMass novice debaters dominated the competition. Two outstanding novices from UMass, Anne Desfosses and Tom Rosiello, were undefeated having a 6-0 record. Accompanying Anne and Tom at Vermont were two other novice teams of Jerry Johnson and Leslie Leicht who went 4-2 and Steve Altobelli and Lou Eichelberger who also went 4-2.

Southern Connecticut State College also saw a UMass novice team go undefeated. John Adams and Steve Altobelli received the third place trophy for their division after compiling a 6-0 record. Also at Southern Connecticut UMass novice Bill Worden won the first place speaker award for his division.

UMass sent two talented novices to compete in their first varsity competition at the Pace College Tournament. Ronnie Arnold and Judy Mark are only first semester freshmen, but they have already shown that they can hold their own on the varsity circuit.

Ronnie and Judy had a 3-3 record beating Alfred, New Hampshire, and St. John's while losing to Columbia, Merchant Marines, and Scranton. The accomplishments of Judy and Ronnie at Pace College and the impressive performances of UMass teams at Southern Connecticut, Vermont, and the Dixie Classic, gives UMass high hopes for continued success.

Going Abroad?

One or two UMass students have an opportunity to live with a Cakchiquel Indian family in Guatemala, and to work and study independently during the Winter-Spring of 1973. Through a program administered jointly by the School for International Training (Brattleboro, Vermont) and Dr. Carroll Behrhorst of Chimaltenango, Guatemala, a student can study either Spanish or Cakchiquel for six weeks and then live with a family in the highlands of Chimaltenango, Guatemala.

During the family stay, the student can get to learn about one of the handicraft skills of the Cakchiquels or can pursue some other line of work or study according to his or her particular interest.

The program begins with language training in Antigua, Guatemala on January 15. It is designed to provide 15 semester credits to U.S. college or university students. If you should like further information contact Prof. Mike Best, Economics, ext. 5-0850 or call Ms. Mary Burdick, who accompanied the group in 1972 at the School for International Training, Brattleboro, Vermont, telephone number 802-257-7751.

Snow Parking Rules In Effect Today

The major objective of snow removal activities at times of severe storms is to make it possible to hold classes and conduct all University activities in as normal a way as possible. In order to facilitate snow removal, parking will be prohibited in the following lots between the hours of 1 a.m. and 7 a.m., from December 1 to April 1, as provided for in the Motor Vehicle Regulations Manual approved by the Board of Trustees:

Lot #1, #2, #4, #5, #6, #11, #12, #13, #14, #N.

Overnight parking will continue to be available in lots other than those listed.

Since the plan described above provides for only a little more than half of the parking spaces used on a normal day, it is suggested that all persons who normally bring a car onto campus consider the following possibilities during heavy snow:

a. Pool rides with others whenever possible.
b. Walk if it is at all possible to do so.
c. Have someone drop you off so that the car does not have to be left on campus and so that the snow removal job during daylight hours is facilitated.
d. If space is not available in your assigned lot, go to one of the other lots listed because under such emergency conditions, it is not possible to guarantee that normally assigned space will be available.
e. Make use of the Campus Center garage (open 24 hours a day).
f. Make use of the new bus service to the campus to be initiated this winter under the Department of Transportation grant.

The Town of Amherst ban on overnight street parking also goes into effect December 1 through April 1 from 2 a.m. to 8 a.m. on all public streets. Overnight parking is permitted in the Lincoln St., Pray St. and Amity St. Parking Lots until 9 a.m. during this period.

Gymnasts Travel to Durham for Opener Against UNH

By JOHN CALABRIA
and
JAMES R. BELTZ
MDC Staff

Tomorrow the Men's Varsity Gymnastics Squad will test their mettle in the season's first meet against New Hampshire. Coach Tom Dunn anticipates a quality performance, hopefully breaking the team score of 150.

Representing UMass in the All-around will be veteran co-captain Steve Scuderi, sophomore Gene Whalen, and senior Dan Spier. These three men form the nucleus of the squad, and as such will be expected to bolster the team score with well-executed routines.

Competing in Floor Exercise will be Jack Berner, senior and seasoned floor exercise performer, and junior Jay Thomsen.

On Side Horse senior Steve Nelson and junior Rich Seikunas will do battle with the four-legged "beast". Other hopefuls for this event are junior Brian Hassig and Roy Johnson.

UMass is represented on Still Rings by senior co-captain and E.I.G.L. finalist Jay Aronstein and Dan Spier, also an E.I.G.L. finalist.

Junior Jay Thomsen will highlight the Long Horse Vaulting, while the battle for second specialist spot will be contested by sophomores Roy Johnson and Jack Fabbricante.

In the specialist position on Parallel Bars junior Rich Seikunas and sophomore Bill Brouillet will compete for UMass. Also in close competition in this event are sophomore Tim Beasley and senior Phil Aubrey. Phil, a stylish specialist on the p-bars, will compete in the All-around for UMass in future meets.

One of the more spectacular events, the High Bar, gives Phil Aubrey and either Earl Roy or Bill Brouillet a chance to "do their thing".

Although the University of New Hampshire is not as strong an opponent as some of the other league teams, they will hopefully provide the necessary stimulus to begin a winning season. If UMass does well in this meet, it will be indicative of their ability to perform adequately under more stringent competition. In addition, this will show that the University of Massachusetts Gymnastics Team is a power to be reckoned with in the Eastern league.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

A study of religion and philosophy without astrology would be like a survey of modern art without including Picasso.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Partnerships are subject to radical change. Publicity accompanies efforts. Accent is on marriage, how you relate to others. Don't force issues. Permit those who mean something to you to have their say.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You need more rest. Stop brooding about what might have been. Devote energies to future prospects. One in authority may want to revise basic procedures. Be co-operative. Check agreements for possible loophole.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Romantic interests are spotlighted. Changes occur and they are rapid. Key is to maintain balance. Don't promise more than you can deliver. Older individual may try to pull brakes on progress.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You can reach more people. Advertise and publicize. What was a roadblock will be removed. Sale of property is favored. You obtain more information about values, costs and potential. Aries may be in picture.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Present ideas, plans, format. You could reach profitable agreement with one who appreciates your unique talents. Key is to be flexible. Show that you are articulate. Express yourself. Get concept on paper.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Money situation fluctuates. Persons who depend on you may make extravagant requests. Realize need for your own protection. Don't give up valuables on demand. Live your own life despite family pressures.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You have dynamic appeal now, especially where opposite sex is concerned. Socialize-encourage new contacts and concepts. Forces are scattered and you are here, there and everywhere. This is time to enjoy yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You may not be receiving full or accurate story in connection with property settlement, prices, estimates. Key is to insist on accounting. Become aware of details. Don't delegate too many duties.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friends do and say unusual things. Element of excitement exists. Some of your desires are fulfilled in unorthodox manner. Welcome chance for change, travel, variety of experiences. Gemini, Virgo persons are in picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You get aid in career aspirations. Room is made for you in more authoritative position. This comes about because you present unique concept, idea. Obviously, this is the time to express views in positive manner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Good lunar aspect now coincides with journey, higher education, special study, unusual correspondence. Look beneath surface indications. Someone who has been hiding true feelings may make confession.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Past efforts are apt now to pay dividends. Includes investments, professional and personal contacts. Doors previously closed will open. You have allies who make themselves known. You can deal from position of strength.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY this should be one of your most significant months of the year. In 1973, indications are that you will be more comfortable, especially where home life is concerned. You are an original thinker, frank and capable of expressing your ideas. If single, marriage is on horizon.

U.S. Trio Move into Tennis Semifinals

BARCELONA, Spain (AP)--Americans Stan Smith, Jimmy Connors and Tom Gorman advanced to semifinals of the Commercial Union Masters Tennis Tournament Thursday night.

Romanian Ilie Nastase with one match to play in the qualifying round robin was almost certain to join them.

Smith scored one of the most decisive victories of his career a 6-1, 6-0 thrashing of Jan Kodes of Czechoslovakia.

Connors outlasted Andres Gimeno of Spain 6-3, 6-7, and Gorman beat Bob Hewitt of South Africa 6-4, 6-2.

Smith finished No. 1 in Group B of the round robin, with Connors second. Gorman qualified in Group A.

Smith was devastating against Kodes, hardly making an error throughout the match's 44 minutes.

"It was probably the nearest I have ever come to playing a perfect match against a good opponent," he said.

Connors, the 20-year-old lefthander from Belleville, Ill., wore down Gimeno. The 35-year-old Spaniard, after tying at one set apiece and winning a tie breaker, led 2-0 in the final set before tiring.

Gorman, the Davis cupper from Seattle, Wash., never was in danger against Hewitt. The South African was erratic against Gorman's powerful strokes.

Hewitt matched Gorman service for service until deuce in the 10th game, when he wilted under pressure and made two bad errors, losing the set.

Boston Garden Like New Compared to the Arena

By MARTY KELLEY

Combat Zone II–There was no snow on the Boston Streets to greet the advent of December. Students kept poking their heads outside their Northeastern Library windows to the waiting crackle of rubble-filled city streets. And although the Boston Arena has meant much to this hockey-crazed town, it just didn't seem that the Beantown and the aura of its famed Arena was quite ready at midweek to open its arms between the spread of the lurking danger of the city streets of nearby Roxbury to welcome UMass hockey.

Yes, it was a precarious start for the rinkless, low budgeted, defending champs of Division II who easily, but without that Christmas polish, subdued the Warriors of the nearby Boston schoolyard.

But the Boston Arena had seen better days and has been enjoyed by many more in its ageless, 70 year New England Sports reign. And yes, the Arena has been caught up in event and time. Although paint has added to her countenance, still the rubbled luster of traditionalism has given her balconies a look of loneliness and despair as time travels and seems to pass her by.

Yes, you can tell the Arena has weathered one too many a storm. The broken windows, the fence gate locking in the writers, the leakage, the paper designs form coke, beer, and hotdog placements gave her an unhealthy, unswept air. And the urban renewal and the lost garbage cluttering the streets and the low strata tenement housing on the periphery only helped to scare ticket holders away. And it seems that no matter what hour you braved the challenge of the city street, it always seemed like midnight.

But the Boston Arena has seen sunnier days. Before age curdled its walls, it was the very first home of the Boston Celtics. Its capacity of 6,500 probably had its best hour when actor-athlete Chuck Connors (better known for his work as "The Rifleman" than for his efforts with the Celts) held up the very first basketball game for at least an hour and a half after having torn down the backboard with a jam. That was quite symbolic of the overall strength and firmness of the Arena.

And yes, the Bruins had their tenure at the Arena. And as Bill Ballou told me on the spot, a team of a lesser enterprise did their dirty work there. Operating out of the Eastern Amateur League, they called themselves the Boston Olympics. You figure Ballou could come up with that stat.

And supposedly every young hockey upstart from any dimension within 20 miles has started and in some cases ended his career there. And when a college attraction came to town as the Minutemen did, if you looked hard you could see one time UMass icemen Bob Bartholomew and Al Nickerson around for the celebration.

But the fact that boxing and Pabst Beer pervaded the Arena in years gone by excited me. Here was the last outpost for many frustrated journeymen in sport who either punched their way to street fame or had it before they got to the Arena. And under the mock picture of boxers of old stood three former ones (I'll swear to that) who may just ride out their Arena career selling 35¢ hotdogs. But I do ask you, where else in this high- priced mecca of sport can you get such a buy on a "bowser". (Again I felt I was leaving an era. I'm sure the UMass cheerleaders didn't get the same impressions. The little darlings must have felt confined to a morgue as they stood against the Arena backdrop and cheered to no one from the top of the balcony. But they looked the part anyway.

And as Mr. Hockey and I strolled off into the murk and the city stench, Mr. Ballou was quite observant of a trio of shifty looking characters less than 20 yards ahead of us. Said Bill, "Like dogs, if they smell you're nervous, they'll attack. Let's walk slow". And as I glanced at the outward expression of city pestilence above and beyond me, I knew Bill was right.

So on we journeyed, less courageously, to Punter's Pub, the home of all Boston Collegiate hockey players before and after the games. And as I listened I could pick up a bit of the social reaction.

"I played against that Erickson when I was in high school and he was damn tough then". Well, Mr. Boston State Warrior, he was damn tough that night at the Arena. And so was this kid named Ellis, but, outside of that, Jack Canniff will have to weather a long weekend in Catamount country.

But a pal of mine, John Caccomo from Belmont (who beat Erickson with the only goal), was there and so was his roommate, Doug Brooks, who did set a record with a sterling 50 saves against a punchy UMass sextet.

Although Brooks doesn't know the half of the battle of the UMass hockey program, he did, after a few Buds, spill out the problems of the Warrior hockey package.

"It's a commuter school", admitted Doug. "Once kids get to campus they stay here but rarely do they come back after supper. Athletics here is a cooperative venture. The hoop team supports us and we help them. Our best gate day is a Boy Scout Day when we fill this place with Scouts from all over Boston". Good times once again at the Boston Arena.

So we cleared our ills with a quick visit to Emmanuel College and, before you knew it, Rt. 9 and the start of the UMass hockey season was synonymous once again. And maybe things will be quite different tonight down there in Morgantown, West Va., and Boston isn't the only city in the nation with its proud Arena.

Although Boston wasn't quite ready for hockey, and, for that matter neither were the Canniffs, and, although Chuck Connors and the dangerous surroundings outside her decaying walls haven't helped, the winner of Wednesday's major brawl had to be the archaic Boston Arena, and its coming back for the count.

B's Edge Sabres on Marcotte Goal

BOSTON (AP) — Don Marcotte took a pass from Bobby Orr with 2:10 remaining and flipped a backhander past Buffalo goalie Roger Crozier Thursday to give the Boston Bruins a 5-4 National Hockey League victory

Two minutes earlier, Johnny Bucyk scored his 10th goal of the season to tie the score 4-4 for the Bruins, who extended their unbeaten string to eight games.

Marcotte's deciding goal overshadowed a two-goal and two-assist performance by Orr, the spectacular defenseman who recently returned after extended treatment for a knee ailment. Orr's goals were his seventh and eighth of the season.

The game was tied 2-2 going into the final period. In the third minute, Orr slammed a 55-foot unassisted goal past Crozier.

Buffalo came back on Larry Hillman's goal at 11:29 and two minutes later Rene Robert tallied his second goal of the night to give the Sabres a 4-3 lead.

Bucyk took a pass from Mike Walton at 15:30 and flipped the puck into the left corner to tie the count.

Orr opened the scoring at 12:10 in the first period with a long slap shot on a power play. Ken Hodge, assisted by Orr, tallied his 10th goal in the second period.

Joe Willie Troubled

NEW YORK (AP) - Has Joe Namath lost his old zip or is he just getting conservative in his old age?

"I admit I'm having trouble," the dreamy-eyed, 29-year-old quarterback of the New York Jets admitted as the team prepared for Sunday's National Football League battle with New Orleans at Shea Stadium.

Surprisingly, Broadway Joe's confession of troubles with his once fabled passing wizardry drew echoes from among his teammates and the Jets' head coach, Weeb Ewbank.

"He's not the same quarterback," one Jet who preferred not to be identified said. "When he's in doubt now, he goes long. The good quarterbacks, like Norm Snead, are all pickers." Ewbank agreed.

"I don't think anybody can lay off a couple of years and come back and have the same touch," argued the headmaster of the Jets. "And, don't forget, other than Don Maynard, he's got three new receivers."

It has become a bit strange to hear excuses for the man who has been rated one of the most astute quarterbacks and dead-eye passers in the history of the National Football League.

Yet many critics were disappointed in Namath's apparent timidity in last week's 37-20 loss to the Detroit Lions, the Jets' fifth setback in 11 games. He called running plays in situations that cried for daring.

One of the most obvious came on a third down with eight yards to go and the Lions leading 17-7. One of Namath's rifle passes seemed to be called for. Instead, he called a draw play, which failed.

Ewbank defended the call. "They were laying back," the coach said. "Fifteen-yard sideline passes wouldn't help. If we'd made it everyone would have been talking about what a great call it was."

Although Namath leads the American Conference in passing yardage with 2,154 yards, his production hasn't been phenomenal since the early season 496-yard explosion against Baltimore.

Special Rates Available in "Boardwalk Bowl" Hotels

By BILL BALLOU

With the Boardwalk Bowl looming closer the Athletic Department is proceeding with plans to make it as easy as possible for anyone who wants to go to buy tickets.

The Bowl tickets, which are $2, $4, or $6, are on sale at the Boyden ticket office until 8 p.m. tonight and will be available Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The ticket office will also be open Sunday from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Ticket office hourse on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of next week are from 8:30 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. There will be no tickets sold through the Boyden Ticket Office after 8:00 p.m. on Wednesday.

UMass has, for the moment, been allotted 5100 tickets, but Novak says if that supply runs out he will be able to get more within hours. There is not a bad seat in the Convention Center.

The Athletic Department also announced that the official UMass contingent in Atlantic City will be housed in the Holiday Inn right next to the Convention Center. The Holiday Inn is offering a special group rate for students. If there are three or more people in a room it will cost $6.00 per person. A double room is $14.00.

The Athletic Department will, through the Collegian and other media, publicize the best routes down to Atlantic City. They're also working on a way to make hotel reservations via the Springfield Holiday Inn.

This time of the year is the off-season for Atlantic City so it shouldn't be too difficult to get good accomodations and find good places to eat.

At 177 veteran Chris Cadwallader will be giving up about twenty pounds in order to stabilize that weight class. His spot at 158 will be ably filled by Cliff Blom, a tough Frosh from Long Island.

The rest of the lineup has Larry Reynolds at 126, Mike McGlaughlin at 134, Steve Rome at 150, Steve Benson at 167, and George Ireland at Heavyweight.

Tough men in the Yale lineup will be Tim Karpoff, Eastern runnerup at heavyweight and the Captain of the team, and Pete Spendlow, third in the East at 150.

All the talk is about Yale, yet UConn is also in the picture but sort of blurred. The truth is that the Huskies are less than competition for the Minutemen. In two outings against UMass last year they won a total of five bouts out of twenty.

Everyone likes to beat an Ivy League team, but a win over the champs of the League could go far in motivating the grapplers for the rest of the season.

The setting will be quite different for the UMass gridders a week from tomorrow when they wrap up their season with an indoor tilt in Atlantic City's Convention Hall against UCal at Davis. (MDC Photo by Steve Smith).

Hoopsters Open Tomorrow At W. Va.

By EARLE BARROLL

Is a basketball victory over West Virginia more important to UMass than a football victory over Boston College? I'll take the fifth and you can decide for yourself.

But whatever you come up with there is one thing that is perfectly clear: When a team steps out of New England and starts associating with the likes of a West Virginia the label of "big time" is just around the corner.

"I believe that a big thing in athletics is competition", says head basketball coach Jack Leaman. "This is something that UMass needs. We have big league fans here and they need this type of competition."

OK, fans. You got it. Tomorrow night at Morgantown, West Virginia, the UMass basketball team will open it's season against a major eastern independent, the University of West Virginia Mountaineers. (Game time is 8 p.m.).

Outside of the fact that this will be the season opener for both squads, there are only a couple of other certainties that surround this game:

First, in no way, shape or form can Julius Erving possibly be in a UMass uniform. As a matter of fact, the Virginia Squires keep asking themselves night to night if he's going to be in one of their uniforms.

Second, the last varsity basketball game that Jack Leaman played for Boston University was against West Virginia in the finals of the Eastern Regionals of the N.C.A.A. tournament. The Terriers lost 86-82, ("They got a basket at the buzzer to make the margin four" – Leaman), but the guy who Leaman guarded was Jerry West. "He was so fast," he recalls, "that he could steal the ball from you, give it back, and take it away from you again."

As for this game "it will tell us what we can do and what we can't do", says Leaman. "We're just thrilled about going down and playing a West Virginia. They have a beautiful 14,000 seat arena and they're deep in basketball tradition with the likes of West and Hot Rod Hundley."

The arena Leaman is referring to hosted last year's Eastern Regionals. And if you've ever had dreams of having one at UMass, this is the one you dreamt of. On top of all this, the fans at West Virginia have gained a reputation for themselves:

Besides creating the atmosphere that is commonly termed a "zoo", they've added a new dimension to the chaos – throwing frisbees at the opposition. (Weighted or not???)

The Mountaineers as a team are in one word, physical. The front line is 6'8, 250; 6'7, 235; and 6'6, 215. The backcourt is around 6'4 and 6'5. "I've told my center Tom Austin, who's 6'9 and weighs 223 pounds not to get that 250 pounder mad, cause I certainly wasn't going to help him," Leaman was kidding yesterday at practice (or was he?).

Starting for the Minutemen will be senior captain Tom McLaughlin and sophomore John Murphy at the forwards, senior Charlie Peters at center and junior Al Skinner and sophomore Bill Endicott in the backcourt.

After last week's victorious scrimmage with Manhattan (79-71) Leaman's chief worry was the front court rebounding strength, however during this past week the guards "have gone a little bit flaky" according to Leaman.

But that's where the value of a strong bench comes in and UMass has just that in Rick Pitino, Jim Burke, Tom Gillams, Greg Duart, Peter Trow, Tom Austin and Chuck Olsen.

Oh, yeh. When questioned whether the West Virginia people would remember the exploits of one Jack Leaman, the head coach smiled and firmly stated: "No". OK, we believe you coach!!

Icemen Face UVM in Tough YanCon Tilt

By BILL BALLOU

It's a long way from Boston to Burlington, Vermont on the map, but it's even longer when you start talking Division II hockey. UMass is going to find out just how long it really is on Saturday night.

The Minutemen, inexperienced and shaky in Wednesday's 3-1 win over Boston State, can't expect to get away with what they did at the Boston Arena when they make the trip up to UVM's Gutterson Field House.

Gutterson Field House is the mecca of Div. II hockey in the East and the Vermont Catamounts are the Yankees–always tough and near the top of the standings.

Traditionally, UMass and UVM play some of the best hockey in the East when they meet and down through the annals of Div. II. There's been no series quite like this one.

Two years ago the Cats and the Redmen went at it tooth-and-nail in two regular season games and a playoff encounter with Vermont winning the two played up there and UMass taking the one at Orr Rink. All the games were one-goal affairs.

Last year the teams split a home-and-home set. UMass won the first game 4-3 in overtime in Burlington while Vermont took a 5-3 decision down here.

Vermont is going to be tough and there's no way you can fudge the fact that they're going to be heavy favorites. For one thing, they're guaranteed an audience of 4109 screaming (and I mean screaming) fanatics. You better believe it can make a difference.

And you can't forget that the Cats are going to figure they've got something to prove. They were the No. 1 seed in last year's playoffs and it looked for all the world as if the playoff final would be Vermont-UMass. Along came Buffalo to beat UVM and ruin things while the Redmen ended up with the title.

Talent? Vermont's got it in spades. Fred Hunt, the team's leading scorer last year with 21 goals and 28 assists is back as is Pat Wright, who racked up 13 goals and 31 assists in 20 games before injuring his knee late in the season. In fact the line-up is studded with returnees-22 to be exact.

The Cats are strong in goal with Steve Eckerson and John Kiley returning to continue last year's alternating goalie method which worked so well for coach Jim Cross in the late stages of the 71-72 campaign.

The Minutemen are going to have to have another performance like the Boston State one from Peter Erickson in goal or they're doomed against a team like this. People who saw the State game still can't get over the job done by Erickson. "Leif the Thief" held the whole thing together in the early going and when you've got as much youth on the ice as UMass does, you've got to have the goaltending. If Erickson can play consistently well like that, the Minutemen, who'll score goals, could have an awfully good year.

So, the young skaters face their first rough test under heavy enemy fire Saturday night. They've got to be rated as distinct underdogs.

In the locker room after the Boston State game one of the players told me "we're not this bad a hockey team. Be charitable."

Vermont is not going to be in the least bit charitable.

Wrestlers Open

By JOHN BOCK

When one says Ivy League to someone involved in UMass athletics visions of this year's drubbing of Harvard at football are immediately conjured.

The thing is that it is only of years in the not too distant past that UMass has been able to come up with anything that could even come close to an Ivy League team.

Three years ago, the then Redmen wrestlers met the Elis of Yale for the first time and emerged from the match tied at 17-17. Yale was still building.

Last year the grapplers were hosted at Yale and ended up on the short end 32-12. The same year Yale won the Ivy League title for the first time in ten years and finished sixth in the East.

This year the wrestlers want to bring the series to 1-1-1 as they open the season tomorrow at UConn against Yale and UConn.

The triangular meet is somewhat tough as all three teams involved wrestle twice in less than three hours.

Yale will meet the Minutemen first at 4:30, then go on against the Huskies immediately after. At 7:30 it will be UMass versus UConn for the feature match of the evening.

It is definitely Yale that the wrestlers have been thinking about the last few weeks and it is Yale they are ready for.

Co-captain Carl Dambman, who will wear the Red at 190 pounds, said, "I think we are physically ready for Yale. Nobody has been afraid to give up weight to help someone else out in practice and this has brought the team closer together. Now we have to be mentally ready."

Dave Amato, senior 118 pounder and also Co-captain, felt that "We are all going to have to wrestle tough against Yale. Some of our guys will be wrestling freshmen but they are really tough."

There are two small chinks in the otherwise solid lineup. Russ Chateauneuf, defending New England champ at 134 sustained a knee injury at the East Stroudsburg tournament and could be out for the rest of the semester. Filling in is Don Bergeron, a sophomore and runnerup in the New England Freshman Tourney at 134.

Rookie Linemates Helping B's

The Buffalo Sabres have, until now, been able to claim the brightest young pair of forwards around. Gil Perrault's was a tough act to follow two years ago, but the less-publicized Rick Martin more than followed it in the 1971-72 campaign.

But a year is like a decade in the sports world, and that twosome on Niagara Falls might even learn a few tricks from Terry O'Reilly and Greg Sheppard, two young Bruins who, only a year ago, were toiling in the minor leagues.

Not that jumping from the minor league ranks itself is any great accomplishment, least of all in the wake of more expansion and the WHA experiment. But it's compairing them to the old-line Bruin regulars that excites the Garden faithful.

Sheppard is probably the more surprising of the two, at least to the fans. Although his statistics at Oklahoma City last year were impressive (41 goals and 52 assists), the Central League naturally doesn't generate as much excitement and interest in the Hub as do O'Reilly's former teammates, the AHL Braves.

In any event, the 23-year-old Saskatchewan native has certainly found NHL company to his liking. The little center iceman has already broken into double figures in goal scoring with 11, and he's added eight assists to boot.

Sheppard's a tireless forechecker who seems to smell goals and can use his body with amazing effectivenss to notch them. Despite his size (5'8" and 164 lbs.), Sheppard's not an easy guy to push around in front of the net.

But what's really got them buzzing so far is his fancy stickwork. He faked a defenseman across Causeway Street and a goalie into the Charles in a game a week ago, and those two must still be wondering if they'll ever get them back. (If you didn't get that one, you weren't supposed to.)

O'Reilly's stats are less impressive (one goal and nine assists), but then compare them to last year when all he could muster in 60 AHL games were nine goals and eight assists. His stickhandling ability and hockey sense have come a long way in the space of a year, and, at 21, he's still learning.

Also, unlike Sheppard, O'Reilly's a scrapper as well as a skater. He grabbed 134 minutes in the penalty box with the Braves last year and leads the Bruins at this point with 46. If you want it first-hand, Frank Mahovlick could tell you all about Terry's prowess as a fighter. Maybe you don't win them in the box, but you don't win them on your back either. Besides, with Pie and Derek gone, there are plenty of penalty minutes to pass around to the newcomers.

So it's not only time to keep the cup, but time to grab another prize as well. Pre-Christmas optimism might become April's folly, but I think not. The Calder Trophy will return to Boston in the hands of either Greg Sheppard or Terry O'Reilly. And you'd have to give Don Marcotte an assist.

Weather

Extended five day forecast...the highs in the Amherst area during the next five days will number in the thousands, but it won't get hot.

Behind these steel bars lie the goods and wares in the Campus Center Store. The bars are up to protect the store from robbery. Do you think if the bars were taken down, students would steal from it anyway, knowing that their fees would rise to another astounding figure. Probably so, for the practice goes on practically every day. (MDC Photo by Marcia Lappin)

Ripoffs Continue To Plague C.C. Store

By CINDY GONET

"Perhaps we could have everyone strip before entering the bookstore, and that way we could deter the shoplifting just a little," suggested Student Attorney General, Bert Emmons, when questioned about the shoplifting problem in the University Store.

Emmons went on to say "the students should realize that they're just ripping themselves off. They're hurting no one but themselves, and if they're caught...The consequences are pretty embarassing and humiliating."

When a shoplifter is apprehended stealing merchandise, by one of the store detectives, he goes before the student judiciary. Students facing the board are usually found guilty. The penalty is either 3 times the value of the item or $5. The money collected goes into a fund whose fate has not yet been decided.

Emmons said that a potential shoplifter should see some of the students brought to him. They are usually humiliated and some resort to tears.

If a shoplifter gets apprehended a second time, he faces expulsion from the University. "The funny thing is," continued Emmons, "the item stolen is usually a 35-55¢ price range." These shoplifters steal mainly on whim, in other words they don't go specifically to the store to steal something.

Last year, 103 persons were caught. This semester there have already been 90 "arrests".

"No one takes it (shoplifting) seriously, but any profit generated by the store goes to reduce the student fees. There seems to be a lot of prejudices and preconceptions about the bookstore," continued Emmons.

Professor Len Bickman, of Smith College, recently completed a psychological survey on the bookstore. Bickman uncovered the attitude of students towards shoplifting and towards the store in general.

His surprising results revealed that 44.2%, a majority of the students interviewed believed the bookstore was owned by the University; 25% felt policy was set by the Administration. The profits from the University store were believed to go for operation costs of the University as a whole.

Bickman found that the majority of the replies were erroneous. In actuality, the store is part of the Campus Center complex, thus all income, deducting business expenses, is directed into the Campus Center operating fund. Students play an important part at this point by providing policy decisions through the Board of Governors. These board members are appointed by the Undergraduate and the Graduate Senates, and work closely with the management of the Campus Center.

Students provide another important input to the Campus Center complex as a financial subsidy by way of the Campus Center tax. The money-generating operations of the Campus Center, of which the University store is one, help hold this tax down by providing much of the monies needed for services and events for students as well as providing for the maintenance of the building and the payment of the bonds.

A very large portion of the customers at the University Store are students; thus making the student a powerful influence in all marketing decisions, especially in terms of price and quality.

Bickman was chosen to survey the store by the Student Senate at a cost of approximately $1800. Preliminary testing was completed in July and the survey was taken in September and October.

Bickman said that as a result of the survey, "We've gotten students' attitudes toward the store and toward shoplifting. We don't want a student police force, but shoplifting is the responsibility of all students."

Bickman went on to say that the problem may be remedied by any one of the following:

1. If, when a student sees another shoplifting, he should approach the shoplifter and tell him that is actually his store that he's stealing from.

2. Students that don't want to get directly involved should report the action to store personnel.

'Guild' To Enforce C.C. Rules

By BOB SCHEIER

A "Crafts Guild" formed by persons selling in the Campus Center was not meant to drive those selling manufactured goods out, says one of those involved in its formation, but merely in making sure present rules for selling at the tables are followed.

Under current rules, only hand-made goods may be sold in the Campus Center concourse, while manufactured goods may be sold elsewhere in the Campus Center-Student Union complex, on the same floor.

According to Martha Swartz, who sells jewelry at a table, the guild was formed because "there was no adequate way to check if students in the hand-made area were selling stuff they made themselves."

The guild proposal was brought to the Student Union-Campus Center Board of Governors last week, which delayed action on it.

One seller of manufactured goods in the Campus Center, Larry Singleton, said the g ..ld was an attempt to drive manufactured goods sellers out of the complex in the profitable pre-Christmas season.

"It had nothing to do with him," said Swartz. "We hadn't gotten to the question of changing the rules yet."

She said the guild would question some persons selling hand-made goods in the complex about the materials and methods they used, in an attempt to find if they did make the goods themselves.

The guild proposed to the board be made up of representatives of the tables in the complex, and would be able to oust a seller from the complex by a two-thirds negative vote.

Swartz agreed with a charge made by Singleton that some of those selling in the concourse (hand-made) area were selling manufactured goods.

The guild might also deal with such questions as how to prevent thefts from the tables, she said.

All decisions made by the guild would go to the full governing board for final review. A new board of governors is expected to meet for the first time this week, replacing an interim board which was formed following the reorganization of the old Student Union Governing Board by the student senate.

Singleton had also claimed he was harassed by some persons whom he declined to name, but said they were not craft sellers.

Swartz also denied a claim by Singleton that he had not been invited to a meeting aimed at organizing the craft guild.

"I was present when he was invited," she said.

Arguments over the aim of the guild and about the selling of manufactured goods as well as hand-made goods divided along racial lines, when the proposal was presented, with most of those supporting the hand-made goods being white, and most of those representing the manufactured-goods black.

Singleton, who is black, said the existing rules at the complex should be enforced instead of being changed.

Some of the hand-made goods advocates had said selling manufactured goods in the same area would cheapen the atmosphere and detract from the appearance of their goods.

Death At Belchertown Fourth In Two Weeks

By MARK VOGLER

Belchertown–A death of a Belchertown State School resident Saturday night, the fourth in the last two weeks at the institute for mentally retarded, has overlapped an investigation called by State Representative Alexander Lolas of Monson into the three earlier deaths.

Miss Rena Aubin, 23, of Springfield, died late Satruday night of what Medical Examiner Thomas E. Corriden of Northampton referred to as "spontaneous rupture of the stomach from massive food ingestion". Corriden reported an autopsy had been performed by John E. Greenburg, a pathologist at Cooley Dickinson Hospital, Sunday.

Corriden said the girl was away from the school with her mother from noontime Saturday until 7:00 p.m. Miss Aubin became ill at 9:30 and died before midnight.

According to Corriden, "the girl just ate too much, and the food was not properly chewed. But the personnel at Belchertown did as much as they could to save her."

Representative Lolas, in a letter addressed November 29, called for an investigation by Hampshire County District Attorney John Callahan into the three earlier deaths which occurred during a one week span last month.

Lolas, in his letter to Callahan, asked his office "to evaluate the ability of the Department of Mental Health to protect the lives and safety of more than 1,000 retarded residents of Belchertown School."

He referred to the three deaths and a near-tragic accident at the School last month and said "many anxious parents" will feel relieved if Callahan would assess conditions at the School.

Lolas, who is commissioner of a special investigation of Belchertown said the findings of the commission will be available next week.

Meanwhile, Dr. Benjamin Ricci of Amherst, President of the Belchertown State School Friends Association, said that "only at the prodding of the Friends Association did Commissioner Milton Greenblatt and the Department of Mental Health decide to respond."

Ricci said Attorney Richard Magri, representing the Department of Mental Health, came to the institution last Tuesday and "proceeded to antagonize the attendants."

"In my opinion, it was uncalled for," stated Ricci. "When you start intimidating people who are overworked at an institution which is undermanned, then you've started something. Things are breaking down over here and the Department of Mental Health still remains unmoved."

Representative Lolas said he was unaware of Magri's visit to Belchertown.

"I find it interesting that the Commissioner sent Magri up there. They have 492 administrators at 190 Portland Street, Boston, who are all getting good salaries. And I don't think you will find too many who have ever gone to Belchertown.

"But why did they send a lawyer up there? To protect the interests of the Department of Mental Health which is not functioning efficiently?"

After learning of reported intimidation by Magri of school attendants, Lolas said he was shocked.

"Good heavens! It's hard for me to believe this. I don't think they have any business doing this.

"For crying out loud! I don't know this for a fact, but I would certainly like to hear an attendant tell me this, and I will straighten it out."

CBS Cameramen Beaten, Broadcast Canceled

NEW YORK (AP) — The struck Columbia Broadcasting System television network said Sunday it cancelled its scheduled broadcast of the New York Jets-New Orleans Saints football game after five members of a non-union CBS camera crew were knocked down and beaten at Shea Stadium.

Several TV cables also were cut and power lines disconnected, the network said.

CBS fell short of blaming union members for the incident but said the destruction had taken place "in support" of the strike by network technicians.

None of the crew, made of management workers, was hospitalized.

CBS Broadcast Group President John A. Schneider said later:

"What happened at Shea Stadium this morning was barbarous and we are investigating what legal measures are open to us."

The Jets management meanwhile said it earlier had barred CBS from broadcasting the game for fear of a sympathy walkout by unionized stadium workers.

A spokesman for the Jets said the team management had told the network Sunday morning that it would not be allowed to carry the game because unionized ticket sellers, ushers, plumbers, electricians and other workers threatened to walk out over the presence of a non-union CBS crew there.

He said the network complied with the directive and removed its personnel from the stadium.

A CBS spokesman refused to comment on the Jets' claim that it had asked the network to cancel its coverage.

The team representative said the network had been informed about 11 a.m. of the difficulty with the stadium unions and had agreed not to broadcast the game. The network spokesman, however, said the decision was made shortly after the alleged violence occurred about 12:15 p.m.

Police said two non-striking CBS employees later filed complaints claiming that an unidentified group of males had "shoved and abused" them. No arrests were made, however, and there were no reports of vandalism.

The network spokesman said the game had been scheduled to be broadcast live to areas in the northeastern United States with New York City and an area within a 90-mile radius blacked out.

The key issue in the walkout involves a jurisdictional question, with CBS seeking to assign new technological functions in graphic arts and video tape editing to employees who are not members of the striking union.

Greek Industrialist, Former Judge Dies

BOSTON (AP)–John Pappas, wealthy industrialist and shipping magnate and the first person of Greek birth ever to be named a judge in the United States, died Sunday at Beth Israel Hospital in Boston. He was 69.

A graduate of Boston University Law School at the age of 20, Pappas was named an associate judge of Gloucester District Court at the age of 31 in 1935. At the time he was the youngest judge in the Commonwealth.

Pappas resigned the bench in 1965, saying pressures from his many business interests were forcing him to give up the judgeship he had held for three decades.

Born in Philitria, Greece, Pappas came to the United States at the age of 5 and after graduating from law school went into business with his father and brother Tom.

The Sea Pappas Co., owned by the two brothers, eventually became the largest importer of Spanish olives in the U.S. and expanded with offices in Boston, New York and Athens.

The Pappas brothers also went into the real estate field, building warehouses, shopping centers and housing developments. Tom Pappas became the primary coordinator of a $300 million complex of oil refineries, chemical plants and a steel mill which the Pappas brothers financed in their native Greece in conjunction with Standard Oil of New Jersey and Republic Steel.

EPA Postpones Lead Phase-Out

WASHINGTON (AP)--The Environmental Protection Agency probably will postpone for another year the issuance of regulations, proposed nine months ago, to phase out the use of lead in gasoline, say EPA sources.

But EPA soon will issue a regulation requiring sale of one grade of lead-free gasoline nationwide by mid-1974 to meet the anti-pollution needs of 1975 cars, these sources told The Associated Press Sunday.

And when a phase-out rule is finally adopted for all gasoline, it may be even tougher than originally proposed.

Instead of merely lowering the lead content as proposed last February, sources say EPA officials now believe lead eventually should be removed entirely from all gasoline. If it is removed, lead probably would be replaced with more costly petroleum "aromatics" to maintain octane ratings needed by pre-1975 cars.

EPA estimated last February its proposals would increase the price of regular gasoline about 1.65 cents per gallon by 1980 and would make the petroleum industry invest $2 billion more than the $32 billion it planned to spend on refinery facilities.

A regulation now nearing completion in EPA and the Office of Management and Budget is expected to include two main parts.

One part would require about 65 per cent of the nation's service stations in all regions to offer 91-octane lead-free gasoline after July 1, 1974.

Under the 1970 Clean Air Act, auto emissions must be reduced by 90 per cent in 1975-model cars. EPA decided after hearings last March that the auto industry could meet this goal using catalytic convertors that are quickly ruined by lead.

So lead-free gasoline by 1974 is considered essential to meeting the 1975 anti-pollution standard.

The second part of the forthcoming regulation, however, is expected to reproposе the phase-out of lead from the gasolines burned by cars already on the road.

WMPIRG Attacks WMECO Rates

By AVIS YUNI

Despite the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities (DPU) ruling which slashed a $5.7 million rate increase requested by the Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMECO), the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) will carry on with its court case challenging the constitutionality of the rate making system, Steve Ryder, President of WMPIRG, and Ronald Bogard, lawyer and Director of WMPIRG, told the MDC over the weekend.

As explained in Thursday's edition of the Collegian, the DPU, which has been holding hearings on the WMECO requested $5.7 million rate increase, decided to grant only a $1.4 million increase to the company.

Early in the hearings WMPIRG had protested to the DPU that the consumer's interest was not being represented and had proposed two motions concerning this which the DPU turned down. WMPIRG then decided to sue WMECO and the DPU in the Federal District Court in Boston, challenging the constitutionality of the DPU's rate making system since the way its set up the consumers can't be represented, stated Ryder.

"We're pleased with the result that there was a three-quarter reduction" in the rate increase, Bogard stated, and he feels that WMPIRG can take partial credit for this. They're going to go ahead with the lawsuit however.

Bogard believes that the DPU slashed the increase because of the noise WMPIRG made and he questions what will happen the next time when no noise is made. "The system of setting rates still has many faults" and the legislature needs to reform it badly, he stated.

Bogard explained that WMECO might possibly appeal the DPU decision to the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court. They might ask for it to be reversed citing the record of the case. The DPU called no witnesses to challenge the requested increase. The State Supreme Court might therefore question if the DPU had enough of a basis on which to slash the increase.

"It's possible that the court might decide to reinstate WMECO's original request," Bogard said. He cited a case a year ago in which this court reversed a DPU decision concerning the Northeast Telephone Company. During the hearings the company had called three witnesses and the DPU only one. The DPU had based its decision on this one witness but the court reversed it, declaring that the DPU can't place that much weight on one witness.

Right now Ryder stated that it's unknown what WMECO will do, if anything. However, Bogard says they'll "look with interest" on what happens and are very happy with the $1.4 vs. $5.7 million increase.

In regard to WMPIRG's present court case, in a hearing held last Monday, two motions were presented to Judge Friedman in the Federal District Court in Boston. WMECO with the DPU presented a motion to dismiss the case and WMPIRG presented one requesting the judge to grant a preliminary injunction.

Bogard explained that the dismissal motion will be considered first. Ryder stated they expect a ruling on this soon but they're not sure when.

If Judge Friedman, who is a new judge on the case, rules not to dismiss the case he will then move to consider WMPIRG's motion which wants the hearing procedure declared unconstitutional. If he ruled this affirmatively the WMECO increase could be suspended until a fair hearing was held, Bogard said.

If Judge Friedman decides to rule affirmatively on the WMECO-DPU motion, the case will be dismissed and WMPIRG will have to decide if they want to appeal to a higher court.

UMass Profs Win 1st Round In Loyalty Oath Battle

By MARK VOGLER

CAMBRIDGE–Judge John W. Coddaire, Jr., Friday in Middlesex County Superior Court, granted a preliminary injunction to three University of Massachusetts-Boston faculty members who filed a class action suit two weeks ago in opposition to the state's loyalty oath.

The injunction restrains the university personnel offices of all three campuses from dismissing anyone employed by the university between October 29, 1969 and September 21, 1972 who refused to sign the oath.

Judge Coddaire ordered that the pleadings for both sides be completed within 10 days. A trial date for the case of Ford et al vs. Abrahms et al was set for January 8.

Att. Stephen Oleskey, legal counsel for the UMass-Boston plaintiffs, said there was a strong indication by the state that the case would be consolidated with the cases of 33 Berkshire Community College, Pittsfield and 18 UMass-Amherst faculty and staff members. Both cases are represented by Att. William A. Norris of Cummington and are pending on injunctions.

September 21 was the date that a letter was addressed from the employing agencies of the university campuses to all university employees (faculty and staff, and students employed by the university) informing them of the Nov. 15 deadline for signing the oath and the possible consequences for failure to do so.

The loyalty oath has been under a three-year period of ajudication until April 18 of this year when the Supreme Court ruled that the law requiring any state employee to sign a loyalty oath was constitutional.

The Supreme Court's Decision rose from a case which Att. Oleskey had lost before the higher court. Oleskey had won the case in the lower courts when an employee of a state hospital filed a grievance against the employees oath. However, the case was appealed by the state, and subsequently led to a reversal.

UMass President Robert Wood has looked unfavorably upon the recent court actions taken by the university opponents to the loyalty oath.

Wood said the question of the oath could not be resolved by court injunctions. He said he believed the requirement did not prohibit academic freedom and he referred to the recent court action as "a Don Quixote effort by faculty members."

Massachusetts Assistant Attorney General Robert Mayo did not object to the preliminary injunction granted to the Boston three. Mayo did not contest the injunction granted the Amherst group either.

Mayo has handled the state side of the oath issue for the past three years and has carried it to the United States Supreme Court.

He lost an argument to a Pittsfield court when Berkshire Community college faculty and staff members won an extension to a restraining order. He also failed in his appeal to the Supreme Judicial Court.

Girl Takes Frat House Fall

By BOB SCHEIER

An 18-year-old girl, believed to be a UMass student, was in fair condition at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton last night following a fall from a fraternity Saturday night.

Mary Pollack, 18, from Wethersfield, Conn., was being treated for facial injuries in the intensive care unit of the hospital following the fall from the Phi Sigma Kappa house on North Pleasant St.

Ed Doherty, president of the fraternity, said the girl fell while climbing along a wooden flagpole at the front of the house around 11:15 Saturday night.

He said she had apparently crawled from a ladies room window onto the balcony over the front door of the house, and from there onto the flagpole, which snapped and she fell 15 feet to the ground.

Doherty said the house had 25 members checking to be sure nothing went wrong during the day. At the time of the accident, he said, several persons were trying to get a key to a room that led directly onto the balcony.

"We did everything in our power," he said.

C.C. Store Ripoffs Continue

of the bookstore was over $40,000. This includes clerical error and unaccountable merchandise. Bill Simpson, a staff assistant of the store, believes that a large portion was due to shoplifting.

Richard Nelson, Chairman of the Campus Center Board of Governors, said, "The store was budgeted to make $250,000 and produced only $130,000. Obviously shoplifting has played a major role in this deficit."

Nelson went on to say, "I don't think punishment is the way you deal with these people; education is the goal for making people realize that they're ripping themselves off."

In a letter by Nelson to Larry Ladd, President of the Student Government Association, dated October 24, 1972, Nelson wrote, "The Campus Center was not designed to be self-liquidating, it was assumed throughout the planning of the Campus Center that there would be a considerable amount of state money involved in paying off the bonded indebtedness.

When the Building Authority decided that it could not allow multiple sources of financing for a single project and magnanimously shifted the burden to the student body, we were put in the position of trying to make a going business out of something that was designed to operate at a loss. Income-producing areas within the building do not even begin to pay for the overall cost of building operations."

Nelson then went on to say, "In fact, disregarding the debt service, we are running at a $600,000 loss. If you include the debt service, we are running at a 1.2 million dollar loss. Possibly the income-producing areas could eventually close that gap, but it is doubtful that the 1.2 million dollar gap between income and expenses could ever be closed by more than 15%. As you know, the student body makes up the deficit in the form of the highest Campus Center/Student Union fee in the nation."

Nelson concluded this part of the letter, "In 1975 we will begin actually paying off the bonds of the building (up until now we have been paying off the interest of the bonds) and at that time the debt service will increase to 1.2 million, bringing the annual overall deficit to 1.8 million dollars and requiring a $90 Campus Center fee."

Antiguerrilla Laws Signed In N. Ireland

DUBLIN (AP)--President Eamon de Valera signed the Irish republic's tough antiguerrilla measures into law Sunday amid a spate of bomb scares that left Dublin jittery after a weekend of violence and political crisis.

Top men of the outlawed Irish Republican Army were reported in hiding, their years of apparent immunity over.

But the capital remained tense and crowds were far thinner than usual. Many people feared a renewal of the Friday bombings which killed two men and left 127 wounded.

Bombings and assassinations persisted in British-ruled Northern Ireland. Three persons were shot dead over the weekend, raising the death toll to at least 650 since the province erupted in bloodshed three years ago.

Guerrillas launched a rocket attack Sunday on British troops maintaining order at a march of militant Roman Catholics in Belfast, the Ulster capital. One soldier was seriously wounded when a rocket hit his armored car.

The 90-year-old Irish president, himself once chief of the IRA but for many years its relentless opponent, signed the amended Offenses Against the State Act at the presidential residence in Phoenix Park. De Valera has only a figurehead position; executive power rests with the government of Prime Minister Jack Lynch.

The amended act provides that a senior police officer's belief that a man is a member of an illegal organization is enough to put him behind bars. Critics charge that it breaches fundamental rules of justice, but the two bombs Friday night were enough to win its passage through both houses of Parliament.

As the republic faced up to a spread of terrorism from the North, police reported the weekend brought a bomb alarm every five minutes. Most of the alarms were hoaxes.

Other calls were prompted by genuine suspicion of parked cars or abandoned parcels. All involved cordoning of suspected areas and disruption of city life.

Extra police were drafter in from the provinces to assist in security operations as the capital goes back to work Monday.

Contingency planning reportedly included a total ban on unaccompanied parking like that which operates in Belfast, capital of Northern Ireland.

Sean MacStiofain, jailed leader of the IRA, was reported "on the mend" at the Curragh military hospital west of Dublin.

MacStiofain, 44, has been on a hunger strike since his arrest two weeks ago. He started taking liquids four days ago.

N. Vietnam: 'Vietnam 1 Country'

SAIGON (AP) — On the eve of resumed peace talks in Paris, North Vietnam issued a position statement asserting that all of Vietnam is one country and demanding an end to U.S. influence in the South.

The statement was issued Sunday as an editorial in the official newspaper Nhan Dan and broadcast over Hanoi Radio.

It accused the United States of disregarding a pledge to respect the Vietnamese people's right to self-determination and advanced its version of this right, which it likened to "the principal pillars of a house."

"If only one of these pillars is pulled down, the entire house will collapse," the editorial said.

It also called the Saigon government's insistence on North Vietnamese troop withdrawals insolent, and added: "To satisfy these demands would mean to annul the agreement and prolong the war..."

The editorial asserted that the Washington-Hanoi draft agreement on a cease-fire announced last month was made possible by U.S. "recognition of the Vietnamese people's sacred inviolable national rights and the South Vietnamese people's right to self-determination which the U.S. side had adamantly denied for four years."

The draft agreement negotiated between White House adviser Henry A. Kissinger and North Vietnam's Le Duc Tho was significant, the editorial said, because it included "the basic principles concerning the Vietnamese people's national rights, the indispensible prerequisites for truly ending the war and bringing a just and lasting peace to our country.

"The United States must end its military involvement and intervention in South Vietnam's internal affairs," the editorial declared and went on to say that to restore peace, the United States must adhere to the following conditions:

"The South Vietnamese people shall decide their political future themselves through genuinely free and democratic general elections; the United States is not committed to any political tendency nor to any personality in South Vietnam, nor does it seek to impose a pro-American governement in Saigon.

"Our people's rights to democratic freedom will be ensured; an administrative structure called the National Council of National Reconciliation and Concord of three equal segments will be set up; the reunification of Vietnam shall be carried out step by step through peaceful means."

The Vietnamese words expressing administrative structure implied a government. The concept of the council's role and the wording of that concept have been sticking points in negotiations since the draft agreement was made public. Washington envisions not a government but a body whose powers would be limited to arranging elections.

S. Viet Rangers Lose Ground

SAIGON (AP) - Enemy troops, backed by an artillery barrage, drove government rangers from a defensive position in the central highlands as fighting erupted in three scattered areas of South Vietnam, the Saigon command reported Sunday.

U.S. B52 bombers flew more than 40 strikes against enemy troop concentrations and staging areas in Quang Tri province where a counteroffensive by South Vietnamese marines and paratroopers is bogged down by monsoon weather.

In a 10-hour firefight in torrential rain northeast of Quang Tri City, the Saigon command reported marines killed 37 North Vietnamese soldiers and took one prisoner. The command said one marine was killed and 12 wounded.

South of the city, airborne units trying to push enemy forces back into the foothills away from the coastal plain, wiped out 24 of their foe while suffering only two wounded, the command announced.

A battalion of government rangers withdrew Saturday from a defensive position eight miles southwest of Kontum city, in the central highlands, in the face of repeated shelling and infantry attacks.

Two enemy assaults, backed by heavy artillery fire, were beaten off before the 300 rangers withdrew to another position, said military spokesman Lt. Col. Do Viet.

At least five enemy troops were killed as they tried to get through the barbed wire surrounding the ranger position. The rangers lost 22 wounded in the action.

A ranger unit flung back another attack on their position near the district town of Mo Duc, in the central coastal province of Quang Ngia, according to field reports. Nine enemy were killed in the assault, first in the area for two weeks.

The U.S. base at Da Nang was hit by a single 122 mm rocket early Sunday but there were no casualties or damage. Five more rockets slammed into a nearby South Vietnamese ammunition dump, wounding two soldiers, but causing only light damage.

A U.S. Army Cobra helicopter gunship was shot down by a Russian-made Strella missile in a rubber tree area 50 miles northwest of Saigon Sunday, the U.S. Command reported. Both crewmen were rescued with minor wounds.

The Strella is a hand-held missile and has been responsible for downing several American helicopters in recent months.

American jets flew 80 tactical air strikes against targets in North Vietnam during the 24 hours ending at 5 p.m. Saturday, the U.S. Command announced.

Fighter bombers from the 7th Fleet carrier Saratoga bombed the newly constructed runways of North Vietnam's Bai Thuong airfield, just below the 20th parallel, the Navy reported.

Washington restricted U.S. bombing to below the 20th parallel Oct. 22 as a gesture of good will during the current peace talks. This puts Hanoi and Haiphong off limits to attack.

Other Navy jets destroyed four bridges southwest of the port of Thanh Hoa, 200 miles above the demilitarized zone.

Spanish Jet Crashes; 155 Germans Dead

SANTA CRUZ DE TENERIFFE, Canary Islands (AP) - A chartered Spanish jetliner carrying a group of German tourists crashed shortly after takeoff from this resort island Sunday killing all 155 persons on board.

It was the worst crash in Spanish civil aviation history and the seventh time this year that more than 100 persons died in a single-plane crash.

The four-engine Convair 990A Coronado belonged to the Spanish charter airline Spantax and has 148 passengers and a crew of seven.

All the passengers were German, 73 men and 75 women, and the crew was Spanish, according to the airline.

The plane took off normally from Los Rodeos airport on its way to Munich.

Roy Ash, New Budget Head Linked With Land Deals

ELKO, Nev. (AP) — President Nixon's new budgetary watchdog was one of several traders who acquired thousands of acres of Western public land in a series of controversial deals with the Interior Department.

Roy L. Ash, named last week as head of the Office of Management and Budget, and his business partner, Charles B. Thornton, in 1969 swapped 22 acres of ocean-front land in California for 14,145 acres of arid range land in Nevada.

Some federal agencies split over whether such trades were in the public interest.

Officials of the U.S. Bureau of Land Management (BLM) said that despite the huge disparity in size, the two parcels of land had the same monetary value.

Ash and Thornton had bought land in Pt. Reyes just north of San Francisco for the purpose of trading it with the government for acreage adjacent to the T Lazy S cattle ranch they owned in a remote section of northern Nevada near Elko.

The government does not sell large parcels of public land, except to other governmental bodies. But such parcels sometimes are traded, usually for the purpose of consolidating holdings to make them easier to administer.

Ash and Thornton paid about $6,500 an acre for the Pt. Reyes land and got the Nevada property for about $10 an acre. Like most big landowners in that ranching and mining section of Nevada, where 90 per cent of the land is publicly owned, Ash and Thornton had many routine dealings with federal agents.

Their cattle grazed on public lands and they had numerous mining claims on file.

Papers filed in the Elko County Courthouse on Oct. 10, 1972, six weeks before his White House appointment, show that Ash sold his half interest in the T Lazy S to Thornton for $10 "and other good and valuable consideration."

The other consideration was never defined. Reached in Los Angeles, Ash said that while he would have no particular objection to disclosing the payment he received for his interest in the 200,000-acre ranch, he said it would be something about which Thornton also would have to be consulted.

Ash said he had been looking for a buyer for a couple of years and that the sale had nothing to do with his White House appointment.

Asked about the vast difference in acreage in the Pt. Reyes land trade, he replied, "the Nevada land was quite a different property than the Pacific Coast land," referring to the desert-like nature of the ranch land.

Ash told a news conference after his appointment was announced that he would resign his $195,000-a-year job as president of Litton and would dispose of his $3 million stock in Litton which is involved in a $270-million shipbuilding contract dispute with the Navy.

As head of the Office of Management and Budget, Ash will be one of the most powerful men in the federal government. The position is considered part of the White House staff and does not require Senate confirmation.

Apollo Strike Threat Averted

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — The Boeing Co. and 60 aerospace workers reached agreement on a contract Sunday night and erased the possibility of a strike that could have delayed Wednesday's planned launch of Apollo 17 to the moon.

The decision was announced by Bernard Manet, attorney for the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees (IATSE) which represented the non-union workers in the negotiations that began seven months ago.

"I'm very happy to report that there will be no strike," Manet said.

"Boening apparently opted that discretion was the better part of valor and they took our final proposal. As soon as this news conference is over, we're going back and sign the agreement.

"The impact is that I don't think that neither NASA nor Boeing or any similar company will ever again attempt to reduce employee wages to the starvation point in the future."

At the heart of the dispute was a 30 to 50 per cent wage cut that the workers received when Boeing took over a support contract last year. Most were cut from about $250 to $130 a week.

Mamet said that the average wage increase under the contract would be 43 to 45 per cent, and that about 93 per cent of the lost wages would be restored.

The workers involved perform such jobs as illustration, photography and technical writing under a Boeing contract.

While the labor controversy continued, Apollo 17 astronauts Eugene A. Cernan, Harrison H. Schmitt and Ronald E. Evans flew T38 jet planes for the second straight day.

The space agency said they executed high acceleration maneuvers to adapt to the gravity forces they will undergo when the Saturn 5 rocket lifts off.

At the launch pad five miles away the countdown was on time, aiming for blastoff of the final Apollo mission at 9:53 p.m. EST Wednesday.

After the all-night session, mediator Rose said: "There was progress during the night, I'm anxious to get it wound up. I'm hopeful for an agreement."

It was at that time that IATSE announced the 5 p.m. deadline.

"We are blowing the whistle on the negotiations," said IATSE attorney Bernard Mamet. "We have been meeting all through the night, and no settlement has been reached yet. We will continue to meet, but not for long."

If a settlement was not reached by 5 p.m., Mamet said, a strike vote would be taken, and, if the decision is to strike, pickets would be set up immediately at gates to Cape Kennedy.

Governors Ask Westwood To Resign

ST. LOUIS, Mo. (AP) - The Democratic Governors Caucus asked national party chairman Jean Westwood to resign yesterday and voted to endorse former treasurer Robert Strauss as her replacement.

Strauss had sought the governors' endorsement in advance of next Saturday's meeting of the Democratic National Committee. Some of the governors differed, however, on what weight Sunday's voting would carry when the national panel considers a possible change in the party chairmanship.

Arkansas Gov. Dale Bumpers, caucus chairman, said the resolution asking Mrs. Westwood to resign was passed by voice vote in closed session. A second resolution, recommending Strauss to replace her, passed by a vote of 18 to 8 with six abstentions, Bumpers said.

Mrs. Westwood said the governor's vote did not knock her out of the race and she would continue to fight if Strauss remained in it. She said she had the votes to retain her job if it comes to a showdown.

"I'm only concerned with the unity of this party and what's best for this party," Mrs. Westwood said. "I'm looking for a concensus that heal the wounds of this party and not divide it.'

Strauss said he was "encouraged and gratified" by the governors' endorsement and said: "I think I'll be elected as chairman of this party.

Council of Churches Holds 'Crucial Meeting'

DALLAS, Tex. (AP)--An ending and a hoped-for new beginning loomed Sunday for the nation's principal organization of inter-Christian cooperation as it opened its ninth--and likely its last-triennial general assembly.

The occasion marked a crossroad in the life of the 22-year-old National Council of Churches, which embraces most of the country's major Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations.

It is to be a "crucial gathering," said the Council's president, Dr. Cynthia Wedel.

It faces proposals for scuttling the Council's present structure and operational system and designing a new framework more attuned to current church demands, tightening up efficiency and mobilizing wider participation.

Amid the "change and fluidity" of the last two decades, the situation in the churches has altered greatly, Dr. Wedel said. "Our ways of acting need to be reexamined...If we were not doing this, we'd deserve to be put out of business."

About 2,000 church people from across the nation gathered Sunday for the opening service of worship and pageantry, some of it set in the streets of Dallas. The delegates represent 33 denominations totalling about 43 million Christians.

Bongiorno Attacks Fr.-It. Dept.

By JIM DEMPSEY

Italian Professor Robert Bongiorno has charged the French-Italian Department Personnel Committee with basing their decision to dismiss him more on his personal life than on his teaching record.

During an MDC interview, Bongiorno indicated that their decision was arbitrarily arrived at according to soundings from "private pipelines".

Associate Chairman for the French-Italian Department Zina Tillona and Dean Jeremiah Allen of the College of Arts and Sciences refused to comment on Bongiorno's case last week when asked. They felt it would be damaging to discuss it while he was going through the procedural channels.

When Bongiorno's case for contract renewal first came up in 1970, he was informed by the Head of the Department and the Chairman of the Personnel Committee that although his teaching seemed excellent, they were disturbed by his personal life. They felt he was too friendly with students outside the classroom as well as while teaching said Bongiorno.

They indicated to him that he was not respecting the distinction between student and professor. Bongiorno said "Their assumption is that students will exploit a professor who is friendly and human. This is utter contempt for students."

At that time, Bongiorno was given a one-year extension beyond his original two-year contract. Usually professors receive a two-year extension. Bongiorno was told that this represented a kind of probation.

The following year his case came before the Personnel Committee again. This time they recommended non-renewal of his contract, saying Bongiorno's focus was not entirely on Italian and that he was therefore not suited to the needs of the Italian Program.

When they reached their decision they informed Dean Allen before they told Professor Bongiorno. According to Bongiorno this constituted a procedural error. He should have been told first. As a result, the original decision not to renew his contract was reversed. Bongiorno was automatically granted a one-year extension of his contract, up to August 31, 1973.

In July of this year he was notified of the Personnel Committee's decision to terminate his contract when it runs out in 1973. The Committee passes their judgement on the basis of three criteria--teaching, scholarship, and service.

Bongiorno indicated however that despite the fact that his record was very good in these three areas, he was recommended for dismissal.

A professor's teaching performance is based on written student evaluations.

Despite the fact that most of the written evaluations of Professor Bongiorno were positive, the Committee based their vote on the negative verbal comments of some students, according to Bongiorno and the Committee's statement.

The Committee's statement on his teaching reads: "Although the teaching evaluations show that some students react positively to Mr. Bongiorno, some of our majors and other serious students voiced reservations as to the solidity and substance of the content of his courses."

The statement went on to say that "the quality of his service to the University...was difficult to assess." Bongiorno noted to the contrary that there were several letters in his personnel file attesting to his service in various programs.

During the year 1971-1972 he taught courses in the Comparative Literature Program, the Honors Program and the Orchard Hill Program as well as a Graduate Seminar at the School of Education. He was also a sponsor for the University Without Walls Program.

Concerning his scholarship, several scholarly articles and works of fiction were accepted by respected journals last year. However, Bongiorno said that the Committee members who read his articles felt that they "were lacking in depth, scholarly approach and method, and control."

Bongiorno cited the fact that the Committee is compromised of six persons from French and only one person from Italian. Concerning his scholarly works, Bongiorno said, "The Committee members who supposedly read them had no competence in my field."

When he received word of the non-renewal of his contract last May, he began grievance procedures, but this process was interrupted by the summer.

Upon returning to school this Fall, he learned from Dean Jeremiah Allen that the case was closed, because it had passed out of the Dean's hands.

He has since been granted a request for another review, because he had not finished pursuing all the avenues of the grievance procedure. He also has new evidence to present including his award of first prize in the International Dante Essay Competition.

Bongiorno cited one of the contradictions of the review process as being the conflict which occurs at the departmental level.

It is the responsibility of the Associate Chairman for Italian, Zina Tillona to present the strongest possible case for the faculty member involved. Ms. Tillona is then allowed to vote on the case, said Bongiorno.

Concerning Ms. Tillona's additional position as the Associate Provost, Bongiorno maintained that "A person's influence is wherever a person's presence is. Being in the Provost's office," he added, "there's no way you cannot have an influence."

Bongiorno went on to say that there are many members of the French-Italian Department who are very unhappy about the way the Department is being run.

He indicated that there are also several members upset over the way some decisions are made regarding hiring, firing, granting of tenure, and granting of merit increment for faculty members. "More than a few members are totally outraged at what is happening," said Bongiorno.

WMPIRG Notes Banned Toys Remaining On Store Shelves

Toys banned as dangerous by the Food and Drug Administration remain on the shelves in Western Mass. stores, according to a study on toy safety conducted by the Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG). WMPIRG Director, Ronald Bogard, made the announcement this morning in a press conference at Springfield College.

WMPIRG volunteers found nineteen examples of banned toys, as well as over one hundred additional toys which failed to meet FDA safety regulations, in a check of thirty-five area stores. The study was conducted as part of a nation-wide effort by ten Public Interest Research Groups.

"We hadn't expected to find so many banned toys still being sold in Western Massachusetts," said Frederica Scott, WMPIRG Research Associate. "The number of hazardous toys which should be banned, but are not on the list, is even more alarming." The group has sent letters to store owners requesting removal of the dangerous toys from their shelves, according to Mrs. Scott.

WMPIRG also urged consumers to use great caution when purchasing toys during the current Christmas-buying season, noting that over 400,000 children were injured by the toys during the past year.

On a national level, the Public Interest Research Groups will seek stricter enforcement of government toy safety regulations and development of stronger safety standards at both the manufacturing and retail levels.

WMPIRG surveyed 35 stores in Western Massachusetts. Twenty eight volunteers, including students, housewives and mothers, participated in the survey. Stores were surveyed in the Springfield area, Pittsfield, Adams, No. Adams, Ware, Athol, Greenfield, Northampton, and Hadley.

In deciding whether or not a toy presented some risk or danger, WMPIRG used the Food and Drug Administration's standards for banning toys, as well as the current list of FDA banned toys, and the text of the 1969 Child Protection and Toy Safety Act. An additional source used was Toys That Don't Care by Edward M. Schwartz. A few toys were purchased to be used for demonstration and for further testing.

SURVEY FINDINGS

In total WMPIRG discovered 19 toys banned by the Food and Drug Administration still on shelves in Western Massachusetts. At the time of the Arkansas survey (December 1971), the Bureau had banned only 187 toys; after surveying 51 stores their survey revealed finding only 6 of these being sold. At the present time the Bureau has banned approximately 800 toys with new ones being added each month.

The banned toys WMPIRG found included dolls with easily removable pins, squeaker toys with ingestible squeakers, and rattles that could easily be shattered. Surveyors also found many toys that were not on the banned toy list but did not meet FDA labeling or sales department requirements. In total WMPIRG found 138 dangerous toys in addition to the 19 toys already banned by the FDA. Many of the dangerous toys may have been overlooked because many of them were packaged in ways that precluded close examination, and some toy dangers are so well-concealed that even a trained eye would overlook them. These dangerous toys were found in all areas surveyed at a variety of stores, ranging from toy specialty shops to large discount houses. The findings reveal a general lack of enforcement by the Food and Drug Administration.

Amherst Offers Lectures

On Wednesday, Dec. 6, The Amherst Radical Education Project, a student organization, will present members of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party in a discussion of "The Puerto Rican Situation Today." The event, to include a slide show, will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Converse Hall Assembly Room of Amherst College.

At 8 p.m. on the same day, Dr. David Bond will speak on "Consumer Protection." Dr. Bond is currently executive director of the Consumer Council of Canada. His lecture, part of an Amherst College economics department lecture series, will take place in Merrill Center Lecture Room Two.

HELP SOLVE A PROBLEM
RECEIVE 3 CREDITS
Course: G.B. 386 Legislative Research Seminar - Independent Study
Aim of Course:
Most state legislators lack the staff and research assistance necessary to make what many people would consider to be an informed evaluation of much of the legislation they must vote on. There is, therefore, a large void that students can fill. There are, for example, many bills dealing with a wide variety of social problems that would stand a better chance of passage if more research were done on them. In addition, there is unfortunately much ignorance as to how legislators and legislatures function. It is hoped that as a result of their work, students will become more aware of the intracacies of the legislative process.

Belchertown's Friends Blast Sarge

By MARK VOGLER

Dr. Benjamin Ricci of Amherst, president of the Belchertown State School's Friends Association, expressed outrage Saturday night at Gov. Francis W. Sargent's failure to respond to a letter questioning circumstances related to a search for a school resident who was later found dead.

Ricci said he was also angered at John Kehoe, commissioner of public safety, whom he had also not received a reply from in a similar letter.

In his letter, Ricci raised questions about the school's staffing procedures and asked for an investigation into the search which was called off for a resident Nov. 19 at 10:30 P.M. The resident was reported missing at noon time after apparently wandering off from the school's "A" recreational building, school authorities said. Her body was found by police the following morning.

"The Governor is just not responsible," declared Ricci. "To this minute we don't even know what role he is playing with regard to the mentally retarded of this Commonwealth. He has not even accorded the common decency to respond to this letter.

"I think I'd get a quicker response from President Nixon before I would the Governor. I think Pope Paul would have been more concerned.

"After three deaths in one week because of the lack of staffing and inhumane--just inadequate conditions, the Governor remains unmoved. Maybe it takes 30 lives. But it is quite evident that he is not at all concerned, because if he were, he'd have already gotten down to brass tactics."

Ricci said he was distressed over the calling off for the school resident two weeks ago. "Hell, they were searching six weeks for Hale Boggs, weren't they? Then after three hours of searching for a mentally retarded person, hope was suddenly given up.

"I'm not just making the comparison between Hale Boggs--national figure and Jane Doe--Massachusetts retarded. The important question that I want to ask is would anybody have called off that search for the mentally retarded child of an important person? The answer is no."

Ricci said that the Friends Association and relatives of the residents of Belchertown would become politically active in the future and attack those "responsible for the degredation, dehumanization, and death at this institution."

"We're going to raise questions and will continue to do so. Somebody's going to have to vote with a vengence for these residents who don't vote," Ricci stated.

Despite the overwhelming evidence of "cruel and inhumane conditions" at the state school, Ricci said that the state "operates on the notion that these conditions don't exist."

"We've been hurt once again. Anybody with common decency would react after being made aware of what's happening here. And after being shamed by UMass students last spring in to taking a tour of Belchertown, our Governor remains insensitive.

"A governor should be interested in all citizens, including the mentally retarded. The law is being flaunted and we have to hold all the people who are responsible, accountable for the criminal acts which have been done. The Governor just sits back on his hands and knees while this happens."

Ricci said Gov. Sargent was moved by his tour through Belchertown, but "unmoved" since that time. During the tour Ricci showed the Governor a filthy toilet without a seat and asked him how he would like to sit on that toilet. Sargent said he wouldn't.

Ricci pointed to a bed with soiled and tattered bed sheets and a beaten-up horsehair pillow. Again he asked the Governor's approval of useage. Sargent replied that he wouldn't want to sleep in the bed.

"We have made allegations of cruel and inhumane treatment over here, yet the conditions we have described have been ignored by the Governor himself. Belchertown will only improve when the Governor and the rest of the bureaucrats of the Commonwealth come up and sleep in one of these beds," Ricci said.

Monkey Business

CHICAGO (AP) - Monkeys have a sense of social grooming which is responsible for their own unique kind of dental hygiene, a Scottish psychologist reports.

The animals studied were born in the wild and are maintained in a one-acre outdoor enclosure which simulates their native habitat.

In the absence of toothbrushes and dental floss, McGrew reported, the chimps use twigs for cleaning teeth and they extract their own and other chimps' teeth.

McGrew noted that chimpanzees are unique among animals to use tools repeatedly in social grooming.

FUTURE PLANS

On the local level, WMPIRG is asking consumers to be more aware in buying toys this holiday season and in the future. Copies of the Banned Toy List can be obtained by writing to:

Food and Drug Administration
Bureau of Product Safety
585 Commercial Street
Boston, Mass. 02109
(617-223-3174)

Retail store owners have been sent a letter explaining the survey, a copy of the report, and a list of dangerous toys found on their shelves. The letter also contains a request to remove these toys from the shelves. In the next two weeks, the surveyors will conduct a follow-up study, returning to the stores to see if the owners have complied with requests to remove banned toys.

Copies of the WMPIRG report will be sent to United States Senators Kennedy and Brooke and United States Congressmen from Massachusetts. They will be urged to introduce and support national legislation to:

(1) broaden the regulations governing all types of toys, not only those that are presently banned,

(2) require adequate pre-testing of toys for safety before marketing,

(3) impose penalties on manufacturers who do not comply with pre-testing standards and regulations, and,

(4) increase the number of inspectors who inspect the 1400 toy manufacturers throughout the country (at present only 35 inspectors cover the entire U.S.).

On the national level, the D.C. Public Interest Research Group will compile the results of all the PIRG studies and lobby for toy safety legislation. Also they hope to have some input in the setting up of the new commission before it takes over.

2 Sharon Girls Found Safe

SHARON, Mass. (AP)--Two young girls who lost their way when they tried a shortcut to their homes, were found early Sunday, cold and tired but apparently none the worse for wear otherwise.

A party of searchers came across the girls, Nancy Karger, 10, and Elizabeth Nickel, 9, in the marshy area not far from their homes.

They were taken to Norwood Hospital for a checkup.

Swiss Join Common Market

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — Swiss voters gave resounding approval Sunday to the free trade treaty linking their neutral country with the European Common Market.

The official result of a nationwide referendum was 1,345,057 for and 509,350 against the treaty that will eventually grant Swiss industrial products duty-free access to a consumer market of 300 million people already absorbing about half of Switzerland's total exports.

The turnout was 51.2 per cent, relatively high by Swiss standards. Economics Minister Ernst Brugger hailed the result as a massive support for cooperation with the Common Market. He noted that Switzerland was the only one among the community's free trade partners to submit the treaty to a popular referendum.

Brugger said the outcome exceeded his expectations.

Conn. Gets No-Fault Insurance

HARTFORD (AP) - "A better break on auto insurance" has been promised by state Insurance Commissioner Paul B. Altermatt under Connecticut's no-fault law which takes effect Jan. 1, 1973.

"The system that's been designed," Altermatt said Sunday, "has the sole purpose of giving the Connecticut policy holder and the public a better break on auto insurance then they've had in the past."

However, Altermatt added, "this better break does not necessarily follow under no-fault. But we in the Connecticut Insurance Department are determined that this new system will benefit the Connecticut public."

The average automobile insurance premium is expected to be cut by about $18 a year, according to an estimate by Roger Dove, executive director of the Insurance Association of Connecticut.

Recently, some companies have been criticized for trying to boost their rates just before no-fault is implemented. Spokesmen for the insurance industry have denied that was the case.

"Five companies filed for some rate increases," explained Altermatt, "and I would agree with anyone who would say the timing of these increases was unfortunate.

"But, on the other hand, these filings were made early, most of them last year before the no-fault actually became law.

There's A Place.....

By MARK VOGLER

Students, you've got a lot of weight on your shoulders.

Your list of worries is endless. You've probably been worrying about how you are going to pay that second semester bill. Perhaps you didn't study for that mid term exam. Or maybe you're just about fed up with the low grade room and board you pay outrageous prices for. These are but a few of the domestic problems you have to cope with in a college environment.

In the meantime, preceeding generations have left a lot of worldwide problems for you to solve. And rightfully so, it is tragic.

Pretty soon it will be your turn to fill the shoes of those who have not changed anything–but only added to the long list of problems that are indicative of the sick society, the sick world in which we live.

Well, student...It's enough to make you want to cop out...Right? If you do want to get away from it all, there's a place hidden from the attention of the world, tucked away in a small Western Massachusetts town.

...As you drive your car through the country, the beauty of the picturesque commons hits you. And the little white church with its spire touching the sky is accented by the blue sky and the green patch of trees. The flavor is old New England.

As you continue driving up the road, you'll see a small county settlement way back in the woods. It looks like a nice place to visit. So you turn off the main drag and head for the paved road.

Quite a nice location, away from the rest of this sick society. The birds chirp serene songs from the treetops. The lawn is well kept and the neatly manicured shrubs are typical of the rolling landscape.

It's quite a scenic area. The brick houses at a distant glance look inviting. "I wouldn't mind going to school here," you say to yourself. So you hop out of your car to take a better look.

The well-kept administration building is the first building a visitor sees when he arrives at the Belchertown State School for the mentally retarded. (Photos by Bob Callahan).

"But where are all the students? This is an institution, is it not?" An elderly man passes you by and gives you a dirty look and says: "Yea kid. It's an institution all right."

"What could be eating him?" Well, anyway, here's the place. Now to get some peace of mind. So you head up the steps of the information building to inquire about getting a guided tour of the place.

The office worker looks at you and asks why you should want a tour. Your response: "Lady, I just want to see what this place is all about?"

...You're on tour. As you mount the staircase and approach what appears to be a dormitory, shock takes hold of you.

Your dream world is suddenly no better than the nightmare you live with. The paradox is that this world you live in is no sicker than your own.

This is not an institution of higher learning, it's a place where the mentally retarded must spend their miserable lives. You're not touring a small Western Massachusetts College. You're touring Belchertown State School, Dr. Benjamin Ricci, president of the Belchertown State School Friends Association, is your guide.

Ricci reaches in his pocket for the key and unlocks the door to "F" Building. As you step inside, it's evident as to what you see–the outcasts, the misfits of the outside world. The building you are now in is filled with people who were dammed at birth–who through no fault of their own, are the way they are.

You're not even through the door and some of the older adult residents of the school welcome you. They shake your hand and cuddle up close to you to cherish a moment of love and affection which they have been starving for during most of their life.

The people are able to communicate with you. But for the most part, their conversation is limited to the dialogue of a five-year-old. But you get the feeling that they're trying to tell you something.

Dr. Ricci tells their tragedy for them. "Belchertown is a misnomer of grand proportions. The facilities and conditions of this place are archaic, middle-aged, and a disgrace to the Commonwealth. The fact that 30% of the residents are denied the right to an education, is just a sample of discrimination in wholesale proportions.

"If you take all afflictions of mankind, I don't give a dam which minority groups you mention–the blacks, the Puerto Ricans, you name 'em; they have all enjoyed some success despite how little.

"But when you look at these mentally retarded people, they're at the bottom of the list. These people have achieved no success. The quality of this place is shocking. It's downright criminal."

Your visit of this building is confined to the recreational room. But before you depart, Ricci suggests that you take a look at the cafeteria where these people eat.

The sight is enough to make you sick. The foul odor which infiltrates the dining quarters is most distinguishable. The utensils, after close inspection, are unfit for the normal human being. Some people wouldn't even feed their pets from the filthy plastic dishes. You run your finger around in one of the cups and a thin layer of scum is extracted from the bottom.

What's the explanation for this? The steward tells you that due to an undermanned staff, some of the residents (the more progressed ones) are utilized in the running of the dining room. Only one professional attendant is present at all times. So what can you expect?

"Take a look at the bathroom facilities and see how these people really live," Ricci suggests.

An overhead nozzle is suspended from the center of the ceiling where forty residents are herded in for a shower. Four toilets are lined up against the wall with no dividers inbetween. Each toilet is minus a seat– probably because it makes cleaning purposes easier.

It's impossible to sit on one of the toilets and not get doused by water when the shower is running. Is this what you call privacy?

...Next on the agenda is "G" Building, one of the newer structures which houses children. Before you tour this building, the attendant on duty issues some words of warning to you.

You ask what the problems are for the residents here.

"Have you got a list....four toilets for a ward of 40 kids...we're undermanned–a ratio of one attendant for every 40 when the ratio should be one to five. Kids jump out of windows because there are no screens. They throw stuff out the windows.

"One kid smears feces against the wall. Another bites ears off constantly. These kids are rebelling against the sick environment which they've been put in. The problems will be clear to you when you see them."

You're cautioned to be on the alert as you roam through the ward. These residents are attracted to long hair, mustaches, and glasses.

As you slide across the downgrade floor which is stained with human secrement, the odor becomes stronger. Then the visual affect magnifies the total picture.

Kids, some nude, others shodly dressed herd around you. One, just as the attendant had predicted, grasps on to you and gives you a big hug. He goes to his bed and slaps on it as if to say "come sit with me." Others, less polite, come over and start to inspect your clothing.

Belchertown residents do not know what privacy is. This row of toilets, minus a divider of any sort, are used by the women confined to E Building.

Dr. Ricci invites you to inspect the bathroom, but after viewing the previous one, you decline the offer. As you exit the building, your lungs crave the fresh air. Your stomach becomes weak as you look up at the windows where a hundred children stand and watch. You can walk out that building and forget everything, but they have to stay in that building without any say whatsoever. The fallen sheets and clothes which the attendant spoke of, decorate the lawn outside.

Last on the tour is "K" Building, a rathole that houses profoundly retarded males. Dr. Ricci notices your pale face and says that the tour of this building won't be so bad because it will be a brief one. Ricci wants your imagination to carry after a quick look at "K".

The coat of paint that was prepared for Governor Sargent's visit, last spring, is now peeling off the wall. No residents are in sight. Dr. Ricci says that they are downstairs eating dinner.

"That's a relief," you say to yourself. But you better prepare yourself for the grand finale.

Ricci unlocks the door leading to the sleeping quarters. Forty beds are lined up back-to-back in 10 columns of four with a small aisle going up the middle row. Five of the beds have pillows. All have dirty, worn and tattered bed sheets.

Dr. Ricci goes to one of the beds and grabs a pillow. With a jack knife he slits it open and shows you the contents–horsehair.

"Filthy, rotten, horsehair! It's just filthy. If I took this to a private lab, it would probably fail. And this is for human beings."

"What else is wrong with the building?" you ask him.

"Everything that you could imagine, is wrong with this building. The toilets are a disgrace. The temperature is always too hot, it's terrible.

"It stinks, too. Too bad you can't record that."

With shattering impact, your tour of Belchertown State School has ended. You ask Dr. Ricci if the cruel and inhumane conditions that the mentally retarded residents are subjected to are illegal.

"Nothing is illegal at Belchertown," Ricci declares. "It's a fifty-year-old institution this year and its philosophy is still 50 years old."

"After 50 years, we still have degredation, dehumanization, and death. How many more years do we need? Five-hundred?"

Young children sleep in these beds placed side by side in the children's ward.

The crumbling porch of one of Belchertown's original buildings. This year marks the school's fiftieth year of operation.

Belchertown Controversy On WMUA

Tonight at 10 p.m., WMUA's "Focus" series will broadcast an open forum on the present conditions at Belchertown State School, where four residents have died since November 19th.

Ken Mosakowski's guests on tonight's live, 60-minute forum will be Joe Cozzolino, a staff psychologist at Belchertown and unit director in the Adult Training Program; Lee Douchkoff, coordinator of student volunteer programs at Belchertown; Tom Blanchette, president of Students Offering Support, a support group at UMass; Rich Geffin, an ACTION volunteer concerned with the legal rights of the retarded; and Carla Goulding, an ACTION volunteer assigned to the Behavior Modification Lab at Belchertown.

Interested listeners may call in questions during the live program at 545-2425 or 545-2876.

Veterans Affairs Establishes Job Bank

The Veterans Affairs Office is currently establishing a job bank for veterans. The program will include the recruiting of employers and employees. It will only deal with part-time employment.

As of Wednesday, November 29, 1972 a member from the Veterans Affair Office will approach different employers in the area. If interest is shown by the employer, the Veterans Office will select possible candidates for the job.

The Veterans Office urges all veterans to come to Room 239, Whitmore Hall to fill out an application if they are interested in possible part-time employment.

Self-flagellation

Student Attorney General Bert Emmons has come up with an interesting, even if not legal, way of reducing the amount of ripoffs in the University Store in the Campus Center: "Perhaps we could have everyone strip before entering the bookstore, and that way we could deter the shoplifting just a little." (There would probably also be an increase in the ripoffs of student clothing.)

When someone shoplifts in the store, they are not only ripping off the store, they are ripping off everyone who paid the campus center fee, $62.50. Shoplifting is one factor involved in keeping the fee so high. If the University Store loses, then so do the students.

When a shoplifter gets caught, he or she must appear before the student judiciary. Here, the student faces a fine of triple the amount of the stolen merchandise's value or five dollars. The student also can get quite humiliated over the whole situation. If caught a second time, he or she faces expulsion from the university.

Like it or not, students must pay the Campus Center fee.

In a few years, the Campus Center fee will rise to the astounding price of near $90. Since it is a fact of life that we have to pay the fee, we must learn to live with it by keeping it down as much as possible. Ripoffs must stop or we may all go broke paying for them.

Trouble In Senateland

About a month ago the Collegian published an editorial admonishing the Student Senate to get to work and stop playing petty internal political games while they were supposed to be defending student interests. Unfortunately, things have gotten even worse since then, and the whole mess came to a head Wednesday night when Student Government President Larry Ladd addressed the Senate in executive session concerning what he termed the "internal problems" of the Senate. While executive session excludes all non-senators, including this writer, I was able to find out what went on from a few people who were there, and who shall remain nameless here.

The major thrust of Ladd's speech was that a few Senate committees, Budgets, Matters, and Governmental Affairs, were not doing their jobs, while their chairmen were politicking or just sitting around digging the game of Student Senate.

Ladd was wrong in a few ways, but in more ways he was right. It's doubtful that any of the three chairmen involved are just playing games, or being members of the club. Politicking is another matter. However, the three committees aren't producing the way they should be, and since both sides of the controversy will only give a biased, almost verbatim policy line on why they're right, I've had to come up with my own analysis of what I think is wrong by taking what I already know and throwing out the trash of the various arguments I've heard.

The first committee Ladd spoke about was Budgets committee, which he took to task for being behind schedule in the process of budgeting the various student groups that come before them. The budgeting process is extremely difficult, and Ladd probably knows this, but the problem is not that the chairman isn't working, it's that he's spreading himself too thin, being an area government president in addition to his chairmanship. But a bill which came up in the Senate last week should solve that problem. It concerns what the bill termed "interlocking directorships", which is the holding of offices or jobs by one person which create a conflict of interests. While there is no real conflict of interests involved here, except when area budgets come before Budgets committee, the problem will be solved, since the person in question is being forced to give up his presidency early next semester.

The problem with Matters committee is a different one. Matters had a lot to do this semster, including the setting up of a review board for the student judiciary system and a review of the Student Code of Conduct. Both have been neglected up to this point. While Matters has had to handle a large amount of business this year, as have all other committees, there is no good reason for this neglect happening. One of the reasons it has occurred is that the chairman of the committee has spent too much time being a politician. In this instance, Ladd was right. The Senate is a political body, there's no doubt of that, but politics have to be put aside while work is being done, and some people are forgetting that.

Governmental Affairs is yet another story. While the committee should be doing things like sponsoring a constitutional convention, it finds itself way behind in its work, considering the constitutions of clubs and the like. The fault in this case lies with the chairman, but for a different reason. Governmental Affairs is a strange committee. Some chairmen from other committees are seated on it, and while they are good in an advisory capacity, they can't be expected to do regular committee work while they have their own committee to look after. As for the regular committee members, they for the most part just haven't been working, and this is where the chairman is at fault. He has not demonstrated the ability to get the people who aren't working to work. Instead, he does what he can with the people who will work, and that isn't enough. Since what's wrong with the committee comes down on his head, as it did in landslide proportions Wednesday night, he ought to realize that he won't get anything done until his comittee gets a boot for not working. He ought also to realize that he's the person who has to do the booting. If he's incapable of it, he shouldn't balk if the President sends in a "special assistant" to do his job for him.

Although the idea behind Ladd's speech was right, the reasons he used for why he was right were off the mark. But that has already been discussed. The major fault of Ladd's presentation was that he chose to do it before the whole Senate. While the reason he gives for this is that he wanted the internal politics of the Senate out of the back room, there was no reason why he had to slap people's wrists in front of the whole Senate. He could have dealt with the problem without going into the "back room", and left it on a person to person basis. The way he did it was both offensive to those he did it to, and less effective than he wanted it to be, since the average senator that I spoke with came out thinking that Ladd was crying in public.

Until the gap between the "powers that be" in the Senate closes, no real work can be done. Already the gap has taken its toll with the loss of two of Ladd's assistants, two of the best people the Senate has seen in a while. The politicking and pettiness was not the overriding reason for leaving in either case, but it was a factor in both, and that's a shame.

With the first semester drawing to a close the Senate has yet to heed the Collegian editorial of a month ago, and the internal bullshit continues. Until it stops the Senate will continue to go downhill on a road that takes the interests of UMass students and a tremendous amount of wasted potential with it.

The Rape Of America

This is not for the nice middle-class American, regardless of race, creed, or color. It is time for you to do some addition. War upon countries is a physical and social disaster when wielded with the destructive weapons of the military. Yet a media war is a war without end with the prize being that of the Keeper of the Keys. If one is able to subjugate the middle-classes of a society, one controls that society, whether under the auspices of Democracy or Communism, both are irrelevant in the face of media enslavement and the loss of personal and social freedom. A media war has been running and now the first battles are being waged. What are they fighting? Dirty words? Mislaid thoughts? Sources with no bearing on the present? Why are there now silent media martyrs?

The matters being thrust at are the sources of America's truth; the weapon is a Supreme Court ruling. People are sitting in the depths of the American judicial process chained for believing in their own integrity and that of their audiences. What does this mean to you, who are a comfortable middle-class American?

Let me speculate upon this war just a little. People are out of work, more than in a long time, and it is a proveable fact of history that when men are idle and their families hungry, revolution occurs (prime example-French Revolution). Let us also consider that very soon the only class with anything to lose will be the middle-class. Crime in our century is the token of internal revolution. Soon the middle-class will be buying bigger and better services to protect their families until the SuperDuper Peeper service observes you and what you own twenty-four hours a day. Constant Surveillance! Now is the time for two plus two equals 1984. Add the last factor of uncontrolled wiretapping, to the loss of media integrity, the social dissent upon the lower social stratas (crime), and the middle-class is to lose all that it has.

If you have never examined George Orwell's, 1984, take a close look, do you ever see the enemy, could you ever know him as anything but the media spectre? Everything is a media spectre nothing is real. Every last detail that is circulated to the masses is modified and changed. The war is unreal even down to the attacks; the government and Big Brother controls all, in controlling the integrity of the mass media.

So what is being fought? Impotent charges of obscenity? Very soon the whole of America may even believe the truth to be an obscenity. If you think my addition wrong let us finish with an exercise. Who do you want to be your Big Brother? Since he is overthrowing your country through the judicial system, it would tend to make one think that he was a lawyer. Next Big Brother must be making a lot of very rich friends, very happy, as these are the people who will be the only ones to afford immunity in the media war. Whatever the spectre of Big Brother will be or his replacement, as he can be replaced just as easily as any other media phantom, the machine to 1984 is beginning. If the integrity of the mass media is violated and actually accepted, prepare yourself, for the rape of America has just begun.

The Great Emasculation

To The Editor:

The following article appeared on the front page of The Sage Revisited's December 3 issue. I feel its significance extends beyond Orchard Hill, so I am submitting it for publication in The Collegian.

The agenda of the Academic Policy Committee for November 16 included a proposed letter to Dr. Gage (Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs). It contained a request for a sum of money to help provide for a position of coordinator for certain Hill programs.

As originally worded, the letter assured that, "Of course, we will only consider women and Third World candidates for this position, which is an expression of Orchard Hill's philosophy of integrating education with social responsibility". 'Social responsibility'?

After some debate, that statement was modified: "As an expression of Orchard Hill's philosophy of integrating education and social responsibility, we will actively seek out women and Third World candidates for this position". The phrasing is altered, but its meaning is obvious and unchanged. Asinine and insultory over-appeasement of women and the Third World community has–and probably will continue to–spread over the Hill.

Appointing token Blacks and women to committees and offices (solely or primarily on the basis of color, affiliation or sex) is the ultimate slur on that appointer's character. Authority implies responsibility, and an inability to evaluate a person for a job on criteria no more pertinent than color, sex or affiliation smacks of "dirty politics" at its worst. Moreover, one who accepts a position with the knowledge that he/she was selected mainly due to some superfluous label is likely to find his/her self-confidence debilitated, not to mention the lack of respect which will be felt for the employer.

A referendum for Grayson House (if it is ever presented) will address itself to the question of allowing four more Third World members onto its house council. There is currently only one Third World member; in order to equal representation to be achieved, one or two (not four) more members should be added to the council.

Cries that three Third World representatives will not be able to sufficiently "sway" the partisan Whites fall on deaf ears. There was no occasion last year in Grayson that the house council voted down–or even argued against–any proposal introduced by the (then) Black Corridor.

Equal representation must be granted to the Third World community. But the indiscriminate doling out of positions without regard to ratios is a clear violation of any government based on democracy and equal representation.

If Grayson passes the proposed measure (unless it has been amended to state that no more than two Third World members will join the house council) it will be a prime example of ass-kissing par excellence. The pseudo-liberal element will see itself as the great emancipators, while actually serving as the great emasculators of the principles of their dorm's government.

These two examples should make students question whether we are to allow university and Hill authorities to continue to abandon reason and principle for the sake of unethically seeking favor with–and otherwise coddling–the Hill's special interest groups.

Southern U.

To The Editor:

Regarding Mr. G. Joseph Vinskey's letter:

Granted, the racism problem on UMass is too complex to be solved by five pages in last Tuesday's Collegian. However, the problem will not be solved by sitting back when a crisis such as Southern University occurs. The best time to get any point across is when that point is fresh in people's minds. The lack of coverage of black events on campus is inexcusable. Why haven't there been more letters complaining of discrimination? A person can scream ever so much about an issue, but people have to be ready to listen. Such an unfortunate shock as what happened at Southern University brings these issues into the limelight, and clarifies issues which have been most of the time fuzzy and non-descript. We have the liberty to ignore these problems in the name of a "free press" - blacks don't.

You say that "few, if any, black students have ever manifested a working interest in the Collegian". I got the implication from that statement that they should manifest this interest. Why is Mr. Vinskey so upset when they do?

One final note: What happened at Southern University was tragic, but it was a symptom of a far larger problem. Until blacks and whites are treated with equal respect, you expect this sort of thing, and maybe that's the main problem–we are expecting this sort of thing. The blacks got out and responded to a situation they saw in front of themselves–can we say we've done the same? Or rather, have we just sat back in our rooms saying that the whole mess will straighten itself out? Think about it...

To The Editor:

In rebuttal to Steven Lord's letter (12/1/72) regarding the Student Activities Fee:

It is disgusting hearing groups such as the Young Socialists Alliance, Student Homophile League, and Afro-American Society slandered by being called the products of "warped mentalities". According to Mr. Lord, it is warped to be fighting for necessary social change, fighting for the rights of oppressed groups, fighting to end the slaughter in Indochina. It is warped for gay students to organize to win the basic rights of sexual and social freedom, rights Gays have been denied for so long. Lord called the Afro-American Society "racist". The only racism involved in that statement is that of its author.

To equate the Campus Center rip-off with the interest groups on campus is idiotic. I agree: the Campus Center is run by the bureaucrats for the conventioneers against the students while being paid for by the latter. If Mr. Lord had any guts or sense he would attack the bureaucracy involved, instead of smearing Blacks, Gays, and political activists.

To quote Mr. Lord, "I came here to learn engineering, not to finance every idiotic scheme and activity..." The fact is, most of us did not come here to study engineering. Engineering is not the main concern on this campus. Universities have always been the centers of political and social change. Pull out your nose from your engineering books for a second Steven, and check history; maybe you'll learn something. To call campus groups representing political and social change "idiotic schemes" is a slap in the face of politically and socially repressed people all over the world. Perhaps, Mr. Lord, you should look beyond your own selfish and narrow mind and into the groups you saw fit to smear; what they represent and their goals. You just might return to your engineering with a slightly different attitude.

To The Editor:

To all pet owners who insist on bringing their furry little friends to class, please stop this shit, literally. Day after day, when we go into Herter 231 we have to strategically walk with our eyes open and nose closed in order to safely find a seat without stepping in it! When it happens once in a while, that wasn't too bad. But last week it consistently happened. We love animals just as much as anyone else does, but these people should have the courtesy or at least the decency to leave their pets at home, especially if these animals are not house-broken.

Pity the poor student who steps in it, pity the poor student who has to sit next to it, and really pity the poor custodian who has to clean it up. With all this trouble that you people create, wouldn't it be easier to leave your friend at home. Then you would have to put up with the shit that you are making us put up with. We're fed up with this shit!

To The Editor:

"If you see a shoplifter shoplifting...AT THE UNIVERSITY STORE" So ran the headline of an ugly little call to all would-be informers in Thurs.'s MDC. Be self-confidently on the side of the suspicious store employees, the downright paranoid store managers, and the general forces of right, incriminate a fellow student who needs help. There is no need to become further involved. You do not have to be a witness. Or if you wish to spare the deviant you can tell him you witnessed the shoplifting and you will give him a few seconds to drop it and run before you start screaming for help. The plea went on to remind us of responsibility to the University Store, to insinuate that the shoplifters are the ones responsible for the outrageous $60 a year to the C.C. Tribunal, and that they only have to take the embarrassment and harassment of the Student Senate Attorney General and the Student Judiciary or, once in a while, District Court–judge, d.a., police record, et al. The outcome of which may only be referal to a campus counselling service, a few Hail Marys, or an Act of Contrition.

It is amusing to see that when they blew their last year's attempt to deprive a student his education (for what its worth) over a purloined pen or required book he couldn't afford, they come up with this old nazi trick of making us our own betrayors therefore nervous and therefore easy prey for their plainclothes snakes. If shoplifting has an effect on our C.C. fee then why doesn't the presence of the conventioneers (the ones who try to make University women, and who drink at the Top of the Campus without membership). Its all an unfunny joke complete with R. Crumb character. Which brings up the question of ethics; if they are so indignant about theft how do they rationalize violating Crumb's copyright?:

All material here-in may be printed for free by any underground publication or other small enterprise. All fat capitalists who reprint without permission will be sued for breech of copyright! Nyahh!

Oh! Christmas Tree...

To The Editor:

Each year the Attorney for Students Office has been responsible for an important service rendered to the Amherst community and I have no reason to anticipate failure this year.

You see the Amherst-Pelham Boy Scout Troop supports itself by the sale of Christmas trees which it vends at the triangular intersection of North Pleasant Street and East Pleasant Street near the center of town. Many trees are stuck in the ground and await the warm hands of little children in their parents' arms come to buy them.

Eacy year University of Massachusetts undergraduate men and women covet these very same trees! So much so, in fact, that they liberate not one or two but several from the frosty ground that binds them.

Now the Chief of Police in Amherst, Mr. Francis Hart, and the University Chief, Mr. Red Blasko, are both jolly gentlemen to whom virtue veritably sings. For the first few nights that the trees adorn the grassy green locked in icy firmament, the Boy Scouts and the dutiful police officers maintain a careful watch to see that all is well.

By the third or fourth night their job is done. University students apprehended in the first full flight of liberated evergreen have taken up the posts left vacant by the scouts who sleep at home in warm and adequate beds. The students arrested first have, in the past, been permitted to do the penance of guard of the trees from midnight to morn rather than to celebrate the yuletide season as inmates of the Commonwealth. Students arrested later can expect to be in Court at Christmas time.

I wonder if this year will be any different. The Scouts are anxious for their rest and therefore ever watchful keep. The police are guardian and bend near the earth to touch the larcenous who would steal Christmas. If no students try to steal the evergreen, what will be done to put these public servants at rest?

Is the message clear, this time of year
To keep your hand from the Boy Scout's band
Of trees evergreen and branches lean
Or willst these fools, without their cools
In Hampshire jail, make pleas for bail?

Corrections

To The Editor:

The Women's Caucus at the School of Education appreciates the Daily Collegian's prominently placed coverage of Woman's Day at the Marathon, Ms. Collington and Ms. Melko familiarized those who were unable to attend these feminist activities with the variety and extent of that day. Because we want the community to know more about feminist issues in education, we would like to make some corrections in the November 15, page 1 story:

(1) The Women's Caucus could not hope to "share politics, feminism and life in general with all women." This is a noble goal and noble topics, but far beyond the time and experience constraints which we face. Instead we attempted to begin discussing "politics, feminism, personal and professional concerns as women and as educators."

(2) Ms. Marsha Forest, Ms. Allison Rossett, Ms. Kathy Girard (not Kathy Salisbury) and Ms. Ann Lieberman were responsible for the readings and provokative statements which began Woman's Day. The statements attributed to Ms. Salisbury were made by Ms. Girard. Ms. Salisbury and Ms. Wilson did in fact lead a discussion on sexism in the elementary schools.

(3) Ms. Rossett thinks that "satisfaction with womanage" (sic) should be clarified to mean that women will act in a way which is strong, independent and competent and that these actions will lead towards goals which they define for themselves. Sexist bias manifests itself in a low percentage of women professors (and other members of the school community) and not because of this low percentage.

(4) The high school women's discussion group was attended by high school women and teachers of high school women. The objective of this session was to share strategies for helping high school women become more active and responsible within their social relationships.

We are concerned with the accurate communication of these important issues. We hope this letter has offered a more complete understanding of Tuesday's feminist program.

Course Complaint

To The Editor:

Why is it that some people can get three credits for a course on European Military History while I can't even get one credit if I were to take two semesters of American Military History? No wires are attached to make it any different from other courses. I can drop it at any time, without lasting obligation. It also imposes no restrictions on my thinking at this "open-minded" university. Is it because this is an R.O.T.C. course I can be robbed of the credit I earned? Is it because "the majority" throws a fit every spring that the minority of students in R.O.T.C. can have this academic right taken away? Let's have academic freedom for all.

Observations On UMass

To The Editor:

As a newcomer to UMass (from the west coast) I feel compelled to share a couple of observations:

1) That the local students as well as the local residents seem to value the sometimes awesome beauty of the Amherst area and are apparently willing to take active steps to preserve it.

2) There seems to be a mutual trust and respect existing between local students and local residents that is not always evident in college towns.

3) The UMass/Amherst area has the total effect of making a stranger feel at home rather quickly--which is partly what it's all about, isn't it?

Alternatives

To The Editor:

Chanukah and Christmas are nearing-if they're not already here. Again, I am baffled and somewhat horrified by the huge amount of money spent by American conumers on holiday gifts--the 1970 estimate was eight billion dollars. Advertising costs must be outrageous as well. Everywhere shine the tinsel and lights signaling the time to buy.

I remembered a very special gift I received last year--a booklet entitled "Some friendly suggestions for holiday gifts and alternatives," a booklet published by the American Friends Service Committee. The booklet is now a year old, and its message is even older (though it somehow sounds new): give so it doesn't hurt. Included is a list of corporations which contribute to the war effort. This list may be outdated (hopefully the list is shorter in 1972), but the booklet is full of other exciting ideas for alternative giving.

Buy a live tree. Plant it in your yard, church, school, or park. Make your own decorations. Make your gifts: cook, sew, renew, build, plant, design, create. Share your materials, space, equipment so others can make gifts. Give a child a bag of scrap lumber with a hammer and nails. Teach someone a skill. Adopt a pet from the humane society. Make your cards and express in your own personal way your feelings about the essence of the holiday spirit. Send a check to a local peace organization in someone's name. Ask them to do the same for their gift to you.

The Friends have done America a service of peace. Write them for alternatives: American Friends Service Committee, New England Region, 48 Inman St., Cambridge, Mass. 02139. Give more of yourself this year.

Troy For President

To The Editor:

I should like to take this opportunity to announce my candidacy for the office of the Presidency of the United States. The year? 1980. Here, in very general terms, are a few of my programs.

1) Immediate, unilateral dismantling and destruction of all American weapons of war. There will be no more soldiers.

2) Relocation of urban residents to rural areas, resulting in a return to a primarily agrarian economy. Within five years, all the skyscrapers will be gone. Trees and flowers will take their places.

3) Cessation of almost all industrial and manufacturing operations. Devastation of the environment (and the human spirit) must stop.

4) Implementation of an educational system which will no longer emphasize the rudiments of grammar, mathematics and history, but which will instead emphasize the development of the capacity to love and the will to humane action.

The above, as well as all my other programs, will be elaborated upon during the course of the campaign, scheduled to begin in March of next year, Those among you who wish to find out more about my candidacy or offer constructive advice, or who may wish to help me bring my message to America, should feel free to contact me either by mail or telephone.

I might add, for those who would dismiss my candidacy either as a joke or as a utopian dream, that I am proceeding with the utmost seriousness and a sense of determination born out of the despair, sadness and desperation singular to our times.

All my life I've heard the world screaming. I can no longer accept it.

Tricky Dick's Latest

To The Editor:

I just thought I'd let people know, if they don't know already, that Tricky Dick has done it again. A few weeks ago, Congress appropriated money to aid in cleaning up our nation's waterways. At that time, President Nixon vetoed that bill.

However, this was not the last of it. This week, the Congress overrode Mr. Nixon's veto, and to counterattack again, our beloved president ordered that the monies provided for in that bill not be spent, going against those rights provided him by the constitution. Where will it all end?

Public Backs Reporters Rights

A new Gallup poll has found substantial support for a newsman's right to protect the confidentiality of his sources.

In interviews with 1,462 persons age 18 and over, Gallup researchers found 57 per cent with the view that reporters should not have to disclose the names of their sources in court. Thirty-four per cent said that newsmen should be required to disclose the names and 9 per cent had no opinion.

In announcing the results of the poll, George Gallup reported: "One argument frequently given by persons in the survey who think newsmen should not be required to reveal confidential sources is that decisions to foil newspaper reporters could eventually deplete the confidential sources on which newsmen rely to fulfill their responsibility to the public."

The interviews were conducted from Nov. 10 to 13 in 300 localities across the country. Each person was asked the following question:

"Suppose a newspaper reporter obtains information for a news article he is writing from a person who asks that his name be withheld. Do you think that the reporter should or should not be required to reveal the name of his man if he is taken to court to testify about the information in his news article?"

Varies With Education

The higher the education level. the greater the percentage of those who answered that the reporter should not be required to divulge his sources.

Sixty-eight per cent of those who had attended college, 55 per cent of the high school graduates and 48 per cent of those who had reached grade school felt that newsmen had the right to conceal the names of those who had given them information.

The pattern of responses to the question follows:

	Should Reveal	Should Not Reveal	No Opinion
Total sample	34%	57	9
Attended College	27	68	5
High School	37	55	8
Grade School	35	48	17

The issue of confidential sources has gained increasing attention since last June, when the United States Supreme Court ruled that a New York Times reporter, Earl Caldwell, did not have the right to refuse to testify before a grand jury about confidential interviews he had had with members of the Black Panther party.

2 Went To Jail

Since then, subpoenas have been issued to a number of newsmen across the country. Two reporters--Peter Bridge of Newark and William T. Farr of Los Angeles--have gone to jail for contempt of court after they refused to divulge sources.

Several public officials, including Governor Rockefeller, have supported the enactment of state "shield laws" to give explicit protection to newsmen. At least 18 states have such laws at present.

Mr. Gallup quoted an elderly homeowner as saying: "I don't like the big brother approach of requiring someone to reveal his sources. How's the newspaper reporter going to get information if he doesn't protect his sources?"

A 27-year-old data processor was quoted as saying: "If information is available that can help deal with a crime, then it should be revealed. The courts protect criminals enough as it is."

Teachers Needed To Help Navajos

ALBUQUERQUE--Educators responsible for the instruction of Navajo Indians in the Southwest were told here this week that 1,200 bilingual teachers wereneeded for more than 50,000 Navajo children but that fewer than 100 qualified and properly trained teachers were available.

Educators and tribal officials voted at a meeting held under the sponsorship of the University of New Mexico Department of Elementary Education to establish a Navajo language training center that would coordinate all training activities on reservations and at regional schools attended by Navajo children.

The center is intended to meet the critical shortage of bilingual teachers and to satisfy the increasing demand for more intensive training in the Navajo language by college and university students and business and professional people.

Dillon Platero, newly elected president of the Navajo Indian Education Association, has invited association members, Navajo teachers and parents, and representatives of government agencies to attend a conference to formulate plans for the proposed training center. The conference is to be held Jan. 17-18 at Window Rock, Ariz., the capital of the Navajo Nation.

Navajo students at the University of New Mexico who are attending this week's assembly here reported that a recent survey showed that more than two-thirds of 5-year-old and 6-year-old Navajo children entering reservation schools and public schools elsewhere lack a sufficient knowledge of English to comprehend English-only teaching.

A reported tenfold increase in enrollment in Navajo language courses at two state universities in New Mexico and a revision of the Navajo-English dictionary were cited by those attending the meeting as significant grounds for confidence that Navajo is no longer facing the danger of extinction as a written language. They pointed out that a language such as Navajo, which is predominantly oral rather than written, is most vulnerable to extermination.

Officials at the University of New Mexico said that the Navajo language program, which was started three years ago with a beginner's class for fewer than 20 students, now comprises four fluency level courses with a total enrollment of 182.

Classes have also been introduced at the Farmington campus of New Mexico State University.

Dead Girl In Brockton Identified

BROCKTON, Mass. (AP)-A young woman whose body was found last week in a community park has been identified as a 21-year-old New York girl who had been working in the Boston area as a taxi driver.

Capt. W. Roger Higgins of the Brockton detective force said the girl, who had been strangled and sexually attacked, was identified Saturday by her parents as Sandra J. Ehramjian of East Meadow, Long Island, N.Y. and Cambridge, Mass. She had been working in the Boston area for the past three months, Higgins said.

The detective said his department had uncovered no clues leading to the girl's assailant.

The partially clothed body was discovered Tuesday by a man walking through the large VFW Field park in the northwest part of town. The body was lying about 15 feet from the road near Waldo Lake.

Higgins credited an Associated Press Wirephoto of the girl's body in leading to her identification. Two persons in Northampton who saw the picture in newspapers and recognized the dead girl called Northampton and Massachusetts State Police.

The girl's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Aram Ehramjian, flew to Brockton Saturday and made the positive identification.

Higgins said Miss Ehramjian had spent one year each at Hempstead College and Potsdam College before coming to Boston to work.

She left Nov. 26 to visit her parents in New York, telling friends that she planned to return to Cambridge in four days.

Dawn Coyote Sets In The West

By TONY GRANITE

LEGISLATIVE WATCHDOGS are cropping up on campuses around these USA, according to reports from the student media.

Latest intelligence comes from the Vanguard of Portland (Ore.) State U., which tells of PSU's membership in the Oregon Student Association, "whose purpose is to introduce Oregon college students to the structure and mechanics of the Oregon State Legislature."

Denying that OSA is a lobbying organization, Vanguard quotes a spokesman: "There is a great need to keep students aware of the decisions that are affecting them, and to let them know they can express their satisfaction or dissatisfaction with these laws."

TENANT RIGHTS are being explained to students at UTenn-Knoxville, according to a dispatch in the Daily Beacon there. The Student Senate is preparing a booklet for Fall distribution which will tell students of their rights and responsibilities as tenants, plus consumer hints.

A POLLING PLACE has been approved by the Brazos County Commissioners Court to be established on the campus of Texas A&M, according to a page one piece in the Battalion.

But not in time for the November elections. A plan worked out by members of Student Government divides the College Station precinct into three precincts, including one composed of the University campus. The community precinct has had a voting population of 3,718 which, according to state law, exceeded a maximum 2,000 voters per precinct.

The realignment involves 1,040 registered voters on campus, of some 6,000 students in residence. Tentative location for the polling place is the Memorial Student Center, effective Mar. 1, 1973.

CONSERVATION PIECE - add to clever names students give to the publications: "Dawn Coyote" for the literary magazine of Dawson Junior College, Montana.

But it didn't last. The magazine was reported disconintued for the latest edition of the Directory of the College Student Press In America.

CATCHING UP - we missed it when it appeared on page one of The Ranger Rocket, Spring 1971, the headline reading, "16 to compete for 'Miss' title."

Must have been before the liberation. Anyway, RR is the student newspaper of Northwest Mississippi Junior College. Its flag claims it to be "Mississippi's Only Junior College Weekly Newspaper."

Harvard Medical Professor To Lecture At Hampshire

Jonathan R. Beckwith of the Harvard University Medical School will lecture at Hampshire College on Wednesday, December 6, for the Science and Public Policy series. He will talk about "Science for the People" at 8 p.m. in the main lecture hall of the Academic Building.

After earning both his B.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard, Professor Beckwith did post-graduate work at Princeton University, the MRC Microbial Genetic Research Unit of Hammersmith Hospital in London, and at the Institut Pasteur in Paris. Associated with the Department of Bacteriology and Immunology at Harvard's Medical School from 1956 through 1968, he became a professor in the Department of Microbiology and Molecular Genetics in 1969.

Dr. Beckwith has over four dozen publications in his field. He has also published on the relationships of science, the scientist, and social responsibility.

The Science and Public Policy lectures are open to the public without charge.

Former Giant Discusses Recreation

Jim McClean former major league baseball player with the San Francisco Giants and Springfield Giants will be a guest speaker on Tuesday evening at 7:30 in CC 163.

Jim is presently working for the Park Department in Springfield as District Supervisor in the low economic areas of the North End and the Hill. His work is unique in that he plans, directs, and supervises all of the recreational activities in this area.

As a guest speaker Jim will discuss his role in the development of the community and what he believes the needs of the community are. Everyone is invited.

An ELECTION FOR CCEBS Undergraduate Student Representatives to the CCEBS Board of Directors will be held on Tuesday, Dec. 5, from 6:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. in the lobby of New Africa House. Every CCEB student is encouraged to vote and should vote. Voting will be by ballot and the representatives will be determined by popular vote.

Women Eng. Majors' Workshop

The English Department will present a workshop on career opportunities for women English majors on Wednesday, December 6, 7:00 P.M., in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. This workshop will focus on the problems and possibilities of using an English major after graduation: a consideration of job openings, stereotyped job counseling, and the relationship between marriage, families and a career. There will be a variety of participants–students, faculty and counselors from the Everywoman's Center. This is the first in a series of workshops on career opportunities for English majors.

Sexuality Film

The School of Nursing sponsors a film, Communications in Human Sexuality, tomorrow at 4-5 p.m. in the Public Health Auditorium.

We are fortunate to be able to borrow from the area Planned Parenthood Coordinator this excellent Canadian film. It is done by a married team of psychologists who were trained by Masters & Johnson. There are only 3 copies of the film in North America.

Very important concepts in understanding and helping people with sexual problems are covered, in an informative and entertaining way. It is highly recommended for faculty and students.

Law Conf. Registration Today

Registration for the January Law Conference, sponsored by the University Legal Studies Faculty, will begin today in room 211 SBA. The registration will continue from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. through this Friday. Students may change their choice of courses and events when the conference begins on January 4th, but must indicate their intended participation and pay the $5 lab fee this week.

The Law Conference will present over 20 different courses ranging from three to twenty hours each and covering such widely diverse subjects as "Law and Abortion", "Programmed Introduction to Law", "Mystical Elements in the Judging Process", and an analysis of a filmed trial of a Denver Black Panther. A complete list and description of courses is available during the registration period in room 211 and room 308 SBA. Instructors will be drawn from many departments of the University, the five colleges, and local residents.

The courses will be offered for credit for those students who wish to obtain up to 6 credits. In order to receive credit a student must complete the individual instructor's requirements and keep a continuing journal in which he describes and synthesizes his conference experiences. The journal and the courses will be evaluated on a pass-fail basis. Since the conference is scheduled modularly, with some courses granting as little as 1/4 credit, the journal's purpose will be to encourage the student to integrate his many experiences into a personally and educationally meaningful whole.

The conference will be limited to 90 persons in order to maintain small group instruction of a high quality. Admission will be on a first come - first served basis, although a few courses require the permission of the instructor. A number of events such as evening movies related to law will be open to the general public. The coordinators of the conference, Steve Arons and Dick Hartzler, stressed that courses are open to faculty and staff in the five college area as well as students. Further information is available from either Professor Arons or Professor Hartzler by calling 545-2793 or 545-2054.

National Exchange Program Offers Excitement, Travel

Would the possibility of participating in the National Exchange Program and studying in another state institution within the U.S. turn you on to adventure? Does the thought of new experiences, new people, new courses for a semester or perhaps a year excite your desire to travel?

In an effort to provide interesting and pertinent information concerning the National Exchange Program, the Textiles, Clothing, and Environmental Arts Liaison Committee of the School of Home Economics is sponsoring an informal gathering of students in the School of Home Economics.

The program will consist of brief comments from students involved in the exchange program. Representatives from universities all over the United States will comment on their schools and be available for questioning. Some catalogues, applications, and tuition information will also be available.

The program will be held tonight at 7:00 in Skinner Hall, Room 300. Interested students and teachers are more than welcome; refreshments will be served.

An Expert's Advice On Christmas Trees

(AP) — A man who has been giving advice about Christmas trees for years will help select your tree this year.

Alex Dickson of the New York State Cooperative Extension Service, Cornell University, is a specialist. He reminds that tradition and folklore have glorified evergreen and coniferous trees and that the Christmas tree still has great religious significance although the origin of much of its symbolism has been obscured by time.

Hessian soldiers are credited with bringing the idea of the Christmas tree to this country at the time of the Revolutionary War. But growing them specifically for use at Christmas was not taken seriously until after World War II.

Here are Dickson's thoughts:

1. All pines hold their needles well-even better than firs. Scotch pine, not Balsam fir, is the most popular.

2. Buy a fresh tree, which will keep its needles longer. The drying of a tree is indicated by the dropping of green needles. Brown or yellow needles drop because of natural aging processes.

3. Two-thirds taper of a tree is generally accepted as a desirable shape. Actually, a 50 per cent taper would be very narrow.

4. There should be a "handle" several inches long to provide good anchorage and to soak up water. The stump is what is left in the ground. Handle designates the basal part of the christmas tree stem that fits into a stand.

5. Research has shown conclusively that sugar and aspirin, used in solution with water in which the tree is kept, do not benefit the tree in any way.

6. Finally, spruce and hemlock do not make very good greens for indoor use.

Christmas trees kept in a water reservoir not only will stay green and fresh longer but will thus have fire protection. Be sure there is ample water in the bucket.

Items that make good holiday greenery are holly, firethorn, pine, juniper, laurel, rhododendron, azalea and bayberry. Keep them in water in a cool place until you are ready to use them.

Alex Dickson is co-author with Fred E. Winch, Jr., of a booklet on Plantation Production of Christmas Trees in New York State. He estimates that almost 50 million Christmas trees are sold in this country each year, including about 30 varieties.

Snow Storm Parking Policy

The major objective of snow removal activities at times of severe storms is to make it possible to hold classes and conduct all University activities in as normal a way as possible. In order to facilitate snow removal, parking will be prohibited in the following lots between the hours of 1 a.m. and 7 a.m., from December 1 to April 1, as provided for in the Motor Vehicle Regulations Manual approved by the Board of Trustees.

Lot #1, #2, #4, #5, #6, #11, #12, #13, #14, #N.

Overnight parking will continue to be available in lots other than those listed.

Since the plan described above provides for only a little more than half of the parking spaces used on a normal day, it is suggested that all persons who normally bring a car onto campus consider the following possibilities during heavy snow:

a. Pool rides with others whenever possible.

b. Walk if it is at all possible to do so.

c. Have someone drop you off so that the car does not have to be left on campus and so that the snow removal job during daylight hours is facilitated.

d. If space is not available in your assigned lot, go to one of the other lots listed because under such emergency conditions, it is not possible to guarantee that normally assigned space will be available.

e. Make use of the Campus Center garage (open 24 hours a day).

f. Make use of the new bus service to the campus to be initiated this winter under the Department of Transportation grant.

The Town of Amherst ban on overnight street parking also goes into effect December 1 through April 1 from 2 a.m. to 8 a.m. on all public streets. Overnight parking is permitted in the Lincoln St., Pray St. and Amity St. Parking Lots until 9 a.m. during this period.

Bongiorno Wins First Prize

Assistant Professor Robert J. Bongiorno of the UMass Department of French and Italian has received first prize in an international competition of the Studium Dantis.

Contestants from throughout the world submitted essays in Italian and their native languages on the theme "Dante in the Space Age."

Dr. Bongiorno writes that "Since the natural world is infinite, or essentially infinite, all of the technological extensions of the human brain will not allow man to understand it." Dante's medieval poem "The Divine Comedy" shows, says the UMass professor, "that time and space travel are possible, are only possible through an act of the poetic imagination (which) possesses the magic power necessary to travel freely through the infinite realms of the universe and to fuse the contraries in order to comprehend the great Unity."

Pre-Meds, Dents, Vets

The Pre-Medical Advisory Committee is now taking applications for the pre-professional programs. If you are interested, fill out an application (which can be found in Room 217, Hasbrouck Lab.) before December 15. You may not be a pre-med, dent, or vet major without going through this interview, and application procedure.

Nicklaus Takes Disney Golf

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) - Jack Nicklaus, playing with the awesome majesty of which only he seems capable, scored a nine-stroke triumph Sunday in the Walt Disney World Open golf tournament and pushed his season's earnings to an incredible $320,542.

Nicklaus crushed any wouldbe challengers with a final round 64, eight under par on the 7,222-yard Magnolia course.

His 72-hole total of 267, 21 under par, was the best on the tour this season.

His season total of seven victories was the most on the tour since Arnold Palmer-who failed to qualify for the last two rounds in this final event of the season-won eight in 1960.

His winning margin was a record for the season.

And, his money-winning figure made him the first player in history to reach the $300,000 plateau for a single year. He accumulated the total in only 19 tournaments, an average of $16,871 in winnings for every start.

Nicklaus won major titles in the U.S. Open and the Masters, also took the crowns in the Bing Crosby, Doral-Eastern, Westchester, and U.S. Match Play and finished second four times including in the British Open.

"He's so good," said Sam Snead, a 60-year-old legend from another golfing era, "he could try not to win and still back into it."

Snead bolted into the list of leaders with a 65 that put him in a large group at 278.

Jim Dent, a one-time caddy at the Augusta National course and the only man to challenge Nicklaus in the final round, Bobby Mitchell and Larry Wood tied for second at 276. Wood had a 65, Mitchell 66 and Dent a 71.

The trio at 277 were veterans Bob Goalby, Frank Beard and Bert Yancey. Yancey and Beard matched 69s and Goalby had a 70.

Dent actually held the lead for a few moments until Nicklaus got his game in gear.

Dent, a 30-year-old tour regular who has yet to win, ran in a 15-foot eagle putt on the fourth hole that vaulted him into a one-stroke advantage.

Only minutes later, however, he bogeyed the fifth from a bunker and Nicklaus made a birdie for a one-stroke lead.

Jack again pushed it to two when he made a birdie deuce from eight feet on the sixth hole.

Nicklaus birdied the next one and it never again was in doubt. A string of three Nicklaus birdies beginning on the 13th just made it a question of how low his total would be.

No. 1 USC Not Upstaged By Auburn, Sooners

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
Associated Press Sports Writer

The unbeaten Trojans of Southern California are certain to remain first in the hearts of their countrymen and the ballots of the pollsters after trimming Notre Dame 45-23, but Auburn and Oklahoma have some friends, too. Here's proof:

—"In 22 years I have always hesitated to put one of my teams ahead of any of the others, but today I'm putting this team at the top of the list," said Auburn's Shug Jordan. His ninth-rated Cinderella Tigers spoiled second-ranked Alabama's bid for a perfect record 17-16 Saturday, scoring all their points in the final period, including two touchdowns on blocked punts.

—"This is the best team I have ever coached," glowed Oklahoma's Chuck Fairbanks after the third-ranked Sooners whipped No. 20 Oklahoma State 38-15 and won the Big Eight championship.

However, most of the glory on the final weekend of the college football campaign belonged to Southern Cal.

Saturday's unquestionable hero was Trojan sophomore Anthony Davis, who scored six touchdowns, including a 97-yard return of the opening kickoff and a 96-yard duplicate after 10th-ranked Notre Dame pulled within 25-23 late in the third period. Davis also had scoring runs of one, five, four and eight yards.

"This is the best team I've had since I've been at USC," said Coach John McKay, not to be outdone by Jordan and Fairbanks. McKay is in his 13th season and has only to beat Ohio State in the Rose Bowl to clinch his third national title.

Elsewhere, 11th-ranked Louisiana State struggled past Tulane 9-3 on fourth-period field goals by Juan Roca and Rusty Jackson.

Time ran out with the losers inside the LSU one-yard line. No. 12 Tennessee, the Tigers' Astro-Bluebonnet Bowl opponent, downed Vanderbilt 30-10 behind the record-breaking running of Haskel Stanback.

Friday's Sports Head was Jim Plunkett, the New England Patriots backup quarterback.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Actress Jane Russell is a serious student of astrology and numerology. She w born when the Sun was in the final degree of Gemini and with Cancer on the ascendant of her horoscope. She represents a classic combination of the two signs, Gemini and Cancer.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look ahead toward travel and greater ability to com- publicity campaign. Fine now for writing, publishing, adding to knowledge. Begin study of foreign language. Catch up on correspondence.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Strive for greater independence. One who controls budget is willing to give if you display originality, enthusiasm. Be inventive. Means adhere to individual style. Don't follow crowd. Check needs of dependents.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Time now is on your side. Refuse to be stampeded into hasty decisions. Protect security. Check legal papers. Consult mate, partner. Co-operate with Aquarian. Be aware of need for public relations. Your story deserves to be told.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Work and health prove dominant factors. Don't try to accomplish too much at once. Light touch wins. Avoid one who insists, chides. Good humor now is essential. Make plans which include visits, travel.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Affairs which concern children, schools, investments are apt to be paramount. Stress creativity. Tear down in order to rebuild. You need not be confined, restricted. Key is to accept change. Get rid of outmoded concepts.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Conflict could exist between duty and desire. Key is to be analytical. Be sure what you think you want is actually for you. Gemini could be involved. You probably would do best by remaining home for time being.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Entertain relatives, neighbors at home. Stress diplomacy. Make conciliatory gesture to family member. Display versatility, sense of humor. You may be called upon to perform many tasks. You are capable.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Money, personal possessions these are emphasized. Don't give up something of value for mere promise. Pisces is apt to be in picture. Take inventory. Know what it is you want, what you are willing to give in return.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Lunar position coincides with chance to succeed in new enterprise. Take initiative. Trust your own judgment. Accent personality, appearance. Lead rather than follow. You are called upon to perform special mission.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 21): Work behind scenes. One you have doubts about may make unusual proposal. Visit friend who is temporarily confined. Adhere to principles of Golden Rule. Aries figures prominently. Be discreet. Secret is revealed.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friends, hopes and wishes this area is spotlighted. Welcome new contacts. What appears a casual meeting could develop into meaningful relationship. Know it and respond accordingly. Surprise is due.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Reputation may be on the line. Realize this and refuse to be exploited. Know difference between genuine admiration and false flattery. Set sights on goal. You get what you want if steady pace is maintained.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a frank individual. You usually mean what you say. Not everyone likes you, but most persons admire your basic honesty. You have been through a trying period. Your efforts, however, will be rewarded. August will be your most significant month in 1973.

Pro Football Roundup

Bengals Stop Giants, 13-10

By BILL WINTER
Associated Press Sports Writer

CINCINNATI (AP)–Quarterback Ken Anderson threw one touchdown pass and coolly directed Cincinnati's error-plagued offense while reserve linebacker Doug Adams intercepted two passes as the Bengals defeated the New York Giants 13-10 Sunday in a National Football League battle.

Anderson, regaining his starting role after relinquishing it to Virgil Carter for one game, completed 17 of 34 passes for 217 yards. His three-yard scoring aerial to Bruce Coslet late in the third period gave the Bengals a 13-3 margin and proved the insurance the Bengals needed against a late New York rally.

The victory lifted the Bengals to a 7-5 season mark and kept alive their hopes for a "wild card" playoff berth in the American Conference.

The Giants, who scored 62 points against Philadelphia a week ago, were dominated by the Bengals. They dropped to 7-5 despite the 119-yard rushing performance of Ron Johnson and saw their playoff hopes diminished.

The Bengals held a 6-3 half-time lead on the strength of two Horst Muhlman field goals and started the clinching drive after Lemar Parrish returned a New York punt 28 yards to the Giant 39 in the third period. Anderson found Coslit alone in the Giant end zone for the 13-3 lead.

Quarterback Randy Johnson, who came on in the third period when Norm Snead was unable to move the Giants, directed New York on an 80-yard scoring drive late in the fourth period–the touchdowns coming on an eight-yard pass to wide receiver Don Herrman.

The extra point by Pete Gogolak, who had kicked a 15-yard field goal in the second period, brought the Giants within the final 13-10 margin.

NO, HE'S NOT CRYING about the Patriot's latest defeat, he's crying about a loss his high school team took this weekend in Kansas. His name is Terry Witherspoon. (AP Wirephoto).

Steelers Blank Browns

By GARY MIHOCES
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP)–Franco Harris ran for 102 yards and two touchdowns as the Pittsburgh Steelers, hungry for the first title in their 40-year history, trounced the Cleveland Browns 30-0 Sunday and seized the lead in the American Football Conference Central Division.

Both teams entered the game tied for first with 8-3 records, but the difference was Harris, who tied Jim Brown's all-time pro record of six straight 100-yard rushing games.

The Steelers jumped to a 3-0 lead in the opening period on a 36-yard field goal by Roy Gerela that followed a fumble by Cleveland's Bo Scott.

Harris, who needs just 40 yards to become the fifth pro rookie ever to reach 1,000 yards rushing, made it 10-0 in the second quarter on a one-yard touchdown plunge that followed a 57-yard drive.

Harris added his 10th touchdown of the season in the third period on an 11-yard run.

Pittsburgh added 13 insurance points in the final period on a 78-yard touchdown pass from Terry Bradshaw to tight end John McMakin and field goals of 44 and 37 yards by Gerela.

The Browns, who edged Pittsburgh 26-24 two weeks ago in Cleveland, made their deepest penetration in the first quarter when they drove 52 yards to the Steeler 29-yard line.

However, Don Cockroft missed on a 37-yard field goal that would have tied the game at 3-3, and the Steelers were never headed.

Raiders Over Chargers

SAN DIEGO (AP)–Charlie Smith swept nine yards for a touchdown with 1:18 to play Sunday as the Oakland Raiders, taking advantage of a missed San Diego field goal, beat the Chargers 21-19 and clinched a National Football League playoff berth.

Smith's burst culminated an 80-yard Oakland march after San Diego's Dennis Partee missed a 33-yard field goal try with four minutes to play.

The Raiders, who hadn't scored since late in the second quarter, then came to life.

Quarterback Daryle Lamonica hit a 15-yard pass to Fred Biletnikoff and three plays later lofted a 40- yarder to rookie Mike Siani, moving the ball to the San Diego 28.

Speedster Cliff Branch caught the next pass for 19 yards and then Smith, a fifth-year pro from Utah, followed a wall of blockers into the end zone, giving the Raiders their fifth division championship in six years.

The Chargers lost a final chance when Partee's 51-yard field goal try fell short as time ran out.

The Raiders rally erased a San Diego comeback which had been led by Mike Garrett, who rushed for 145 yards on 27 carries.

The Chargers, trailing 14-10 at halftime, took the lead midway in the third quarter after Leonard Dunlap returned an Oakland punt 21 yards to the San Diego 48.

On the next play, John Hadl hit Gary Garrison at the Oakland 30 and Garrison outran his pursuers for a 52-yard touchdown play. Art Thoms blocked the conversion attempt.

Pats Lose Again

By DAVE O'HARA
Associated Press Sports Writer

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Coach Don Shula of the Miami Dolphins has a long memory and made sure his players didn't forget the past before their National Football League game with the New England Patriots Sunday.

Mindful of losses on New England invasions the last two years, the unbeaten Dolphins swept to their 12th victory 37-21 as Larry Csonka went over the 1,000-yard mark ground gaining for the second consecutive season and Garo Yepremian booted three field goals.

Shula, who took over the Dolphins in 1970, admitted only that "we discussed what happened in our last two games here". However, star middle linebacker Nick Buoniconti hinted it was more than a little discussion.

"He mentioned it all week long, at just about every opportunity," Buoniconti said. "There was no way we could forget."

The Dolphins were upset when the Patriots scored just before half time to narrow Miami's lead to 13-7. However, they broke away after intercepting a New England screen pass early in the third period.

"Well, at the turning point," New England Coach Phil Bengtson said. "If we had completed it, it would have been a good gainer. Not only did we lose the gainer, but we lost the ball."

Csonka, who was rested in the last stages after Miami built a comfortable lead, was awarded the game ball for gaining more than 1,000 yards by rushing.

Csonka failed to score but picked up 91 yards and boosted his total for the season to 1,016 with a 45-yard third period burst which set up Yepremiam for his third field goal of the game and 18th of the season.

The Dolphins joined the 1934 Chicago Bears and the 1969 Minnesota Vikings as the only teams to win 12 games in a row in NFL history. Miami is bidding for the league's first perfect season since the Bears' 11-0 mark in 1942.

As expected, Csonka, Mercury Morris, Jim Kiick and company wrecked New England with an awesome ground attack. However, Earl Morrall went to the air twice for touchdowns, passing three yards to Jim Mandich and 14 yards to Marlin Briscoe as the Dolphins broke open the game in the third quarter.

Jets, 18-17

NEW YORK (AP) - Bobby Howfield's sixth field goal, a 42-yarder as the final gun sounded, carried the New York Jets to an 18-17 victory Sunday over the New Orleans Saints, keeping alive the Jets' slim National Football League playoff hopes.

The Jets, bidding for the "wild card" playoff spot in the American Conference, raised their record to 7-5 to remain in contention with Cleveland, 8-4, and Cincinnati, 7-5.

It appeared New York, trailing 17-15, had lost their last opportunity to overtake the 2-9-1 Saints when Howfield missed a 48-yarder with about three minutes to play.

But, after stopping the Saints' offense and forcing a punt, New York took over at its own 15-yard line.

Pass interference penalties against safety Doug Wyatt and cornerback Billie Hayes moved the ball tc the New York 48. Joe Namath then passed to Rich Caster for 16 yards and Steve Harkey ran three yards to the Saint 33.

A penalty set the Jets back, but Harkey carried again, this time for five yards to the 35 and Howfield rushed onto the field to kick the game-winner as the final seconds ticked away.

His earlier field goals came from 30, 39, 31, 12 and 33 yards.

Grapplers Pin Yale

bronze medalist in canoeing in the Summer Olympics. He could have used the paddle to keep off his back, but it probably wouldn't have helped anyhow as Benson would have made it part of his anatomy.

Another big win came from Carl Dambman at 190 as he bested Neal Brendel 8-4. Brendel had beaten him in the pre-season Colgate Tournament and Carl was out for revenge. Brendel took him down but made one mistake and ended up on his back as Carl scored a five point move, to go ahead 5-2. Brendel scored a reversal for his remaining points and then Dambman scored one and received a point for illegal procedure on the part of Yale's man.

Yale's wins came at 134, where Mike McGlaughlin lost a close 5-3 decision to Jeff Rosen; 142 where Don Bergeron saw the lights courtesy of Yale's Jim Bennet, a Pennsylvania State Champ; and at heavyweight as Eastern Runnerup Tim Karpoff pinned George Ireland.

The UConn-Mass match was a mild form of exercise for the Minutemen as they scored five pins in ten bouts and picked up the rest as wins and a tie to beat the Huskies 46-2.

Dave Amato and Steve Benson were two for two in pins as they both clamped their UConn opponents. Cliff Blom pinned his man with two seconds remaining in the match.

Carl Dambman tied the UMass record for most pins by sticking his man in his second bout of the day. It was followed by a pin from George Ireland, who made his the quickest pin of the day coming at 1:20 in the match.

Big victories were turned in by Larry Reynolds, 18-4, Steve Rome, 14-1, and Mike McGlaughlin 8-0.

Chris Cadwallader came from behind at 177 to beat his Huskie 9-8 thus avenging his defeat by Yale's '77 pounder. Another come from behind performance was in the form of Don Bergeron at 142 when he pulled a reversal and near fall in the last thirty seconds for a big five points to tie the UConn grappler.

The Minutemen JV's also had twin wins, over UConn and Yale winning fifteen out of twenty bouts and scoring five pins against UConn.

The next triangular just happens to be against two Ivy League teams as UMass travels to Harvard to wrestle Harvard and Cornell. The outlook?

"I'd just like to see the Harvard coach's eyes when he sees that Yale score," smiled Coach Barr.

Hamilton Wins Record 11th Grey Cup

HAMILTON (AP) - In one of the most thrilling finishes in Grey Cup history, 19-year-old place-kicker Ian Sunter came off the bench on the last play of the game to kick a field goal and give Hamilton Tiger-Cats a 13-10 victory over Saskatchewan Roughriders in the kick travelled 34 yards and won Sunter the Dick Sunderman award as top Canadian player of the game-a trip anywhere CP Air flies.

Hamilton quarterback Chuck Ealey, only three years older than young Sunter and a rookie in the Canadian Football League from Toledo University, was named the game's most valuable player and won a car.

With the exception of Sunter's final-play field goal, all Hamilton's scoring came in the first quarter and Sunter figured largely there, too.

Ealey hit Dave Fleming for a 16-yard touchdown pass play and Sunter converted at 10:44. He kicked a 27-yard field goal three minutes later.

All Saskatchewan's scoring came in the second quarter.

Ron Lancaster hit Tom Campana with an eight-yard pass into the end zone at the 2:42 mark and Jack Abendschan kicked the convert. About 10 minutes later Abendschan punched through a 19-yard field goal to tie the score at 10-10.

"I was confident, I knew I was gonna make it," said the Scottish-born, soccer-style placekicker who makes his home in nearby Burlington. "I had the impression in the dugout it would come down to me."

"No Cigar" In Hoop Opener

By EARLE BARROLL

MORGANTOWN, West Va.–This town is prefixed with Jerry West. A Coliseum that seats 14,000 and rivals Madison Square Garden is honored as "the house that Jerry West built"; although he had graduated well before its genesis.

And on Saturday night a young sophomore, who was feared stricken with mononucleosis only the night before nearly tore the J.W. foundations apart as he single handedly rescued his West Virginia team to a tough 63-62 opening game win over the UMass hoopsters before 8,059 debris throwing, fist wielding Mountaineer fans.

The script was so much like last year for Jack Leaman's crew when the then Redmen lost eight games by a combined 33 points that you had to feel that Hitchcock or Poe had something to do with it.

To be honest, the Minutemen did outplay the Mountaineers. They outrebounded their adversaries by 20 (54-34, Charlie Peters had 15, John Murphy, 14), their offensive rebounding total almost equaled the entire carom total for W.V.U. and they dominated a three-minute stretch from the 11-minute mark on in the final half and had nine shots in one spree but couldn't score.

But, yes the final was 63-62 and outplayed or not the Mountaineers are 1-0, the Minutemen, 0-1. "I'm impressed with their team," said West Virginia coach Sonny Moran in his most humble tones after the game. "It was a tough opener for us and we were fortunate to win. They played well and deserved to win on the road."

"I'm disappointed," said Leaman. "We did some things well, but we did enough to lose." Like shooting 35 per cent for the game from the floor (43 per cent in the first half) as compared to 46 per cent for the Mountaineers (i.e., you put the ball in the net and win)."

With the score 37-36 (W.V.U.) at the beginning of the second half, both teams traded hoops to the 11-minute mark when UMass got the lead, 54-53 (they also led at 8-6 and 42-41 early in each half).

Over the next four minutes only two free throws from Al Skinner ("Heck of a player, gave us trouble"--Moran) marred an otherwise eventful potpourri of the best in chaos, frustrations and down to earth miscues by both teams.

The Mountaineers closed to one at 56-55 but two free throws by Tom McLaughlin and a tip-in by Tom Austin escalated the lead to 60-55. From then on the young sophomore outscored the Minutemen, 8-2, a span of six minutes.

Enter Jerome Anderson. For openers he drove half court for a lay-up with 4:25 left. He hit from 20 feet out with 3:27 to go. The UMass lead was one.

McLaughlin powered an offensive rebound in to give UMass a 62-59 lead with 2:49 to go. But Anderson again found the range from deep in the left corner to close to within one.

Within the next minute two UMass blunders gave the Mountaineers the ball but on both trips down the court W.V.U. was foiled with a steal by Bill Endicott and a defensive gem by Peters who was super the entire game with 10 points to go along with his rebies total. Charlie ripped the ball loose from two behemouths and then the melodrama began.

The Minutemen installed a freeze that lasted for over a minute (1:19 to :16) when Skinner was fouled. Al missed the first of a one and one, West Virginia called time and set up their last efforts.

"We tried to force them (W.V.U.) to take a difficult shot," explained Leaman. It wasn't the most difficult of all, but with two seconds to go and the Coliseum in a fit of rage, Anderson let a jumper go from 25 feet out and...

Wrestlers Upset Yale In Initial Meet

By JOHN BOCK

First matches of the season are always scenes of complaints about how out of shape everybody is and how the season starts too soon.

The truth of the matter is that the day of the contest is the same for everybody and wrestling coach Homer Barr recognized that fact a few weeks ago when he said "December 2 comes the same day for us as it does for Yale and the team that wins that day is the better team. There can be no excuses about being out of shape or not having the best man in at the weight class."

The worth of coach Barr's wisdom was definitely proved Saturday at UConn as the Minuteman wrestling team scored a 28-18 victory over defending Ivy League Champs Yale.

On the way to this win stellar performances were turned in by Dave Amato, Larry Reynolds, Cliff Blom, Steve Rome, Steve Benson, and Carl Dambman.

At 118 Dave Amato scored his first of two falls of the day by pinning Drake Lamen of Yale in 6:05. He was never in trouble and in control of the match the whole time.

In his first appearance in a UMass uniform, transfer Larry Reynolds destroyed Bob Labate 15-5 and picked up a four point decision for the team. Larry had the Ell counting the rafters in every period but couldn't satisfy the referee for the pin.

At 158 pounds freshman Cliff Blom surprised Yale veteran Paul Kroeger, 15-4, in his collegiate wrestling debut. He displayed an aggressive attitude right from the start as he took his man down and then proceeded to work on his arms in an attempt to work for the pin but had to be satisfied with the four point decision.

The 150 pound weight class held down by "Tony" Rome was the most exciting and high scoring bout of the match. At the end of the first period the score was 7-6. Yale's Marty Swartz, came right out and took Rome down with a head lock to go ahead 4-0 (two points for the takedown and two for the predicament). Then Steve escaped and was promptly taken down again with the same move but rolled through this time and picked up two points of his own. The rest of the match was see-saw until the last of the third period when Rome iced it with a near fall and won 16-14.

Steve Benson, also making his first appearance as a Minuteman since transferring, decked Yale's Jamie McEwan in 3:40. McEwan was a

Late Goals Give Cats 6-4 Decision Over Skaters

By BILL BALLOU

BURLINGTON, VT.——The corpse-grinders were ready Saturday night, as they always are on this hockey-mad campus, and they expected that a young, tender UMass hockey team would be easy prey. And though they did indeed see their Vermont Catamounts beat the young Minutemen 6-4, the meal was a lot harder to digest than they had planned.

The difference between this game and Boston State on Wednesday was like night and day. This one was fast, had lots of scoring, and saw both teams match each other stride for stride all night. And, until Vermont's Tim O'Connell slid a 100 foot backhander into an empty net with 14 seconds left in the game, it was anybody's match.

The Minutemen really had the best of the play for most of the going, and save for a span of one minute and 17 seconds at the beginning of the second period, they would have likely won. But in that short minute or so the Catamounts broke open a 1-1 tie with three goals and opened up a 4-1 lead which UMass never could quite surmount.

At the time it seemed as if no one would be able to grab onto the game and say "I've got it." The first period had been pretty evenly played and despite a rash of penalties neither team could capitalize often enough to take control. Vermont jumped off to a 1-0 lead at 6:10 of the period when Tim O'Connell bounced a rebound past Peter Erickson but that was it for them as Erickson stymied the Cats the rest of the period.

About four minutes later UMass tied it up when Lonnie Avery scored a powecplay goal from a crowd in front of Vermont goalie Steve Eckerson. Avery, playing very well so far this year, has scored the first goal in both games the Minutemen have played.

So there was nothing to indicate the deluge that was to hit the UMass net at the start of the second period. But, at the 00:19 mark Ted Castle beat Erickson with a rebound; exactly 30 seconds later Pat Wright finished off a perfect 3-on-2 rush by firing home a 15 footer; and at 1:36 Bill Koch scored on a tough angel shot from the corner. All of a sudden it looked like an Arctic version of Bull Run.

Vermont continued the pressure until the ubiquitous O'Connell was hit with a five-minute major for interfering with the goalie in the crease. This was at 5:37. For the next five minutes UMass spent a good deal of the time skating back into their own zone to retrieve Vermont clearing efforts, but they did find time to cut the gap to 4-2. At 7:01 Lonnie Avery sent Pat Keenan in behind the defense and Keenan zipped a 15 footer past Eckerson.

It was still Vermont's ballgame until Brian Mulcahy fired a shot from the right point that Don Riley deflected in at 11:42 to close the gap to 4-3. From then on the Minutemen took control of things.

Eckerson, who had looked shaky in the early going, began to play well and helo UMass off for the rest of the second period. He was finally beaten by a Bob Shilalie slap shot on the power play with 4:08 gone in the third period. It tied the game up at 4-4, but was to be the last Minuteman goal of the night.

Both goaltenders made good stops on power plays chances throughout the period. Erickson was particularly sharp on a couple of deflections off of shots from the point. Eckerson robbed Keenan twice, once on a breakaway and the other time on a tough backhander from about 10-15 feet. Keenan also hit the post once. But no one could score.

That is no one until Ted Castle poked a rebound of a shot by defenseman John Murphy past a prone Erickson with exacly 1:01 left in the game. With that goal bedlam reigned in Burlington, the ice was littered with variousthings, and Vermont had managed to beat the Minutemen. O'Connell's goal a few seconds later was just a little spice in the sauce.

Happy Days Are Gone Again

With last year's fiascos imbedded in the minds of the fans, Dick O'Connell dangled the names of Steve Carlton and Ferguson Jenkins as possible new BoSoxers, but as the grass skirts rustled in the moonlight, the interleague trading deadline passed by.

Maybe it was fear of another Danny Cater or Lew Krausse, but whatever chances of exiling Reggie Smith and/or Rico Petrocelli to the other league has now vanished.

The Honolulu happy days, when a club can get rid of the so-called non-performers and not have to worry about them coming back to haunt their old pals with a key base hit or victory, saw 10% of the major leaguers change uniforms with 69 players and 21-24 major league clubs involved.

The Red Sox, still needing front line pitching help and having a surplus of outfielders, were expected by many to jump at the chance of playing Upton Bell (a new game similar to the Open Door Policy). Amidst the road of the waves, a deal involving Ron Santo and Ferguson Jenkins for Reggie Smith and Rico Petrocelli did not stand up to the pounding and drowned.

The Sox do not have the team to be able to stand pat and rely on the continued demise of the Orioles and the choking of the Tigers and Yankees to make another race of nags. Luis Tiant last year had a fine year, leading the league in ERA, but most experts agree that can't be expected again this year. Marty Pattin is a good, solid pitcher, but the names of Lynn Mcglothen and John Curtis have yet to scare the opposition. Remember such hopefuls as Billy Rohr, who came within an out of pitching a no-hitter in his first start only to fade away and Rogelio Moret, who last year was counted on to sell more than peanuts, but carries wildness like the plague. Sonny Siebert is still around, but another proven starter who can go out every four or five days and win more than he loses, is evidently needed.

First base still has a lot of driftwood, with Cecil Cooper and Danny Cater vying along with the $165,000 left-fielder who will start wherever the problem is. The rest of the infield is set with Petrocelli, Aparicio and Griffin.

If Yaztremski plays leftfield, then the trio of Yaz, Smith and Harper is one of the better outfields in the league. If not, then Ben Oglivie, Dwight Evans and Rick Miller all have shown potential. So, the BoSox could afford to lose an outfielder in exchange for a pitcher.

The Bengals kept pace with the Sox, acquiring only two nobodies for their Toledo farm club. Comparable to the Redskins, they once again will be going with pride and age. They should stay with 1/2 game of the Sox again next year.

Harry Dalton, the man who brought Frank Robinson to Baltimore, is in California with Robby, but the go-for-the-big-player spirit is not. One of the big four, Pat Dobson, second baseman Dave Johnson and two others are headed to Atlanta for slugging catcher Earl Williams and the number one pick in the 1971 free agent draft, Taylor Duncan. Dobson's loss will be felt, but look for the Orioles to replace him with a starter to be obtained for Boog Powell.

Out of the four teams involved in the race to the wire, the Yankees have made the greatest strides via the trade route. Fifth starter Rob Gardner, along with five benchwarmers, were shipped out for two proven starters, outfielder Matty Alou and third baseman Graig Nettles.

The Orioles and the Yankees will be the ones to watch this spring in the AL East. The Beantown boys just did not have the trading savoy and now, if they trade Smith or Petrocelli to a rival AL club, it will surely come back to haunt them during the season. That is, unless they pull another deal with Milwaukee. It seems as though whenever these two teams hook up, it's just like a homecoming weekend intrasquad scrimmage, anyways.

Transportation is more than just a passing (no pun intended) concern on the UMass campus. Raises in parking fees and expansion of the bus system are two means by which it is hoped the streets of Amherst and the over-subscribed parking lots may be improved. In the photo at the top, a number of students are shown boarding one of the Student Senate Transit Service shuttle busses. In the lower photo, are shown some of the estimated 17,000 cars registered on campus. (MDC photos by Frank Morra)

UMass Transportation-The Big Gamble

By DON GLICKSTEIN

UMass is gambling that raises in parking fees and an expansion of the bus system will assuage car-crowded Amherst streets and over-subscribed lots.

The gamble is an unintentional one, necessitated by imposed circumstances and a lack of comprehensive planning.

Since the year it opened in 1867, UMass-Amherst has had a tradition of not being the most accessible campus. The very first students, according to a UMass archivist, Harold Whiting Cary, had "come a long distance, arriving in Amherst at the railroad station. From there, they had taken a stage for the two mile ride to the campus..."

As early as the 30's, there were parking difficulties. Justifiably, students then, as some do now, complained about separate and unequal enforcement of regulations. The Treasurer, who then had responsibility for traffic, received the following memo from President Roscoe Thatcher near the end of January, 1932 (emphasis added):

For students. First and second offenses should result in warnings...A third offense should result in the calling of the offender to the Office of the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, where he should be warned that another offence (sic) will result in the withdrawal of his permit to bring his car on campus...

For members of the Faculty. IT IS PROBABLY UNWISE FOR THE SUPERINTENDENT OF BUILDINGS AND GROUND TO ATTEMPT TO ENFORCE REGULATIONS AGAINST FACULTY MEMBERS. Instead, he should report persistent violators to the Treasurer...

The exponential growth of UMass began in the late 1950's. The enrollment, which in 1960 was 6,400 reached 20,400 a decade later. Traffic grew proportionately.

"Despite present general adequacy", the UMass physical Master Plan architects wrote in 1957, "the road system is entirely inadequate for an enrollment of 10,000." The architects, Shurcliff, Shurcliff, and Merrill, proposed new access roads to campus through the creation of a Route 116 bypass, a series of new circumferential roads in the campus, and an expansion of parking lots.

As if by whimsy, with no overall plan in mind, parking lots sprang up and were expanded. In 1961, for example, a lot was created by Bartlett Hall, primarily because, in the words of the Dean of Men, William Burkhardt, "it is a level area, needing only cinders to make it into a lot."

The next year, a new firm of architects, Saski, Walker, and Associates, reviewed the UMass expansion. They noted that there was no integration of academic goals with physical expansion, and that a comprehensive master plan would be difficult without such foresight.

They also observed that a "'confused' pattern of pedestrian and vehicular circulation exists at the University". The firm proffered the solution of closing off interior roads–the one in front of the Student Union, for example–and developing peripheral ones which would "pierce" the center of campus with a series of "short loops and cul-de-sacs".

From 1962 until this year, UMass attempted to follow the Sazaki guidelines: it built a western Rte. 116 access road, and developed plans for an eastern one; it constructed the peripheral Commonwealth and Massachusetts Avenues; it closed internal campus roads; it built new parking lots; it developed a small intra-campus bus service.

It was an "expansion-oriented campus", Dean of Students William Field recalls. "Things could be corrected".

But today, the problems are not gone.

The traffic still jams, although there are now traffic control stations and stop lights. Parking lots that hold 7,000 cars, 500 street parking spaces, a money-losing 988-car garage, and, beginning next semester, 254 parking meters, do not seem to be sufficient for the 17,000 cars registered with the Parking Office this semester.

Erwin Zube, Chairman of the Faculty Senate's Master Planning Committee (a misnomer for this physical planning group) estimated in a December, 1971 report to then Acting Chancellor William Bromery that 11,000 autos need 90 acres of parking lot. UMass currently has only 60 acres.

Construction of new peripheral lots would not only physically isolate the campus from the surrounding towns and areas–as Jane Jacobs observed urban housing projects and lots had done--but new construction is financially unrealistic given the present low parking fee.

Compounding the problem is transportation inside the campus, where 3 bus routes–often running late due to traffic–attempt to cater to the needs of 21,000 students dispersed over 1200 acres of land.

In the last two years, a variety of policies have evolved to cope with the traffic.

Parking Council. At the instigation of a Faculty Senate study committee, a Parking and Transportation Council (PTC) was created last February. According to the Chairman, Dr. Paul Shuldiner, the PTC is "consumer-oriented", recommending policy to Student Affairs Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage in the areas of parking fees and operations, snow removal, parking meters, and overall transportation and parking guidelines.

Comprised of 3 faculty, 3 staff, 2 undergrads and 1 graduate student, the PTC's major accomplishment since its inception was the establishment of an appeals board for parking assignments.

Chairman Shuldiner "anticipates no formal reports" on long-range transportation plans and goals.

Meters. 254 parking meters should be operating by next semester. The meters, located in central areas of campus, will serve short-term visitors, and provide flexibility for people without parking assignments.

Lot expansion and phase-out. Peripheral parking lots, specifically "M" lot behind the Education building and "14 Upper" near Engineering, are currently being expanded. William Lambert, a planning engineer and member of the PTC, said that interior parking lots near the central campus will eventually be phased out.

He added that money was the "chief inhibitor" for building new lots. The "M" and "14 Upper" expansions are being financed with parking fees.

Management. The Parking Office began reorganizing its activities in September. Campus signs were clarified, and Security Officers reviewed parking regulations. The Office began to computerize its records. A specialist in systems analysis will study the Office's functions and make a report early next year.

Rte. 116 Bypass. Construction on an eastern Rte. 116 bypass, tentatively approved by the Amherst Town Meeting, will begin next year. The road will provide a different access route to campus without bisecting the center of downtown Amherst.

Fee increase. There will be a "selective increase in parking fees" for fall, 1973 according to the Master Planning Committee. Gage insists that parking facilities must subsidize themselves, and the raise in fees would not only make maintenance and new construction easier, it would discourage students from driving their cars.

He feels that a hike in fees would have to be negotiated with the Massachusetts State Employees Association--the union--but he believes that policy should be set first, with negotiations later.

(23% of registered cars on campus belong to faculty or staff, 19% belong to on-campus students, and 75% are owned by commuting students.)

Free parking was ruled not an alternative by the advisory Master Planning Committee because it "becomes a form of subsidy for commuting by automobile".

Bus expansion. In the 1971 report to Chancellor Bromery, the Master Planning Committee described four possible solutions to parking woes:

—provide all parking spaces necessary

—expand the internal bus system and begin an exterior one to local communities

—ban all parking with an extensive bus system

The Committee noted that a professor in the Engineering School, William Goss, with Administration backing, had already submitted a proposal to the Federal Department of Transportation for a grant to expand interior bus routes and begin outside-of-campus ones.

It was a fait accompli, and the Committee, not unsurprisingly, supported this alternative to the parking and transportation crisis.

The development of the grant followed the random, unplanned tradition of UMass transportation growth.

In early 1971, Professor Goss had sent a copy of a student's thesis to President Robert Wood. The thesis proposed a rapid transit system as a way to combat traffic in the Amherst-Northampton area. Wood's office seized the idea, and urged Goss to develop a less expensive proposal.

In consultation with the Planning Office, the Student Senate Transit Service, and the Physical Plant, Goss planned for a 13-bus fleet--10 new buses supplemented by existing ones--with routes both on and off campus.

The proposal was funded. The Federal Government granted $475,000 and UMass and the Student Senate matched it with allocations of $160,000 and $30,000.

The new buses, scheduled to begin operation in February, 1973, are capable of being adapted to liquid propane gas, a low-polluting fuel. They have radios in them, for possible use in a dispatch service for off-peak hours. Five of the buses have peripheral seating to make crowded entrances and exits easier. Routes are tentatively scheduled to extend to Sunderland in the North and Belchertown in the East. "There will be no place in campus", Vice-Chancellor Gage vows, "where buses will be more than 8 minutes apart."

But the system is a gamble.

"Some sort of guesses were made", explains Gage. "One of the reasons people take cars is that buses are irregular and late". Gage hopes that the new and on-time bus routes will attract students who otherwise would take their cars.

Here's another person who seems to be dealing with the problem of transportation in her own way. (MDC photo by Frank Morra)

No one knows, however, if the buses will be used by students who now drive, or if non-driving students such as hitchhikers or car pool riders will become patrons. A feasibility study is only now being made.

Many people will be ignored by the routes. The buses will travel only to high density areas, that is, student "ghettos" and apartment complexes. Faculty and staff, who account for one quarter of all UMass traffic, will not be served. By law, the buses will not be allowed to travel south on Rte. 116 to South Amherst, or west on Rte. 9 to Hadley and Northampton, as competition with commercial bus lines is illegal.

As the grant is "seed" money only, after December, 1973, UMass must take over all the financing. This implies a raise in parking fees, or even a small charge for patrons. Merging with the commercial lines into a metropolitan transit district--another alternative--would mean a loss of student control and most likely, a charge for use.

Finance is further complicated if the buses are converted to liquid propane gas, and if the "Dial-a-Ride" off-peak dispatch service is instituted.

Salaries for drivers will jump more than 2-1/2 times. Currently, the Student Senate Transit Service is looking for 75 new part-time drivers to supplement its 45-person force.

If the projected transportation plans fail, and traffic does not abate, Gage believes that two variables--bus service and parking fees--will have to be manipulated.

Other alternatives which might have been feasible ten years ago are now closed, because not only is there no money, but because integration of academic planning and physical planning has never been done.

"It's an age-old hassle in master planning", Dean Field observed. "Academic input has been very difficult."

Because UMass did not know how large it would become in 1960, whether it would be the only campus or a graduate student campus, the physical planners were unable to project transportation needs. A year-round calendar, had it been adopted instead of the 1971-approved 4-1-4 schedule, would have provided a more constant density throughout the year, a minimum prerequisite for a rapid transit system.

The developers of the new bus system admit that other alternatives were never seriously considered. Although extensive campus bus systems are successfully run in colleges across the country, their difficulties apparently were not studied in depth at UMass.

West Virginia University, in Morgantown, W. Va., perhaps the most famous example, had an 18-bus fleet, parking lots and garages, and a parking fee of $24. With a student population of 16,500 and a metropolitan Morgantown population of 50,000 (a little less than the Amherst-Hadley-Northampton area), the bus fleet was inadequate to meet the needs of the narrow streets and mountainous areas. W.V.U. was lucky in that they received a $40 million grant to build a rapid transit system, a figure obviously beyond the reach of UMass.

But Morgantown does illustrate an alternative. The train system is a cooperative effort between the town and W.V.U. Both the town and school contributed manpower and land to the development of the system, and will jointly finance the operation and maintenance of it. Both students and town residents will be able to use the trains. A town-gown advisory committee on transportation has been created to facilitate further cooperation.

UMass has preferred not to take a broad view of its problems.

It has negotiated only with the Amherst government, neglecting other regional possibilities. It has consistently separated its academic plans from its physical plans. Its PTC has yet to decree general policy and growth guidelines. Horizontal communication between the PTC, the Physical Plant, the Master Planning Committee, the Student Senate Transit Service, and the Provost's Office, although improving, is still poor. Alternatives to traffic problems, are in general, not explored, leaving the current solutions to 15-year old guidelines and to "brainchilds" of individuals in a number of different departments.

UMass has often been compared to a city. Unfortunately for urban centers everywhere, this University has not been a leader in solving city problems. Instead, it has followed the mournful lead of our cities--unplanned, poorly staked, and unfit.

Deaths Probed

BELCHERTOWN, Mass. (AP)--State Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt said Monday he's as concerned as parents over a rash of accidental deaths at Belchertown State School for the Retarded.

The commissioner said that he has two investigations already underway of four deaths at the school.

The four residents of the institution have died since Nov. 19.

In addition to the Department of Mental Health investigations, the State Police and the Hampshire County district attorney's office are also conducting inquiries.

The latest death was that of Rena Aubin, 23, who died late Saturday night of what Hampshire County Medical Examiner Thomas Corriden called "spontaneous rupture of the stomach from massive food ingestion."

Larry Brown To Speak Here

The principal author of the controversial report: "Suffer the Children–The Politics of Mental Health in Massachusetts" will speak here tomorrow on the role of the citizen in serving children of the Connonwealth.

Larry Brown, who will speak in Rm. 120 of SBA at 8:15 p.m., compiled the report with a staff of nine plus six persons listed as legal consultants.

The 120-page document released Sept. 15 stated that the Dept. of Mental Health "virtually ignores children" and is characterized by "ineptitude, misfeasance and misguided priorities."

Brown indicated that his speech would be titled: "Who Regulates the Regulators: The Citizens Role in Serving Children."

Brown has been an outspoken advocate of reform in DMH.

Anti-Rape Action Underway

By BARBARA VOORHEES

"The chances of walking across campus and having someone leap out of the bushes and rape you are remote," said Diana White, staff assistant to campus police. "The easiest way to get raped is to hitchhike, not across country, but just around campus."

Ms. White said that compared to other colleges, UMass. has a low rate of rape. Evidence, however, points towards an increase in that rate.

In 1970 there was one reported rape by force. In 1971 there were three. Figures for 1972 have not been compiled but the general feeling is that the numbers will grow.

The fact that many women do not report rapes or press charges must be taken into consideration.

"A lot of women don't want to press charges in a rape case because that means public exposure. And their parents and boyfriends will find out," said Ms. White.

A rape charge is a felony. Thus, all rape cases end up in Superior Court and all Superior Court cases are made public.

"The court experience can be humiliating. During the trial, the woman's character is seriously questioned," said Ms. White.

In order to win the case the woman must have physical evidence. This physical evidence consists of one whole sperm cell.

"The minute its over the rape victim should come to the police. If she delays–forget it. The doctor will not be able to find the evidence needed to prove the woman's case," said Ms. White.

An alternative to the perhaps humiliating rape case is for the woman to press charges for assault and battery.

Ms. White said that assault and battery charges are often coupled with rape charges and can be used instead of them "at least to get the guy off the street."

Ms. White advised that all women refrain from hitchhiking and beware of accepting rides home from men just met at a party.

An Anti-Rape action group to serve the women of the 5-college area is now in the preliminary planning stages.

A suggested service of the group would be a number of women on 24 hour call to escort rape victims to the police station and hospital, give advice on legal implications, and offer support in coping with emotional changes women experience as rape victims.

Persons interested in working with this group should contact Everywoman's Center, Munson Hall or the Southwest Women's Center, Mackimmie House.

A petition calling for the University to take immediate measures to protect women students is now being circulated by the Southwest Women's Center.

The petition calls for better lighting on Fearing St., by Curry Hicks, by Stockbridge and around F and V lots, late night bus service in and around campus, and increased and more diligent patrolling by security guards.

Judy Katz of the Southwest Women's Center said that the petition has received a good deal of support and added that a number of men have signed it.

Yogi Bhajan To Speak Tomorrow

Tomorrow, the Room to Move Distinguished Speaker Series will present Yogi Bhajan, Master of Kundalini and Tantric Yogas. He will speak in Thompson 104 at 8:15 p.m. on the subject of "The Path to Higher Consciousness–With and Without Drugs." His lecture is one of three which will be given in the Five College Area during the week, and marks the first time he has appeared in Western Massachusetts.

Originally from New Delhi, India, Yogi Bhajan has lived in this country for four years, teaching Kundalini Yoga and Tantric Yoga. The director of the 3HO (Health, Happy, Holy Organization) Foundation, and spiritual master for over 100 Yoga Centers in the United States and abroad, he has made available a positive, spiritual life style, free of drugs and the problems which surround many today. Through the teaching of Kundalini Yoga, Yogi Bhajan has given techniques to raise the powerful, divine energy which lies at the base of the spine, thus expanding the consciousness of the individual. With training, student teachers bring Kundalini Yoga to all parts of the world. In the Five College Area, accredited courses are given through the Physical Education Department at UMass.

Tantric Yoga, the yoga of interpersonal relationships, helps to develop the consciousness which men and women need to live together harmoniously. Through teaching Tantric Yoga, Yogi Bhajan has lifted the ignorance and fear surrounding male-female relationships.

In an age when spirituality is a concern of many, and when time is at a premium, Yogi Bhajan is one of a rare few who offer a solid approach to higher consciousness. It is an opportunity for all those who are interested in greater awareness to hear him speak.

For any further information, call the Guru Ram Das Ashram in Montague, at 367-9586 or Room to Move at 545-0400.

School Of Ed. To Consider Admission Of Chandler

At a meeting yesterday of the faculty of the School of Education a motion was passed to consider the case of Paul Chandler's admission to the graduate school before an administrative decision can be made. A meeting is planned for tomorrow at 1:00 in room 128 of the School of Ed. All interested parties will be invited by the Faculty Coordinating Committee to be there, and to present criteria for accepting or rejecting Chandler.

Yesterday's meeting was called to discuss a new governance plan for the school. This discussion went on until a graduate student pointed out that it was foolish to discuss how to set up a future structure while ignoring problems that exist at present. This led into a long and, at times heated, debate on the Chandler issue.

The consensus of the meeting was that not enough information was known about Chandler or about the school administration's involvement in his application procedure. Tomorrow's meeting is intended to bring out some of these facts.

Moshe Gileadi To Present Talk On Kibbutz Education

Tomorrow evening, Moshe Gileadi will present the second lecture in the Henry M. Gordon Memorial Lecture Series. The topic will be "Collective Education in the Kibbutz Movement." The lecture which is sponsored by Concerned Jewish students will be held in the Governor's lounge of the Student Union at 6:30. A discussion and social hour will follow the lecture.

Mr. Gileadi is presently spending one year at the School of Ed. He is the director of Oranim, the famous Israeli teacher's training college for the Kibbutz movement. After his incarceration in a Russian concentration camp in Siberia for 'Zionist propaganda,' Mr. Gileadi went to Israel.

He has been a member of Kibbutz Mizra since 1943. For a number of years he was involved in the education of orphans from the concentration camps. Before becoming executive director of Oranim, Mr. Gilleadi was a high school teacher and principal.

The third lecture of this semesters series will be given by Dov. Gordon. Mr. Gordon's topic will be "A Farewell to American Jewry. A number of panel discussions and guest lecturers are being planned for the spring semester. Any professor or student who would like to participate is requested to call Isaac Seigel at 6-4087.

U.N. Flag May Soon Fly In Amherst

By BILL DENSMORE

Amherst Massachusetts may soon become the only town in the United States to fly the United Nations flag permanently. Town Selectmen voted unanimously last night to "approve the policy of flying the United Nations flag on the town common."

New York City and Los Angeles are the only two municipalities presently flying the U.N. flag on a permanent basis.

Support for the motion came from Mrs. Robert McGarrah, a town resident and wife of a University of Massachusetts School of Business professor. Mrs. McGarrah presented the petition to the selectmen signed by more than five hundred town residents and students urging the flying of the flag on the town common.

The petition read, "I urge the selectmen to accept the petition and give the town of Amherst an inspirational symbol of progressive global concern." It continued, "we can be patriotic citizens of the U.S. and a patriotic country in the world community."

Mrs. McGarrah is a member of the United Nations Association of the United States, and was in charge of town-sponsored U.N. Day activities October 24th.

The statement Mrs. McGarrah read to selectmen at last night's meeting quoted a UMass student, Jim Cunningham, who had written to support her idea.

Cunningham wrote, "I read an article today in The Collegian by Mark Vogler concerning the waving of the U.N. flag with the U.S. flag on the town common. I positively believe that a symbol of 'earthiness' should accompany the symbol of our own little corner of Cunningham is a Russian major at the University.

According to Mrs. McGarrah he assisted her by collecting 185 signatures for her petition.

Ms. Weinstein To Speak On Masculine, Feminine

The General Awareness Lecture Series, a series sponsored by the Everywomen's Center and aimed at non- professional women working on campus, will feature Ms. Katherine Weinstein in a lecture entitled: "The meaning of masculine and feminine in different societies," tomorrow from 12 to 1 in Stockbridge 102.

The lecture will discuss the question of feminine and masculine--do these terms describe inborn traits, characteristic of women and men, or are they arbitrary terms which help to define the sex roles a particular society (in this case ours) wishes to assign to women and men?

Ms. Weinstein will also discuss definitions of sex roles indigenous to some other cultures in addition to our own from the perspectives of anthropology and history in an attempt to examine the implications of "feminine" and "masculine" for today's society.

Correction

The headline for Friday's story on the Everywoman's Center's six day "university" in January should have said "Everywoman's University Coming", not "Everywoman's Center coming." Also, the committee meeting was the steering committee for the "university," not the Center.

Defense Spending To Increase-Laird

WASHINGTON (AP)-Defense spending in the coming fiscal year will not be cut as anticipated, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said Monday, but instead will top $80 billion.

Laird said the total for his department in fiscal 1974 will go up at least $4 billion over the current $76 billion figure, mostly due to increased manpower costs.

Laird's forecast of "slightly more than $80 billion" was a change from predictions two weeks ago by a high-ranking Pentagon official who said he anticipated a cut from the fiscal 1973 spending schedule.

Although Laird said details were lacking because planning had not been completed, he told newsmen that manpower cost increases for the fiscal year starting July 1 will eat up $3.9 billion alone.

Pentagon sources said other inflationary costs and increased spending for research and development would account for the rest of the 1974 jump.

Laird discussed the budget situation just before he left for Brussels and the upcoming round of ministerial talks in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

During his 15-minute news conference, the secretary said he would stress in talks with the NATO ministers the necessity of avoiding unilateral manpower costs.

This is particularly important now, Laird said, because of the mutual balanced force reduction talks starting Jan. 31 with the Soviet Union and its allies.

Allende Attacks ITT

UNITED NATIONS (AP) - President Salvador Allende of Chile accused International Telephone and Telegraph Co. on Monday of trying to start civil war in his country. He told other poor countries to beware of powerful U.S. firms.

"We are witnessing a pitched battle between the great transnational corporations and sovereign states," he declared in an 80-minute speech to a packed session of the 132-nation U.S. General Assembly.

He recalled the thoughts of Thomas Jefferson that merchants claim no countries and are interested only in profits.

ITT's chairman and president, Harold S. Geneen, was not available for comment in response to Allende's charges.

Allende, coming here from a visit to Mexico, said ITT had tried to prevent his taking office after the 1970 election through terrorist activities that culminated in the assassination of Gen. Rene Schneider, army commander-in-chief.

A year later, he charged that the giant corporation hatched a plan to sow economic and social disorder in Chile in the hopes the military would step in and impose a dictatorship.

"Before the conscience of the world I accuse the ITT of attempting to bring about civil war in my country," he said. "That is what we call imperialist action."

The assembly rose and applauded for 70 seconds when Allende finished speaking. Someone in the visitors' gallery threw small red, white and blue Chilean flags over the hall and shouted, "Viva Allende!" About 200 pro-Allende demonstrators also marched on the street outside the hall.

Allende said Kennecott Copper Corp. had "decided to use its great power to rob us of our export earnings" because a Chilean tribunal rejected the firm's appeal over the nature of its nationalization.

As a result of the nationalization of its El Teniente mine last year, Kennecott filed suits in European courts to prevent buyers from taking delivery of copper exported by Chile.

The president said Kennecott had taken out of Chile more than $4 billion in profits during the past 42 years-outstripping many times the original investment of $30 million.

Supreme Court To Rule On Tuition Fees

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court agreed yesterday to rule on higher tuition fees for out-of-state college students--an issue that could have heavy impact on fees paid by all students at state-supported colleges.

The case accepted for review next spring comes from Connecticut. There a three-judge court held students who had set up permanent residence could not be charged the higher fees for the full length of their academic careers.

Possibly riding on the outcome is the $200 million to $400 million collected by the states in non-resident tuition each year. If the justices agree with the panel in Hartford, all students in state colleges may wind up paying higher tuition.

Meanwhile, in other actions, the court agreed to decide whether residents of communes may receive federal food stamps and whether newspapers may run separate job ads for men and women.

At the same time, the court turned down a challenge to a school-desegregation order for Oklahoma City and cleared the way for reinstatement of a school teacher in Elmira, N.Y., who had been fired for wearing an anti-war armband.

The court took no action on a request that it hear a key school-desegregation case from Richmond, Va.

The Connecticut tuition system was challenged by two students. One married a University of Connecticut student and moved into the state from California. The second was a graduate student who moved from Ohio.

The fees, established by the state legislature last year, allow local residents to attend the university at Storrs for $175 a year, but charge out-of-state students $975.

The three-judge court in Hartford in striking down the system last June, said that even if a higher tuition is reasonable at the start it is wrong to charge this higher rate throughout the student's academic career.

Connecticut appealed. It told the Supreme Court the Constitution gives states "a wide range of discretion in enacting laws which affect some of the residents differently from others."

Although not involved in the Connecticut case, the new law extending the vote to 18-year-olds has deepened the problem of non-resident tuition. If a state grants a student the right to register and vote in his college town, many educators see this as a prima facie evidence of residence in the state which would carry with it exemption from the higher non-resident tuition.

The commune case was brought by the Justice Department after a three-judge panel in the District of Columbia ruled residents of communes are entitled to food stamps.

The government's appeal said most communes "contain individuals who abuse the program by remaining voluntarily poor."

In Brief...

Kennedy Cites Refugee Increase

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said Monday that "during 1972 the people of South Vietnam have taken the most ferocious beating of the war."

"There were more war victims this year than any previous year of the war," he said in a statement. "And despite today's plans and hopes for an early peace, the flow of refugees and civilian casualties continues at an alarming rate."

Kennedy said the number of refugees has increased by at least 200,000 persons since early October.

Murder Case Biggest Since Boston Strangler

BOSTON (AP)-The deaths of four young women and the disappearance of another-though not yet tied together-have generated what a Boston detective called the biggest homicide case since the Boston Strangler murders 10 years ago.

All five girls were between 18 and 22, all residents of Boston or Cambridge, all white, all middle class and all attractive.

Autopsies indicate that three of the girls were strangled and the fourth was stabbed and strangled.

"Oh, listen, my children, a story you'll hear.

Last Moon Shot Tomorrow

CAPE KENNEDY (AP)-Astronauts Eugene A. Cernan and Harrison H. Schmitt practiced simulated landings and takeoffs from the moon Monday as the countdown for the last Apollo moon mission ticked on flawlessly toward a Wednesday night liftoff.

The two astronauts, who may be the last men to walk on the moon for a decade or more, operated in a lunar lander simulator, rehearsing the tricky descent over a 6,000-foot high mountain into a volcanic valley named Taurus-Littrow.

Then they ran through procedures for lifting off the surface on Dec. 14 to fly to a rendezvous with Ronald E. Evans in the command ship America. They are to stay on the moon a record 75 hours.

Evans worked in the command ship simulator on how he'll control the vehicle on re-entry through the earth's atmosphere and splashdown in the Pacific Ocean Dec. 19.

On the launch pad, with the threat of a strike averted, chief test supervisor William Schick reported, "We are proceeding according to plan" toward a 9:53 p.m. EST blastoff Wednesday, the first manned nighttime launching by the United States.

He said there were only the usual minor problems, all of which were corrected.

The strike threat evaporated less than an hour before an union-declared Sunday midnight deadline when union attorney Bernard Mamet announced: "I'm very happy to report that there will be no strike."

The agreement between the Boeing Co. and 60 documentation workers represented by the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employes ended seven months of negotiations, with most of the substantive details worked out in intense, nearly round-the-clock weekend negotiations.

The workers had threatened to strike and disrupt the Apollo 17 launch if a settlement was not reached. At the heart of the dispute was a 3 to 50 per cent wage cut the workers received when Boeing took over a space center support service contract last year. Mamet said the new contract restores 93 per cent of the lost wages.

B52s Pound North Vietnam

SAIGON (AP)--U.S. B52s and fighter-bombers smashed at North Vietnam's communication links and troop concentrations in northern Quang Tri Province Monday, the U.S. Command reported.

The pounding was to support South Vietnamese marines and paratroopers who are attempting to regain ground lost last spring to the North Vietnamese in their invasion of the South.

Of the 315 tactical air strikes flown in South Vietnam, more than half of them were flown against targets in Quang Tri Province, the command said.

In addition, more than 50 B52s dropped up to 1,000 tons of bombs on suspected enemy troop concentrations and staging areas in the province, the command added.

The South Vietnamese counteroffensive has been slow. Ground units attempting to move forward are hit by North Vietnamese long-range 130mm guns and 82mm mortars.

Another factor is the monsoon season in the northern region. Much of the area is under water or knee deep in mud as a result of the heavy rains.

In another development, the U.S. Command reported American servicemen strength dropped to 25,000 in Vietnam, less than the target of 27,000 by Dec. 1 set by President Nixon.

U.S. spokesmen did not attach any importance to the drop. Said one: "We just went below it. There is no particular reason."

He added that it was possible U.S. troop strength might show a gain in next Monday's reporting period because of troop replacements and other reporting factors.

The latest official U.S. strength summary gave this breakdown: Army 14,600, Air Force 8,000, Navy 1,600, Marines 1,200 and Coast Guard 100. This does not include the 100,000 men stationed at air bases in Thailand and on warships of the 7th Fleet.

The U.S. Air Force in a delayed report, said an F4 Phantom jet crashed Nov. 28 while on a flight from an air base in Thailand to Da Nang. The plane's two crewmen were listed as missing.

Paris Peace Talks Continue

PARIS (AP) - Henry A. Kissinger and Le Duc Tho of North Vietnam met twice yesterday for a total of five hours, opening what may be the final round of secret talks before a Vietnam cease-fire is signed.

A restricted morning session of President Nixon's national security adviser and Tho, the North Vietnamese Politburo member, was followed by a further 2-1/2-hour afternoon meeting in which the full delegations - about 10 officials on both sides - joined Kissinger and Tho at a new rendezvous.

The Florida White House said the talks will continue today.

The complete news blackout that has been imposed throughout Kissinger's 21 previous meetings with the Hanoi Politburo member and other Hanoi negotiators continued in force.

The North Vietnamese chose the luxury villa of a French industrialist at Sainte Gemme, about 20 miles west of Paris, as the latest negotiating site.

It was the third different meeting place used since Kissinger's trips to Paris were made public. The morning session had been held near the North Vietnamese headquarters at Choisy le Roi south of the capital.

The villa used for the afternoon session is set deep in a vast stretch of parkland behind high walls and closed, guarded, iron gates. It was once owned by British group Capt. Peter Townsend, whose romance with Princess Margaret made world headlines in the 1950s.

The White House said Kissinger reported to Nixon at Key Biscayne after the morning session, and that the full negotiating team was assigned to the afternoon meeting.

Administration sources in Washington say the talks are moving to a climax. It has been disclosed that the Saigon administration has issued a directive to senior officials to prepare for a cease-fire.

Saigon's chief administrator at the four power Paris peace talks, Ambassador Pham Dang Lam, said two questions considered crucial by South Vietnam remain to be settled. They were:

—Agreement by North Vietnam to pull out what Saigon says are 300,000 troops from the South;

—A clear definition of the role and function of the proposed National Council for Reconciliation and Concord that would be set up after a ceasefire.

Lam told a meeting of French journalists that the present draft agreement between Washington and Hanoi "does not mention the capital problem" of the North Vietnamese forces. He insisted that the principle of North Vietnamese withdrawal must be written into the agreement "in one way or another."

Calley's Lawyers Charge Westmoreland Interference

FALLS CHURCH, Va. (AP) - Attorneys for Lt. William L. Calley Jr. said Monday interference by Army Chief of Staff William C. Westmoreland prevented the former platoon leader from receiving a fair trial on charges he murdered at least 22 Vietnamese civilians in the My Lai massacre.

Asking a military appeals court to overturn Calley's conviction or reduce his 20-year sentence, the lawyers accused Westmoreland of conducting a highly irregular personal investigation into the shootings at the Vietnamese village. The result, they said, was a "horrible specter of command influence."

The 29-year-old Calley, held under house arrest at Ft. Benning, Ga., was not called upon to appear at the hearing before the Army Court of MilitaryReview.

Still-unpublished Army reports say at least 347 innocent civilians died at the hands of American troops, many of them under Calley's command, on March 16, 1968.

Calley's chief lawyer, George Latimer of Salt Lake City, called the search-and-destroy sweep "the worst-conceived and worst-handled combat operation I've ever heard of."

Another of Calley's lawyers, Capt. Houston Gordon, said Westmoreland, Army commander in Vietnam at the time of the massacre, ordered a colonel on his staff to gather evidence in what Gordon said was a clear attempt to prejudice the outcome against Calley.

Gordon said conflicting directives from Westmoreland's office played a direct role in the final decision to convene a court-martial.

In answering defense charges that Westmoreland sought to influence the outcome of the case before the court-martial began, government lawyer Merle F. Wilberding said, "there was no attempt to exercise influence."

Wilberding, an Army lawyer, said everything Westmoreland said or did about My Lai was done in his official capacity as either commander of American forces in Vietnam or Army chief of staff.

Gordon had also argued that by virtue of Westmoreland's role as commander of the general at Ft. Benning who convened the court-martial, Westmoreland had a personal stake in the outcome of the trial.

NATO Appointee Rumsfeld A Jack-Of-All-Trades

WASHINGTON (AP)-Donald Rumsford, bouncy director of the Cost of Living Council, is the closest thing to a jack-of-all-trades in the Nixon administration, thriving on new jobs and new settings.

But his instincts are strongly political, and many of those around him in government believe that he has his eye on a Senate seat or a higher elective post, perhaps even the White House one day.

The 40-year-old Runsfeld, nominated Monday by President Nixon as ambassador to NATO, has a long list of former titles: congressman from Illinois; White House aide; director of the Office of Economic Opportunity; and even a wrestling champion in the Navy.

Rumsfeld will succeed David Kennedy, former Treasury secretary, as the chief U.S. spokesman within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Rumsfeld was named operating head of the agency overseeing wage-price controls when they went into effect a year ago. Not an economist, he had to cram to learn the field. Within a matter of months, Rumsfeld was speaking with confidence on the economic stabilization program.

That has been his history in government, from Congress to today. He has learned to background himself and move into a new post, demonstrating his flexibility.

'Revenue-Shares' May Be Small

WASHINGTON (AP) - Seeking to head off a flood of protests, the Treasury Department Monday urged state and local governments to be patient if their revenue-sharing checks mailed this week are smaller than they expected.

The first checks to be mailed Friday represent estimates of what some 39,000 state and local government units should receive under a complex formula approved by Congress. The Treasury said it may be early next year before it gets all the data updated.

Although the amount shown on the first checks will be a "damn good estimate," Deputy Treasury Secretary Charles E. Walker said the government is expecting to get a number of calls and complaints from communities receiving less than estimated in earlier calculation made while the bill still was before Congress.

"First of all, they should be patient," Walker said. "If they want to protest, they should wait until the Treasury publishes, some time early next year, the full information on which their checks are based.

"Otherwise, they'll just clog up the lines. Books are going to stay open," he added.

This means that the data on which the first checks are based could be revised. The Treasury says it will adjust any amount due when the next checks are sent out, scheduled early next year.

The small revenue-sharing office has been receiving about 100 telephone calls each day with questions on the program. That number is expected to rise considerably after the first checks arrive.

The first checks will total approximately $2.7 billion which is part of a five-year, $30-billion program. Unlike earlier federal-aid programs, almost no strings are attached to spending of the money.

The complicated formula for distribution of the money is based on personal income, tax effort and population.

Apollo 17: Nighttime Fireworks

CAPE KENNEDY, (AP) - For amateur photographers who are quick, well-prepared and lucky, the nighttime launch Wednesday of Apollo 17 will be a unique opportunity to capture the most spectacular fireworks ever.

The Saturn 5 will rise off its launch pad atop a 2,200-foot pillar of fire - a manmade Haley's comet visible, if the weather is good, for 500 miles around.

On its pad, the space vehicle will be lit like the $450-million prima donna it is by 225 foot-candles of light, provided by 72 searchlights of 20 kilowatts each and two 60 kilowatt searchlight banks.

In photographer's English, that means a shutter speed of 1-50 second and the following F-stops for various films: ASA-25, f2.8; ASA 64-80, f3.5; ASA 160, f5.6; ASA 400, f8.

At liftoff, the flaming exhaust will produce 7,500 foot-candles of light equaling the brilliance of sunlight. Photographers at the launch site will have 18 seconds to capture the searchlight - illuminated rocket and its hellish tailfire.

The exposure then, space experts say, will still be 1-50 second with lens apertures for the various speed films going down 4.5, 5.6, 8, 11 and 16.

English Course In January

The English Department will offer a one credit course on "The Novels of John Hawkes" during January. The course will be taught by Professor Charles Moran and will meet one hour a day, Monday through Friday, from January 8-19. Anyone interested in enrolling in this course should leave his or her name in the Undergraduate Studies Office in Bartlett 252 by December 14. There will be an organizational meeting to discuss details of the course (meeting times, reading assignments, etc.,) on December 14 at 10 a.m. in Bartlett 456.

If any students are interested in independent study in English during January, one to three credits of work can be arranged and the Undergraduate Studies staff will assist students in obtaining supervisors for their work. Applications for independent study should include a brief description or outline of the work and should be brought to the Undergraduate Studies Office by December 15. The number of supervisors available for January projects is limited and preference will be given to seniors majoring in English.

'The Cage' To Be Presented

"The Cage," a drama written inside San Quentin by Rick Cluchey, who researched it during twelve years of imprisonment, will be performed at 8 p.m. tonight in Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College. Tickets may be purchased at the door for $2.

The 80-minute one-act play is performed by ex-convicts, both on parole and off. Its four characters act out liturgical and legal fantasies with often hilarious, but ultimately lethal effects.

The play presents prison life as horrible and brutal, but it is not primarily a call for prison reform or a protest against the American judicial system. Instead, it is an intricate statement about the "mythic structures of society, which we create and to which we give obeisance, in order to hide from the ugly truths about ourselves."

Author Cluchey considers the play a work in progress. With Ken Whelan, Cluchey formed the Barbwire Theater after being released from prison and following nine years of active participation in the San Quentin Drama Workshop. During three national tours, the play and its production have changed with the political climate of the country, incorporating new references to such major national issues as Attica and the Marin County courthouse shootout that brought Angela Davis into international prominence.

Whelan, who has acted the 'Jesus freak' role of Hatchett in dominating the four-walled cage which gives the play its title, explains its purpose this way: "We're trying to show the consequences of caging people who have problems, to show how this aggravates and magnifies problems. There are no heroes."

The drama touches on moral, religious and social issues. Its thin line between fantasy and reality is reminiscent of the absurdist plays of Genet, Pinter and Beckett.

Boycott Lettuce

A lettuce boycott has entered it's initial stages here. It remains to be seen how effective it will be, but the Collegian supports the boycott and urges all students to do likewise.

A United Farm Workers support group has been organizing on campus. They have put up posters and held meeting with Director of Food Services Joel Stoneham in an attempt to get United Farm Workers lettuce in the Dining Commons.

The effects of the boycott are unknown at this time. Stoneham has said that he does not know whether the lettuce Food Services buys is union or non-union until it is received. In any case, the bid goes to the lowest bidder.

We would ask Stoneham that he bid for lettuce only when UFW lettuce is available. We would guess a call to the supplier would be enough to inform him. If there is union, lettuce (UFW not Teamsters) Food Services should bid, but accept the bid only if the lowest bidder is UFW lettuce.

The farm workers the UFW represents are among the lowest paid, hardest working, and among the most exploited workers in the nation. UMass students and administration would do well to boycott all but United Farm Workers lettuce.

Just A Few Good Men

"The Marines are looking for a few good men who want to fly." So reads the front cover of the pamphlet that's being circulated throughout campus by the proponents of the Marine ROTC program. Why would it be that the Marine Corps is only pleading for a few good men? My guess is they don't have any yet. But let me not be the judge of that, but rather, let us read on within the pamphlet.

"THE MEN...there is a certain bond among all flyers. But for these men, the unique camaraderie of the Marine Corps is even stronger. They breathe the free air of individualism, in an atmosphere of mutual respect, good humor and pride. First, they'll tell you they're Marines. Then...they might mention something about airplanes."

It appears from this pamphlet that all is Jim Dandy in the Marines-that each member is an individual full of love and understanding. One should always be careful to check both sides of a coin before it is flipped, however.

A man I know is in the Marine Reserves, and he has showed me the other side of the coin. He has told me that the sergeants have a lovely habit of calling you down for what you are. After all, if you're a Marine, you should be strong enough not to let meager words like "kike", "nigger", or "commie pig" bother you. After all, if you're a Marine, you should be brave enough not to be bothered by a few pelting fists coming towards your head because you dared to voice an opposing viewpoint or claim you were proud of voting for George McGovern. After all, if you're a Marine, you "breathe the free air of individualism, in an atmosphere of mutual respect, good humor and pride."

Another friend of mine at a school in Pennsylvania gave me a general run-down of the program that he, himself, is enrolled in. He told me the Marines give him 300 dollars per semester as a stipend, but this is not sheer generosity on the part of the government. For every year my friend accepts this money, he must later serve with the Marines for 6 months. He told me the Marines made this very clear, but what they didn't make so clear is that there's no out. If you drop the program or if they drop you from the program, they send you to a little island off the coast of North Carolina called Paris Island. Paris Island is not a regular Reserves or ROTC training base. Rather, it is a regular Marine base with regular hard-core, enlisted Marines. "First, they'll tell you they're Marines. Then...they might mention something about airplanes." What do you do then, college boy?

I bear no grudge against the Marines in particular, but it is only this branch of the service that I chose to research. Actually, there are many of you that would probably like the Marine Reserves or ROTC programs, but you should have the right to know both viewpoints before you decide. Instead, my grudge is borne against the Pentagon as a whole, for releasing this obvious propaganda at the expense of the American people. That's right. Or didn't it occur to you that millions of dollars are wasted each year on flashy, colorful brochures on the many different ways to defend your country? In all fairness, the government should put out pamphlets on how to attack it also. It would be no more preposterous than what they're doing now. If the government must waste money on pamphlets and commercial advertisements, then it should, at least, make them objective, as to be acceptable to either faction, left or right, within our country. If the Marines are truly "looking for a few good men who want to fly", then let them be straightforward and lay it on the line. Then we will know if they really have nothing to hide.

Questionable Investment

The Campus Center fee may be paying for a lot of things but the only benefit the average student gets from it is a place to stand when it rains. Every student pays a $62.50 Campus Center fee. Last year 21,560 people payed a Campus Center fee. That means that the student body payed $1,347,500 to keep the old C.C. operating. It is very questionable if we get a million dollars worth of services from the Campus Center. Each students definitely does not get sixty-two dollars worth of services each year. The Campus Center provides very few "services" to the individual student. Even these services are more oriented towards profit than at serving the student body.

Some "free services" are provided for students. The Music Room, the TV's, some phones and the chairs are all free. Some times you can study on the 8th or 9th floor. If an R.S.O. group isn't meeting there, or the door isn't locked, or some convention isn't there or a janitor doesn't throw you out or they don't shut the floor down on you, these rooms are always available. Elevator and escalator service is still free. however. The Music Room may be free but it is often in poor condition and crowded. The TV's are often broken.

Groups of students can get more benefits from the Campus Center. R.S.O. gets over $200,000 from the Campus Center for operational expenses. This $200,000 is very distant from the 1.3 million we pay in, however. Meeting rooms are provided for groups like the Student Senate, the YSA, the Christian Science Organization, etc. Groups can use the C.C. Auditorium to show movies and hold other social functions but these are not very often free for the individual student.

The University Store might be considered a service but it isn't. The University Store is not designed to serve students. It's designed to generate revenue. Some people may argue that the two goals are interwound, but even if they are the benefits are very indirect and you'll probably never see the benefits anyway. The University Store is something like the company store in a mining town. Unless you have a car or live off campus it's a long trek downtown or to Zayre's. Prices at the store tend to be high. The store always seems to have plenty of the small size of an item, but it does not seem to have the economy size very often. This could be because they don't stock enough of it. Students pay sixty-two dollars to run the C.C. a year. Yet, they pay the same prices in the store as everyone else. The new name for the store should be the "Rip-off" unless some changes are made. First lower prices more of the large sizes and fewer of the extra small personal sizes of products. No one expects the store to stock the extra large size of every detergent but economy sizes of other commodities could be more available. Students who pay the C.C. fee should receive some sort of preferential treatment. Lower prices for instance.

Some departments in the store could be phased out. The stereo department would be one. It cannot compete in price, quality or quantity with the establishments in town. This department should be abolished to provide more basic services to the students.

The Bluewall, the Coffee Shop and the Top of the Campus are open to many of the same criticisms. They generate profit, not services. They do not discriminate between those who pay a C.C. fee and those who do not. Prices in the Coffee Shop are just a bit steep. The Bluewall has reasonable prices if you're over twenty-one and a lot of students aren't. Some people feel that the convenience of the Store and the other facilities are worth the sixty-two dollars a year. This is absurd. Does Shopper's World charge you money to shop there because it's nearby? Charging sixty-two dollars and then letting someone buy meals and other products is very strange. The C.C. fee is like a cover charge and a very high one.

Conventioners pay a dollar a day C.C. fee. This may help pay for the C.C. and keep the fee we pay down a little but they seem to get more for their dollar than we get for a dollar. All the facilities that are closed to people under twenty-one are open to them. They pay the same prices for food and books. They make the lines in the Coffee Shop very long. I think they get more for their dollar than we get for one of ours.

The Campus Center does not provide each student with sixty-two dollars worth of services. People who belong to R.S.O. groups get more out of the CC than people who don't. People over twenty-one can use more of the facilities than minors. Some steps should be taken to make the Campus Center more useful to students. It should be worth the sixty-two dollars a year. When the fee is ninety dollars the services each student gets out of it should be ninety dollars. If the Campus Center Complex cannot provide services to the student body at the same rate it taxes them, then it has lost its reason for existence. If it cannot serve us it should not be there. Maybe Housing could use the 8th and 9th floors for a new dorm...

Letters To The Editor

Commuter Vote

To The Editor:

Apathy seems to be an inherent condition on this campus. Nowhere is it more prevalent than in the area of commuter government. Thirty-five people constitute a quorum for a Commuter Assembly meeting; but only twice in four attempts has a quorum been achieved. This is especially bad considering that there are over 6,000 commuters and membership only requires that one be an undergraduate commuter. But alas, at the last quorumed Commuter Assembly meeting (Friday, Nov. 17), those present voted to commit the agenda to referendum for decision; which brings us to the point of this letter.

Today is the referendum and an election to fill three vacancies on the Executive Council. It is being conducted in the Duke's Room of the Student Union from 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. The issues committed to the commuter's referendum are:

CA73-1—Move to expend up to $1,000 to renovate and improve the conditions in the Commuter Lounge (Brady). If passed, this money would be used to make the Commuter Lounge environment condusive to relaxation and study between classes.

CA73-2—Move to fund the Commuter Assembly Housing Committee up to $3,000 in order to publish a "Housing and Tenant Guide."(Merluzzi)

If passed, this money would be used to cover the costs necessary to put together and publish this "Guide".

CA73-5—Move to expend up to $1,500 for purchasing and building lockers for commuters. (Mark)

If passed, up to $1,500 would be expended for the purchase and construction of lockers for commuters to be given out on a first-come, first-serve basis.

CA73-6—Move that the Commuter Assembly express its intent to expend those monies granted to it by 73-S18 passed 11/15/72 by the Student Senate, for joint projects with other Area Governments and that the President of the Commuter Assembly inform the other Area Governments of this intent. (Booker)

The Student Senate has returned to the Area Governments (on a per-capita basis) about $10,000. If this bill is passed, the other Area Governments would be informed of Commuter Assembly's willingness to do things together that neither could afford to do alone.

CA73-7—Move to appropriate $1,000 to RSO 455, Emergency Loan Fund, in category 259-Loans. (Doran)

If passed, this money would be used to help fund an abortion loan fund.

Plus an opportunity for commuters to pick the time most convenient for a Commuter Assembly meeting.

We urge all commuters to show some response and vote. Otherwise, you let an elitist body decide how your $17,000 will be spent. TODAY – DUKE ROOM, S.U. 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. VOTE!

Sincerely,
Commuter Assembly Executive Council

Soviet Tax Unfair

To The Editor:

I am confused about the recent protest concerning the Soviet tax on people with a higher education wishing to emigrate from the Soviet Union. (This tax is on everybody not just Jews, though it is mainly Jews who are emigrating and also Jewish people for their numbers have received more education than any other group.) Is the protest just concerning the existence of this tax, or is the tax exorbitant?

If it is just the former, I don't think the protest makes much sense. After all the Soviet society does pay for people's education. Workers' salaries go into both private consumption funds and public consumption funds. This public consumption fund not only supplies completely free higher education but also pays salaries to at least 75% of the students. Now if people who have been paid to go to school and who wish to leave the society that footed the bill are asked to pay back some of this before they leave, it doesn't seem unfair to me.

After all you can't emigrate from the U.S.A. if you have any debts. And many Jews whom the Israeli government has helped to immigrate to Israel with financial aid and now wish to emigrate from Israel (many Soviet Jews wish to return to the Soviet Union to escape high unemployment especially among intellectuals in Israel) are forced to pay back all the money the Israeli government has funded them. But where is the protest about the Israeli head tax?

'Salting The Wounds'

To The Editor:

It seems as though not only are the Chairmen and Officers of the Senate involved in politics, but the Staff of The Collegian appears to be preoccupied in seeking favor with the very Senate elite it seeks to criticize. Under the guise of a free and responsible press, an editor has breached the rules of propriety that have made it possible in the past for the Senate to reform itself.

In an effort to resolve the problems within the Senate, President Ladd gave an adamant speech to a closed or "Executive Session" of the Senate, discussing freely (without fear of libelous publicity for the Chairmen) the problems he perceived as the reasons for the Senate's ineffectiveness. The purpose of giving his speech in a closed session was clear. This was to be a non-political and private house-cleaning affair.

This editor has obviously felt the need for an effective Senate, for he so indicated in previous editorials. He probably realizes that when public pressures and political overtones must be attached to a president's efforts to reform the Senate, the reforms themselves can become secondary to the politics involved.

Consequently, Executive Editor Tripoli's article describing the goings on during the closed session of the Senate cannot be conSidered beneficial to either the Senate or the people whom the Senate represents. Publishing that editorial only served to unnecessarily discredit the individuals criticized quite harshly last Wednesday. No constructive purpose can be served by Executive Editor Tripoli's attempt at salting the wounds.

Not only do I consider this a demonstration of irresponsibility by the press, but it seems to be a ploy for Mr. Tripoli's political aspirations.

It is indeed a sad state of affairs when skull-digging tactics are used by office seekers within the Collegian to better their position. In light of this development, it is apparent that the interests of the public were not represented nearly as well as those of Executive Editor Tripoli.

Respectfully yours,
Lisa Noble
Student Senator

'Better Representation'

To The Editor:

Steve Tripoli's editorial column on the Student Senate's palace intrigue misses the point. My speech to the Senate was not intended to denounce three individual committee chairpersons, although I fear that it created that impression. The intent of the speech was to say that the Student Senate should be spending its time and energies protecting and advancing the interests of the student body, rather than engaging in internal power games that serve no useful purpose. Of course, most student senators are unaware that these games are being played and are unaware of the hidden agendas behind some of the items currently appearing on the Senate agendas. The purpose of the speech was to bring the issue into the open. Judging from the misinterpretations I have heard, the speech was a mistake that I regret.

I do fear that a few members of the Senate are using me and the special assistants as scapegoats for a variety of internal Senate problems. This has occurred primarily because the communication channels between the Senate and myself have been in sad disrepair. Distance breeds mistrust. The last thing we need is a student government that wastes its energy on internal squabbles. The student body deserves better representation than that.

Friends of Belchertown

To The Editor:

On Saturday, December 2, the class from the Orchard Hill "Practicum in Mental Retardation" held a Christmas party for 20 Belchertown residents from G building that we have been working with all semester. For about a week prior to the party we went to all of the supermarkets in the area. Only 4 out of 10 donated food and we would like to thank them on behalf of the kids from Belchertown. The stores were: The Big Y and Dunkin' Donut in Northampton, and Zayre's and McManus in South Hadley. We received many rude refusals in some stores, and it was nice to know that some people still care enough to give. Those kids really enjoyed it!

We would also like to urge everyone to go hear Larry Brown speak on Wednesday night. He is a member of the task force who recently published their studies on the Mass. Department of Mental Health, entitled "Suffer the Children."

Sincerely,

Smorgasbord Thanks

To The Editor:

To all who attended the international smorgasbord in Hampden last Saturday night, thanks for coming. We hope that after enduring the long line you enjoyed the meal and had fun. Most people seemed to think the food was great, with a couple of exceptions who couldn't come to terms with certain tastes. If we can find volunteer cooks again and a large enough place to hold it, another smorgasbord should be forthcoming from the international community next Spring. Watch for it.

To those who could not wait, could not get tickets or were otherwise upset by the disorder at the starting gate: our apologies. Despite all the international cooking talent, none of us had really run a smorgasbord before. The food was late, some of it got cold and in due time it all ran out. We were not geared to receive the bulk of customers within the first fifteen minutes of serving. Rest assured that we are as aware of what went wrong as you may be, and that next time things will run more smoothly. You will be better served. Perhaps there will be a trifle fewer free meals to those whose enthusiasm for culinary delights eclipsed their willingness to pay. This time consider yourselves guests.

The general concensus is that the event was a consumer success. The International Club seems to have made a little money for its other activities too. Those who stayed on with the folk dancing kept that event going till close to midnight. Many old hands at cross-cultural workshops found reason to get together again and renew their ties.

We'd like to express a broad vote of thanks to the Hampden Dining Common staff, specifically to Mr. Richard L. Ellis and to the supervisory cooks Mr. Bob Landry, Ms. Esther Adamsky and Ms. Sophie Petrowski who showed the volunteers how to work things and find things in the large kitchen. Ms. Shirley Stanford, Catering Coordinator, was a part of making the whole thing possible. Your cooperation was marvellous, everyone.

But particular thanks go to individual students who got it all together with the various dishes from Africa, China, Denmark, India, Latin America and the Middle East. Those of you who cooked and served with such good will are too many to mention. But you know, and we know. You gave the denizens of Amherst a good evening of fun.

Finally, to Ed King and the international folk dancers who added music and grace after dinner, teaching and showing steps to different lively dances, our appreciation. You tied it all together very well.

School Of Ed. Offering Flexible Curriculum Plan

The following list represents Education learning experiences that are now available under the School of Education's Flexible Curriculum. The purpose of the Flexible Curriculum is to provide alternative choices when developing a program of studies. By maintaining a modified record-keeping and scheduling system within the School of Education, which supplements the University's system, it is possible to have courses which break away from the three-credit, full semester standard.

Who's eligible: University Students (Preference to Education Students.)
Tuition:
1. No cost to undergraduates.
2. No cost to graduates registered for more than 10 credits.
3. Graduate students with less than 10 credits will register and pay second semester except for tuition waivers.

Credit:
1. 100 mods equal 1 credit.
2. Graduate students with less than 10 credits will receive credit second semester.

Registration:
1. Where: Room 121, School of Education.
2. When: Prior to the second meeting of the learning experience.
3. Full time students may get forms to register.

LEARNING EXPERIENCES OFFERED:

Financial Aid Applications

Financial aid applications for 1973-74, including Summer School 1973 and all special summer programs sponsored by the University, will be available in the Financial Aid Office, Room 232, Whitmore Administration Building, after January 1, 1973.

All students wishing to be considered for any type of aid whether or not assistance has been received previously, must file an application.

The deadline for filing is March 1, 1973.

Peck To Speak At Hampshire

Jim Peck, a nonviolent actionist in the peace and black freedom movements since the 1930's, will speak at Hampshire College tomorrow. His lecture, one of a series sponsored by the Symposium on Post-WarAmerica, will focus on "Post War Organizing for Peace and Civil Rights." It will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the west lecture hall of the Academic Building.

Since his 1942-45 prison term as a conscientious objector Peck has been working for the War Resisters League, a pacifist organization with headquarters in London and branches in 20 countries. From 1948 to 1965 he also worked for CORE, serving as editor of the COREIator.

Arrested 35 times in various non-violent actions, Peck was injured in Alabama during the first Freedom Ride (1961) and in Miami Beach during the Republican National Convention (1972). He is the author of three books: We Who Would Not Kill, Freedom Ride, and Underdogs Versus Upperdogs.

Mr. Peck's lecture is open to the public without charge.

Pre-Med Notice

The Pre-Medical Advisory Committee is now taking applications for the pre-professional programs. If you are interested, fill out an application (which can be found in Room 217, Hasbrouck Lab.) before December 15. You may not be a pre-med, dent, or vet major without going through this interview, and application procedure.

FOOD INSURANCE

There is now an alternative available to commuters and others who do not possess board plans and who are tired of the standard snack bar bill of fare. The University Food Services Department is offering two five meal ticket plans to those who wish to eat at one of the dining commons for a change of pace, or as a convenience. We refer to these plans as our Insurance policies because they insure you against the loss of your valuable time and money during your stay on campus.

The first plan provides you with five lunch tickets which may be redeemed at any of the dining commons at any time during the semester. This plan insures you against the loss of your noon hour, which somehow seems to be squeezed out of existence by morning and afternoon classes. For commuter this means staying on campus rather than traveling home for lunch. For others, it means a short walk from most any place on campus to one of the dining commons. The end result is more time for you to relax between classes.

The second plan provides you with five dinner meal tickets which also may be used in any of the dining commons at any time during the semester. This plan insure you against having to leave the campus for dinner and return for an evening class, study at the library, or a social event. It allows you to dine on campus, thus eliminating the hassle of washing pots and pans. Either plan makes it a simple deal to eat with a friend who has a meal ticket, or to forego with winter ordeal of slogging across acres of slush and snow.

The cost of the lunch plan is $6.75, while the dinner plan is $9.25. Two factors make these plans a good buy. First, you are saving substantially over the cost of five individually purchased meals. Secondly, you are acquiring excellent reserve protection against an uncertain future. By investing your money now in one of these plans you assure yourself of a meal some weeks from now when your pockets may be empty. Both plans are available at the main office of the University Food Service Department located in Worcester dining commons. Whether you choose to look at it in terms of time or money, you're going to save.

Amalgamated Grease

Concert To Benefit Sunset Farms

A benefit concert to raise money for Sunset Farms in Northfield, Massachusetts, will be held in Worcester Dining Commons Thursday evening, December 7, at 9 p.m.--admission 50 cents. Sponsored by the Central Area Council, the Amalgamated Grease Band, having volunteered their services, will perform rock'n roll of the late fifties and early sixties.

Performing "golden oldies", Amalgamated Grease will play hits by Fats Domino, Jerry Lee Lewis, Chuck Berry, and more. The program will be very similar to the former dances given by the Little Latin Larry group--centering on dancing and the "atmosphere of the fifties".

The money raised at the concert will go towards the renovation costs for a crafts project at Sunset Farms. Founded and directed by Neal Smith, former Head of Residence of Hills North, the farm is a group home for teenagers who formerly were residents of various state juvenile detention centers.

Sunset Farms' purpose is to provide for the teenagers there a stable home experience which the detention centers could not give them. It emphasizes the day-to-day family experience of cooperative and supportive behavior. The teenager live on the farm year round and go to public schools in the Northfield area.

On the farm they participate in organic farming, crafts, and outdoor skills. Future plans call for the development of a craft center and the renovation of a large hay-barn on the property for this purpose. While the state underwrites the basic financial needs of the farm, extra projects such as these are dependent upon contributions from the public, and fund-raising activities such as Thursday's concert.

Amalgamated Grease's last concert was a sell-out at Lehman Hall, Harvard University. They are tentatively scheduled to appear with Chubby Checker at Boston University in the spring.

Granitsas To Lecture On 'Celestial Imperialism'

"Celestial Imperialism", or the politics of international television communication by satellite, will be the topic of a lecture at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 7, in Room 205 Bartlett Hall.

The speaker will by Spyridon Granitsas, a foreign correspondent who has covered the internal scene on three continents for the past 25 years. Last year he won a national award for his study of foreign correspondents at the United Nations.

Granitsas, who has a law degree from the University of Paris (Sorbonne), will speak on current efforts to draw an international treaty governing broadcasts from satellites. Socialist and Third World Nations in the UN recently voted unanimously against the United States policy of open, uncensored airwaves, citing fears that this actually might mean turning satellite broadcast over to American "cultural imperialism."

Granitsas was a foreign correspondent for major liberal newspapers and magazines in Greece until the right-wing putsch in his native country. He now lives in New York City, where he has worked for educational television, the United Nations and as a university teacher.

TURN IN YOUR YOUTH CARD FOR TWA's.
YOU'LL GET A TOP LP ALBUM AND A WHOLE LOT OF THE WORLD FOR FREE.

It may sound funny to turn in your card for a free TWA card, but it's worth it. If you turn in your American or United or whatever other airline's youth card you have to your campus representative or any TWA counter (or pay $3 for a new one, if you don't have one to turn in), you'll get more than any other airline offers you. Maximum discounts on TWA and all other airlines, more free things and, on top of all that, a free album.

FREE ALBUM—FIRST 10,000.

First, you'll get a Record Club of America coupon good for your choice of a free top album worth up to $6.98. From a list of over 100 incredibles. Like Three Dog Night, Neil Diamond, Roberta Flack, Elton John. Plus a free lifetime membership in Record Club of America, with no obligation to buy any record. The offer's limited to the first 10,000, so you've got to do it soon.

FREE MONEY-SAVING COUPONS.

When you land in any of six cities (London, Boston, Paris, Los Angeles, San Francisco or Denver) with your TWA card, you'll get a brochure full of hundreds of dollars' worth of deals. And we mean deals. Like absolutely free or 50% off.

What we did was to talk to students in those cities and ask where they'd take their friends—not just the "in" places, but the spots that only the knowing would know about. And those are the ones we give you free dinners, drinks, club memberships or discounts in. Here are just some of the absolutely free things you'll get in London and Boston, as an example of what TWA has arranged for you in all the cities.

BOSTON FREEBEES.

FREE
A spaghetti dinner at the "Spaghetti Emporium, Inc.," just off Harvard Square.

FREE
Breakfast in the "Pewter Pot Muffin House" (14 locations) where many Harvard students stop first in the morning.

FREE
Admission to the "Prudential Center Skywalk," the first place to go to get your bearings in Boston.

FREE
Combination health food platter from "Corners of the Mouth" restaurant. A healthy buffet of hot and cold dishes.

FREE
Quiche lorraine and cup of coffee at "La Crepe."

FREE
Indian soup and vegetable curry at the "India Sweet House" restaurant in Cambridge.

FREE
Pair of earrings or pendant (and watch it being made) at "Whaler's Wharf."

FREE
Admission to "Passim Coffeehouse" during great evening performances. Or, during the day, a free beverage and dessert.

FREE
Hour of bike riding from "Streeter & Quarles" on Boylston Street.

LONDON FREEBEES.

FREE
Admission to any of ten Greyhound Racing Tracks. A great English sport.

FREE
Membership and drink at "La Valbonne," one of the toughest clubs to get a membership in, even for Londoners.

FREE
A full breakfast at your choice of 10 Quality Inns, famous for their hearty fare.

FREE
A pint of "Watney's Red Barrel" in "The Prospect of Whitby," or your choice of over 40 London pubs.

TV Ads Give Consumer Little Reliable Info

WASHINGTON (AP)--A study of advertising claims for new television sets says 32 of 50 claims were unsubstantiated and it concludes that the consumer receives little reliable information.

"This report amply demonstrates that, at least as of 1971, most television manufacturers were not adequately checking either the veracity or the meaning of their advertisements before release," the report said.

It was prepared by the Institute for Public Interest Representation of the Georgetown University Law Center in Washington at the request of the Federal Trade Commission.

The report recommended that the FTC establish guidelines for advertising of television sets. The FTC said it wished to review the findings.

The report said Sears, Roebuck had the largest number of unsubstantiated claims for television sets. Out of 15 claims, the report said, 11 were unsubstantiated, and four were substantiated but were not unique.

Radio Corporation of America had three unsubstantiated claims out of eight, the report said. It praised RCA for instituting a policy of requiring engineers to review its advertisements. This was said to have been done shortly after the FTC asked for substantiation of the claims.

Out of the 50 claims that were investigated, the report said, four were considered substantiated and unique, 14 were substantiated but deceptive because the features were not unique, and 32 were unsubstantiated.

CCEBS Election

An election for CCEBS Undergraduate Student Representatives to the CCEBS Board of Directors will be held tonight from 6:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. in the lobby of New Africa House. Every CCEB student is encouraged to vote and should vote. Voting will be by ballot and the representatives will be determined by popular vote.

Mr. William Cloud of the Emory University Law School (Atlanta, Georgia)
will be visiting on Thursday, Dec. 7 from 1:20 to 5 p.m. to interview prospective students. Opportunity knocks.

Stroll Through Your Mind

In order to introduce people to the area of personnel growth and the development of their human potential, the New England Center for Personal and Organizational Development is conducting an evening of introductory experiences at the Center today from 7:00 to 11:00 p.m. During this evening people will experience a variety of approaches to personal growth and self-exploration that are employed in the workshops at the Center. These include gestalt, meditation, psychosynthesis, sensory awareness, psychodrama, fantasy, verbal and non-verbal communication and methods used to increase self-concept and self-confidence.

Since space is limited to 50 people, please call the Center in advance to reserve a space. The phone number is 549-0886.

Symphony Orchestra To Give Concert

"The UMass Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Ronald Steele, will present a concert tomorrow at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

"Included in the program will be the 'Hebrides Overture' by Mendelssohn, 'Five Pieces for String Orchestra' by Paul Hindemith, and Dvorak's 'Symphony No. 6 in D.'

"Students from Hampshire College, Mount Holyoke College, and UMass, and residents of the Amherst-Springfield area comprise the personnel for the Symphony Orchestra. Tomorrow's program will be repeated Dec. 10 at Mount Holyoke College and Dec. 11 at Worcester Polytechnic Institute.

"The concert is open to the public without charge."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Sagittarius often is outspoken but generally fair. Many athletes are born under this sign and so are philosophers and those who study in foreign countries. These persons are articulate and generally become expert in their chosen fields of endeavor. Some famous Sagittarians include William Buckley, Maria Callas and Kurt Waldheim.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Find out where you want to go and why. Take new look at current situation. Be sure you are getting fair deal. Protect your interests. Leo could play significant role. Travel and publishing now are accented.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Deception could be involved in special count, inventory, royalties. Strive for balance. Insist on view of facts, figures. Friend who means well may not be fully informed. Know it and act accordingly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Those who usually are decisive may now express doubts. Display versatility. Reach beyond apparent limitations. Check with legal expert. Obtain hint from Taurus message. Find out what's coming in, going out.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't be in too much of a hurry. Evaluate, judge and base conclusions on facts, not fancy. Aquarius, Scorpio persons could be in picture. Be aware of pacing, details. Thorough approach is necessary. Be specific.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be ready for changes but be analytical. You could get involved in emotional situation. Weigh various factors. Don't risk something of value for temporary sensation. You will understand. Key is to be mature.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What appears oppressive may merely be a temporary delay. There really is no reason to be discouraged. You will find a way out of apparent dilemma. Family member is involved. Activity is centered at home base.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent is on movement, ideas, ability to persuade those who are natural skeptics. Don't promise more than can be delivered. Strive now to be realistic. See situations, people as they actually exist.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Obtain hint from Libra messages. You exhibit tendency now to see romantic version of events. For your own good, you should draw head on actuality. Finish project. Leave no loose ends. Your judgment will be on target.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Aura of glamor is featured. Maintain mood of mystery. Don't reveal all. Work behind scenes. Relative, nughbor lends helping hand. Refuse to be intimidated by one who makes veiled threat. You are due to emerge victorious.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Not wise now to mix money and friends. Some persons seem to want to lose. Stay away from that breed. Strive for new policy in connection with desires, wishes, ultimate goals. Get money's worth.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You make favorable impression on one you respect. You are able now to make imprint, to put across your own style. Don't permit any person to dissuade you from doing what you feel is best. Sagittarian is in picture.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a natural character analyst. You will soon be relieved of burden. You make exciting new start in 1973, with July indicated as your outstanding month in that year. You are fond of travel and have natural ability as a writer. You are perceptive, fair and have an abundance of courage.

Troubled Rodgers Heisman Favorite

NEW YORK (AP) - College football crowns its No. 1 individual player of the 1972 season Tuesday with the selection of the Heisman Trophy winner and at the same time answers a hotly debated question.

Should a player's private life be taken into consideration or should he be chosen on performance and value to his team alone?

On the latter gauge, the man rated by most observers as most qualified for the honor is Johnny Rodgers, the 5-foot-9, 173-pound all-purpose Nebraska ace.

The versatile runner, pass receiver and kick return specialist, he has been the wheelhorse of a powerful team that won national championships in 1970 and 1971 and finished this year with an 8-2-1 record and an Orange Bowl ticket.

However, an editorial campaign has been launched in some quarters, concentrated in the East, against the selection of Rodgers because of youthful clashes with the law.

In 1970, Rodgers and some of his pals were charged in a service station robbery that netted $90. He was placed on probation.

On another occasion, he was held on suspicion of possessing marijuana, yet no evidence was produced and no charge made. Last spring he was arrested for running a stop sign while driving with a suspended license.

The resulting publicity was damaging, but Rodgers immediately set about changing his "bad kid" image. He has been active in visiting hospitals and schools and helping counsel other youngsters.

"If Rodgers is the outstanding football player, he should be picked on his record on the football field and nothing else," his supporters insist.

Gene Ward, New York Daily News columnist who has written that Rodgers should not be considered because of his off-field record, rationalized Monday:

"The rule of candidacy for the Heisman Award is limited to one word - 'outstanding.' I take 'outstanding' to encompass actions on and off the field..."

Rodgers' football record is one of the most impressive in the game's history. During his three-year varsity career, he has averaged 13.8 yards every time he's handled the ball, not counting pass receptions, a mark no other player in college history has matched.

This year, the season on which the Heisman Award must be based, Rodgers accounted for a total of 2,011 yards in the all-purpose category, averaging 182.8 yards a game in running from scrimmage, catching passes, returning kickoffs and punts.

He scored 17 touchdowns.

Rodgers' chief rivals for Heisman honors are John Hufnagel, quarterback from Penn State; Greg Pruitt, the spearhead of Oklahoma's wishbone offense; Terry Davis, Alabama quarterback; Bert Jones, passing ace of Louisiana State; Gary Huff of Florida State, the nation's total offense leader; Anthony Davis, Southern California's super soph, and Rich Glover, Nebraska's defensive giant who has pro scouts drooling.

Angelic B's Close In On Montreal

BOSTON (AP)--The big, bad Boston Bruins may not be quite as bad as the reputation they picked up with their bruising tactics the past few years.

The Bruins kept fists, sticks and tempers in check and didn't draw a single penalty Sunday night in extending their unbeaten streak to nine games in a 5-1 victory over the New York Islanders before 15,003 fans at the Garden.

"Our club can play tough any time it has to, but tonight there was no need," Boston Coach Tom Johnson said. "Our fellows play the style necessary, according to how the other club plays."

The Bruins, 8-0-1 in their last nine starts, moved to within four points of first place Montreal in the East Division as the Canadians were upset by Philadelphia. The New York Rangers are second, two points ahead of Boston.

The Bruins jumped to a 2-0 first period lead on goals by Ken Hodge, his 11th, and Mike Walton, his 12th, while blitzing Islander goalie Billy Smith with 19 shots.

Fred Stanfield scored his ninth goal and Johnny Bucyk his 11th within 38 seconds in the final minute of the second period, and Don Marcotte connected for his 12th in the third period after Ron Henning tallied for New York.

"Those two quick goals at the end of the second period really broke it open, but we had a heck of a first period, too," Johnson said.

"The final score doesn't really indicate the play," Islander Coach Phil Goyette said. "We were in there until they got those two quick goals. They hurt us badly."

Smith, a former favorite with the Springfield Kings in the American Hockey League, robbed the Bruins with several spectacular saves. He finished with 38 saves.

John Adams, Boston's rookie goalie, extended his unbeaten record to four games 3-0-1 by turning aside 28 New York scoring bids.

"Adams has been a real big plus for us since being brought up to fill in for Ross Brooks, who got hurt after turning in four good games," Johnson said. "Eddie Johnston will be in goal for us against St. Louis Thursday night, but Adams will get plenty of work. When Brooks is ready to return, I'll have one of my most pleasant problems."

Walton also had a pair of assists in leading the Bruins to a fourth consecutive triumph over the expansion Islanders. Bobby Orr, travelling at high speed after missing the first few weeks of the season because of a knee problem, also had two assists.

UCLA No. 1--Ho-Hum

(AP)--It's UCLA and the 19 dwarfs.

The Bruins have won 48 straight, including a 3-0 start on a new season, and Monday were again unanimously voted No. 1 in The Associated Press major college basketball poll.

UCLA bagged all 35 first-place votes from writers and broadcasters in a continuing landslide of the magnitude that would even make them happy at the White House.

Next mountain for Coach John Wooden's unbeatables is the 60 in a row record set by the University of San Francisco in the Bill Russell era of the mid-fifties.

The nation's top five remained intact with Florida State taking second, followed by Maryland, Minnesota and Marquette.

Maryland outpolled Florida State 16-10 in second place votes, but Coach Hugh Durham's Seminoles kept a solid grip on No. 2 with more consistent support from voters.

UCLA walloped Bradley 73-38 and University of Pacific 81-48 last week. Florida State opened with a 109-97 victory over Valdosta State and Maryland ripped Brown 127-82 and Richmond 82-50.

Adolph Rupp hung up his brown suit at Kentucky, but new coach Joe Hall has the Wildcats rolling. After thumping Michigan State 75-66, Kentucky bolted from a 13th ranking to No. 8.

North Carolina State rollicked past Appalachian 130-53 and Atlantic Christian 110-40, causing the Wolfpack to move to No. 6 after being ranked eighth the previous week.

Fans' Antics Mar WVU Trip

By EARLE BARROLL

Some fans are vociferous. Some are rowdy. Some even get to the point of being obnoxious. But never in this writer's travels has violence played a part in the involvement of the fans.

That was until this past Saturday at West Virginia.

"I was very disappointed with the West Virginia fans," said head UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman right after the game. "It's a shame that a school with such a fine tradition and with such a beautiful basketball facility should have it marred by the actions of a few fans."

Leaman himself had first hand knowledge of these malicious few as the head coach was the target of (1) airborne debris as he walked to the UMass locker room at the half and (2) physical attempts at him as he again headed for the locker room following his team's last second 63-62 loss to the Mountaineers.

From this writer's vantage point in the press row Leaman was pelted with cups and various other missles at the half, but this was minor in comparison to the flag staff that was thrust in his direction as the game ended.

The W.V.U. officials and Morgantown police who were on hand at the game were, to say the least, completely foreign in handling this chaotic situation. And save for the quickness of Leaman and UMass trainer Jim Laughnane who eradicated this mess with adept paries and a hasty exit this may have been a total black mark for West Virginia.

Perhaps the biggest gall of the night belonged to a pompous West Virginia Sports Information Director who came rushing into the press conference with the winning coach, Sonny Moran, and proclaimed, "The UMass coach is upset with the fans. He threw a punch at one of them."

Fortunately the cool head of former UMass assistant sports information director Dick Bresciani, who is now the assistant public relations director for the Boston Red Sox, prevailed.

In so many words "Bresh" explained the total situation to the S.I.D., the W.V.U. coach and the West Virginia scribes who attended the game.

If this wasn't enough, Sunday morning when the team was at the Morgantown airport waiting to depart, a physician who had followed West Virginia basketball long before Jerry West was around recognized Leaman and came up and apologized to him for the antics of the fans.

So many times we hear of the crazy atmosphere that prevails at Curry Hicks Cage during basketball season. We hear that it's virtually impossible for the visitor to come out with a win. And even at the game on Saturday, Mickey Furfuri, THE basketball writer for a Morgantown paper commented to me that UMass had quite the home court to play on.

But lest Mr. Furfuri or anyone else forget the word at the Cage is vociferous, not violence. This writer has not missed a game in three years at the Cage and never has physical harrassment been used as a form for rattling the opposition.

We can go back to the days of Julius Erving when upwards of 6,000 plus fans would jam the Cage to watch the Redmen in action. There were villains then. How about Bob Kissane of Holy Cross whose coach Jack Donahue called him the best player in New England during Erving's sophomore year? The fans were vocal.

How about Bob Smith, the seven-foot center for Syracuse who had stopped all-American Ken Durrett of LaSalle only the week before and was planning the same for Dr. J at the Cage? The fans were vocal.

How about New Hampshire coach Jerry Friel who last season charged at Leaman during the game in a rage of frustration for both coaches. The fans were once again vocal.

It's no wonder then that UMass fans are noted throughout New England as THE fans, period. As Leaman says, "I'm just very happy that our fans aren't like the West Virginia fans. I've seen them give Bob Cousy a standing ovation at the Cage when he was coaching at Boston College. I've seen them applaud great players like Jimmy Walker, Terry Driscoll and Charlie Yelverton."

There is no room in college basketball (How about Ohio St-Minnesota?) and for that matter any sports (i.e. Patriots fans) for this type of primitive behavior that was displayed at West Virginia.

The world is violent enough already.

VIOLENCE IS VIOLENCE–Although this is not the same type of violence as witnessed at West Virginia, that doesn't console New York Ranger Rod Gilbert who tumbles to the ice after being tripped by California's Gilles Marotte, in action during their meeting at the LA Forum. Gilbert was shaken up on the play (understandably) and Marotte spent the next two minutes in the penalty box. (AP Wirephoto)

The Morgan Hotel–Soon Morgantown, W. Va., formerly noted for the harboring of Jerry West's youth, will take upon its mining countenance, unique distinction. Soon its $100 million mono-rail system, the only one of its kind in the nation will be complete. And if you saw the narrowness of its cobblestone streets, its hilly terrain that makes walking more athletic than you think, and the Friday afternoon traffic ala Rt. 9, then you'd know why. But to say that the state University of West Virginia has money, is to say that Allegheny Airlines is at least 80% a sure bet.

Yes, a new Medical School, a gorgeous Fine Arts Center, a downtown football Stadium, the new transit system, and finally the topper of them all, the Colliseum, well, one could say that either the Alumni is very rich or the state legislature isn't very thrifty. It's the latter.

The Mountaineer Institute has 18,000 students and only competes with Marshall University for state funds. Concerning sports "jocks" are treated in a big-time, spend-thrift manner. Their only prerequisite to a full scholarship, 160 a month expense account, is that they live in a so-called "jock dorm" for three years.

But outside of the pretentious Colliseum, I think Morgantown is a place you'd simply like to visit one time around. I'm sure Uncle Jack, after getting Colliseum Coke spilled on his frame as well as getting wrapped up in none other than the Mason-Dixon banner, the literal sting of a one point loss was evident. Yes, the fans were obnoxious, discourteous, and any other synonym you'd like to insert.

But then you get down to the legistics of the trip and since not only for myself but for quite a cast from our caravan, it was the first time any of us had been on a plane. And for some veterans of the airwaves such as Billy Endicott, it was still amusing. To say that Billy is afraid of heights is mild. From the time we left Hartford and strolled to Pittsburgh Friday noon, Billy neither looked out the window or moved his eyeball in either direction. We kept kidding him that even the pretigious Allegheny Air System supplied you with a little white paper bag.

And on arrival to Morgantown's airport-instant propaganda. There on the wall adjacent to a color photograph of the Colliseum after dark was a front page biography of Morgantown's own Jerry West. If the contemporary Mountaineer basketball outfit was to inherit any of West's geneology, Eastern and Western college basketball teams that flew into this valley were to run scared.

But then came the Hotel Morgan less six cockroaches. Now this had to be seen to be believed. Without argument it was the cheapest thing on the Morgantown market.

Despite its 110 degree room temperature, its one-system shower, and the fact that the den of inequity was two miles and a cab away from the Colliseum, you could say old Morgan afforded more problems than it was worth. But thank God for Trainer Jim Laughnane.

"Liggy" put down his medical kit for awhile and went on to coordinate cab service that was at best an hour a turn (just can't get a cab here) and finally "Lig" moved our entourage to the Holiday Inn, through oversight, 300 yards from the spacious Colliseum.

Yes, getting out of the city was a problem, and when we left for good to Holiday Land early Saturday morning, it was a horror show. You see, we didn't think that we'd run headlong into the Annual Morgantown Christmas Parade. So instead of an hour to get out it took two, and after "Liggy" got three cabs only he along with Kent Best, Don Gorski, and myself got stuck watching the Parade.

Now Kent was supposed to be out in the street flagging down a cab. Ten minutes later, I looked down Cobblestone Lane and there he is, a resident voter of Wyoming from Amherst way, came 600 miles to broadcast a game, and what is he doing, directing traffic for the parade as a favor for the town of Morgantown that has afforded us so much.

But above and beyond the sport experience, and outside of Greg Duart's flagrant wardrobe, a platter of toast for Tom Gillams, and the bargains in the city restaurants and pubs, there was for whatever happened before and after the sport fiasco, some fun to be had at the Colliseum that night.

And for those who took it in, let me tell you right now, there's hope for the future for the young Minutemen.

Jack has done so much with Charlie Peters. Believe me it wasn't the frisbee that inspired his performance. Al Skinner can deal with the best of them and when a sophomore (John Murphy) fires up 22 shots in his first game against an Eastern power, without fear of extinction, the time and the recruiting had without a doubt brought new fluid to the UMass offense. And to outrebound the Mountaineers by 20, there's going to be some noise around the New England college basketball circles emanating from Amherst.

And with their "You all" accent the Mason-Dixoners were a bit surprised with the performance of the New England neighbors. And with intent to schedule a quick win, the Jerome Anderson's were lucky to escape with their pride thanks to his storybook ending. But "you all" will see a change at the Cage this winter, it started at the Colliseum and when it comes back home, I think "you all" will like it...

Collins, Olver Challenge Oath

By MARK VOGLER

BOSTON——Representative-elect James Collins of the 2nd Hampshire District and State senator-elect John Olver of Amherst will file a bill today which, if passed by the state legislature, would abolish the Massachusetts Loyalty Oath.

Collins, who is initiating the bill with Olver as the co-signer, said he would challenge the oath enacted in 1949 which requires all faculty, staff, and students employed by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to sign.

"It just doesn't serve a purpose anymore," Collins declared Tuesday evening. "It was passed during an emotional period when it was alleged that there were a number of subversives in the country. That was during the McCarthy era when there was a great deal of internal fear.

"It is not effective anymore. The oath doesn't in fact deter subversives. Subversive people will sign anyway. It's the loyal subjects who will put up a front.

Collins added that a great number of his constituents did not like the idea of "having their patriotism questioned" and the "outdated legislation puts a great deal of people through the dilemma of deciding whether or not to sign the oath."

Also working on the bill as petitioners are Representatives Charles Flaherty Jr. of Cambridge, John Businger and James Segal of Brookline, John Buckley of Abington, Barny Frank of Boston, Dave Ahearn of 11th Norfolk District, Dave Mejeun of 13th Middlesex District, and UMass professors Milton Mayer and James Matlack.

Collins said that Chapter 264, sections 14 and 15 of Massachusetts General Law would be under careful scrutiny in the legislative move to abolish the oath. Section 14 states that any person to be employed by the Commonwealth must sign the oath before entering his employment. Section 15 says that those who violate the statute or fail to take the oath are subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for no more than one year.

Collins charges that is unconstitutional to impose the oath on anybody and that there is no provision in the statute for a petitioner's dismissal.

The legislative action overlaps the recent three court cases in which groups from UMass-Boston, UMass-Amherst, and Berkshire Community College were granted preliminary injunctions.

While the Berkshire and UMass-Amherst cases are still pending, Judge John W. Coddaire, Jr. is scheduled to hear the case of the Boston group January 8 in Middlesex County Superior Court.

The later court action restrains the university personnel offices of all three campuses from dismissing anyone employed by the university between October 29, 1969 and September 21, 1972 who refused to sign the oath.

Despite the favorable court actions, Collins said "the courts are a much slower process" and that "the quickest remedy to the situation is legislative action."

Collins was fairly optimistic that the bill will pass. "If it is presented in a reasonable way to the legislature to show that the oath is no longer effective, then I think it will be successful."

With the arrival of legislative action to repeal the oath, Joan Tuttle, a spokesman for the American Civil Liberties Union, said a separate action on behalf of the foreign nationals would not have to be brought forth.

Miss Tuttle said the ACLU would not be involved with any litigation, but would rather act as a "clearing house."

"We are not getting involved in any tactical decisions, but we will keep close track and will defend the challenge."

Collins suggests that anyone who wishes to see the oath resented or repealed should contact him at home and he will inform them as to when the hearings will take place.

Representative-elect James Collins will co-sponsor a bill today calling for the abolishment of the Massachusetts Loyalty Oath. (MDC Photo by Karasu)

Chandler Center Of Controversy

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

The admission of Paul Chandler into the graduate program at the School of Education, what criteria are used in admission and what promises have been made are the center of a controversy engulfing the School of Education.

Chandler is a second semester senior applying for spring '73 admission into the graduate program. Chandler says he has been told in the past he would be admitted into the graduate program at the school, at one point without his having to have a bachelors degree, but the school and Dean Dwight Allen have reversed their earlier decision and are, according to Chandler refusing to admit him on political, not academic grounds.

According to Dean Allen academic records are not the only criteria used by the school in determining acceptances.

In an interview, Allen said Chandler had never been promised admittance and that while his academic record is satisfactory, one general school guideline for admittance is whether or not, "a student fits into the general philosophy of the school.

Dean Dwight Allen of the School of Education. Allen is a central figure in the debate over whether or not Paul Chandler should be admitted to the school's graduate program. (MDC Photo by Karasu)

Allen, who will make the decision, said with the evidence he now has his present "disposition is negative."

Allen said he does not feel at this time that Chandler shares the school's commitment to working within the system, its commitment to non-violence, and due-process.

Allen, who said he would make a decision within two weeks, said he was waiting for and welcomed any additional evidence one way or the other on Chandler. However, he said he did not expect to receive any new information.

Chandler's bid for admittance is presently being supported by a five-person committee and various School of Education faculty and students. The people on the committee include Acklyn Lynch, Johnetta Cole, Tom Clark, Rhody McCoy and Gloria Joseph.

Chandler first applied for admission to the Graduate Program during the fall semester '71 for spring semester '72. Previous to that he said Allen had told him that he would not need a B.A. for admittance. Allen denies this.

According to Chandler, Allen told University President Robert Wood at a dinner during fall semester '70, that, in Chandler's words, he had "special qualifications," and would not have to go the "regular route" through the undergraduate school. Chandler, who was present during the conversation said Wood told Allen that he, "didn't see it as being any problem" for Allen.

Chandler said the statement was made on other occasions to him during his first semester, notably by Robert Woodbury. Chandler said he waited to see if a formal offer would be made until spring semester '71, at which time he went ahead and applied on his own to the graduate program.

Chandler said he was accepted by the Non-Center of the school. He then gave a professor his application to take to the University's Graduate Admissions office. However, Chandler says his application never got there, and instead went to Allen.

According to Chandler, Allen "sat on it" and asked to speak with him. At that meeting, Chandler said, Allen, while acknowledging that he had supported his admission without a B.A. initially, had changed his mind. Asked why, Chandler says Allen told him he (Chandler) had brought something here, which, "wasn't conducive to the educational environment." Chandler said Allen would not say what that was.

That night, however, Chandler says he received a phone call from Allen offering to make a "trade-off". That was, according to Chandler, graduate status and a faculty position at the school if he headed a program the school was setting up at Malcolm X College in Chicago.

The next morning at a meeting between Chandler, his committee, and Allen, Chandler refused the offer.

According to Chandler, Allen then told him that if he got his B.A. he (Allen) would not prevent Chandler from entering the graduate program.

Chandler said he refused the offer because he wanted to stay and work at the University and because he had to take into account his family. Chandler is married and has four children. Also, Chandler said he wondered why Allen would offer him such a position if Allen would not admit him to the graduate program here without a B.A.

At that meeting, the committee asked Allen why he now wanted Chandler to have a B.A. for admittance into the graduate program. Chandler said Allen refused to discuss that.

Chandler was an important figure in last semester's closing of the School of Education Marathon by the school's Third World Caucus. The issues involved included the control of the Career Opportunities Program (COP) of which Chandler is a member, and how programs dealing with minorities would be administrated. Chandler was also on the Third World Caucus' committee which was negotiating with the School of Education after the closing of the Marathon.

Prior to that, in 1970, Chandler said Earle Seidman, Associate Dean of the School of Ed, during a conversation at Allen's house, asked him what he wanted to do — whether or not, in Chandler's words, he wanted to "blow up the school."

Chandler said he replied that he had nothing to lose by attacking the operating methods and philosophy of the school. Chandler said he told Seidman that if the school was really working for change, the University would "blow the school up," and that the school, if it wanted to really deal with racism should review its sources of funding and deal with the socio-economic roots of racism, not through "touch me, feel me" or sensitivity sessions.

At this point, Chandler said Allen told him that he (Chandler) had more to lose than himself (Allen) because, in Chandler's words, "Where else could you get a degree as fast as here?"

According to Allen, however, Chandler was never told he would be admitted to the graduate program without a B.A. and that he was never offered either graduate status or a faculty position.

At the dinner with President Wood, Allen said he told Wood that the school was trying to develop talent in "unusual ways," one of which was admitting people to the graduate program without a B.A. Chandler he said, was used only as an example of that type of person. It was only a "possibility, not a commitment," Allen said. Chandler was at the dinner, according to Allen, to indicate the unusual nature of the undergraduate program. In Chandler's case it was his admittance to the school through the COP program.

There are two special programs at the school, Allen said, for students without an undergraduate degree. One is a combined program for non-university students only, which combines undergraduate and graduate programs, but which is only open to non-university students with unusual education experience. The other, he said, is a program which takes, "exceptionally qualified" students and puts them in an accelerated program and graduates them with both undergraduate and graduate degrees.

Allen says he did "raise the issue informally" with Chandler at an early point in Chandler's attendance at the school. At that time, Allen said neither he nor Chandler pursued it. In Fall of '71, when Chandler applied to the graduate program through the Non-Center, Allen said he was "no longer in support of that alternative." Allen said he asked Chandler to meet with him but that Chandler never saw him.

Eventually, Allen said, he met with Chandler's support committee. Allen said he told them that he might consider the combined program, but that the committee only wanted to consider direct admission. Allen said he told the committee that it, "wouldn't be appropriate." According to Allen no student attending the university has ever been admitted to the graduate program without a B.A.

Allen said he did not make an offer to give Chandler graduate status and a faculty position if he headed a program at Malcolm X College.

Allen said he wanted evidence of Chandler's ability to perform, "in terms of the strategies of educational reform the school reflected."

One of the options considered with Acklyn Lynch to measure Chandler's ability, Allen said, was his going to Malcolm X College, and joining an "instructional team" as a lecturer." Allen said he did not offer Chandler either faculty or graduate status.

Allen said the offer he did make was considered in only a very preliminary way.

Allen said no individual applications are ever taken to the Graduate Office. Probably, he said, the professor to whom Chandler gave his first application, gave it to Norma Jean Anderson, Assistant Dean of Student Affairs, who is in charge of graduate admissions.

Anderson said there is a procedure for undergraduates applying to the graduate school through which she said Chandler never went. She said Chandler never came to her office.

Allen said he personally was reviewing Chandler's application because he was more familiar with the circumstances of admission and because of the "extraordinary publicity," it was receiving.

The review of applications, said Allen, is usually done by Norma Jean Anderson. However, he said, when there are "any exceptional circumstances, the Dean has ultimate authority."

According to Provost Robert Gluckstern, Allen has legal authority over all decisions made in the school.

Dayvid Nelsun: New Program 'Adviser'

By STEVE TRIPOLI

"I will try to create a climate in which positive change can occur, not a climate of excalating conflict." These are the words of Dayvid Nelsun, Program Director of the Campus Center, who assumed his duties just a short while ago.

Nelsun prefers to term his job Program Adviser, not Director. He feels that the job is now in the process of being "more definitely defined", and he hopes that Student Activities "has the opportunity to be a much more meaningful part of student's lives."

Nelsun hopes that students will make more use of Student Activities now. He thinks that Activities can "become a meaningful part of their (student's) educational experience.

The official University job description of the Program Director's post consists of "about 17 or 18 points" according to Nelsun, the sum of which is that Student Activities should be a more meaningful part of student's lives.

There was a conflict about a month and a half ago over Nelsun's appointment. "Most people still aren't sure what it was about" according to Nelsun. He did say, however, that he saw it as part of the "student-faculty, black-white" conflict on campus.

On the race problem, Nelsun said that he did see one at UMass, but not one which is "disproportionate to the problem on the outside." Nelsun said that he saw part of his job as one of creating a racially positive climate at UMass.

Nelsun was known before he came to UMass as the founder of "The Last Poets", a nationally known black poetry group that has produced a number of albums.

Assault On N. Pleasant St.

An informed source reported early this morning the occurrence of another assault in the Amherst area. An unidentified female was allegedly picked up while hitchhiking on North Pleasant Street around 8:45 Tuesday evening, by a male driving a dark, late-model, stick-shift, American car, similar to a Maverick.

The suspect, said to be armed with a small, black revolver, was described as around 30 years old, 5' 6" or 5' 7" tall, weighing approximately 150 lbs. and had strawberry-blonde hair, combed to conceal balding.

The man, well dressed in a jacket and tie, allegedly said he could take her to his hotel.

The only other details available at the time of the report were that his car had a brown bag and some papers on the dashboard, an orange-colored object hanging from the rear view mirror, and a box of Ritz crackers on the back seat.

Amherst police would not confirm the report.

Residential Areas Explore Decentralization Of Funds

By BRIAN COYNE

The proposal for instituting separate financial committees for each residential area was the main topic of discussion in last night's meeting of the Rents and Fees Committee, in the Norfolk-Plymouth Room in the Student Union. The committee met with the Area directors and Business Managers of the residential areas to begin an exploration of the matter.

Various budget committees already exist in most of the areas, but the Rents and Fees Committee is seeking a coordination of those groups which would facilitate and decentralize the allocation of funds within the areas. The main features of such an arrangement include:

1) The establishment of a committee consisting of students from the area and the structure of which to be decided by each area.

2) The committee would draw up the proposed budget and, pending the approval of the Rents and Fees Committee, send it to the Financial Manager of the residence halls. Any disagreements between the Rents and Fees and the area committees would be negotiated by the two bodies.

3) At the beginning of the new school year the area committees would meet to review the approved the previous spring. If any revisions of priorities are in order, they would be submitted to the Area Director and/or the Business Manager. The revisions would then be binding after approval by the committee.

Margie Lenn, Central Area Director, inquired as to the relationship that would exist between the area committees and Rents and Fees. She wanted to know what degree of independence the areas would have. Mike Gregory, chairman of the committee, stressed the point that after the allocation of money to the areas, the area committees would have complete autonomy in establishing priorities.

Kenneth Burnham, Assistant Area Director for Sylvan, asked for a re-evaluation of allocation procedures. He said that his area did not receive adequate funding last year and wished to avoid the same thing this year with a revised procedure.

There was also a discussion over just what money the area committees would be dealing with. The area directors questioned whether the budget included essentials such as furniture and lamps, or if it just concerned educational programs or special projects areas might wish to engage in. It was explained to them that there are reserve funds for the replacement of furniture.

It was acknowledged that area committees would have very little to do with the budget for next year currently under consideration. They would do little more than just review what had been allocated and learn about procedures.

In other business, the committee approved the Graduate Student Senate proposal to institute a three dollar Fine Arts Fee for graduate students. This would enable the graduate student to receive the same considerations as the undergraduate in the Fine Arts programs. The committee abstained from voting on the proposal to seat three graduate students on the Fine Arts Council.

A document outlining the philosophy of the Rents and Fees Committee was distributed to the members and further discussion of it was tabled until the next meeting.

Commuters Approve 'Guide'

A "Housing and Tenant Guide" and more lockers for commuters were among the items approved yesterday in a special commuter referendum and Commuter Assembly Executive Council election.

In the four candidate race for Executive Council the winners were Daniel Friedmann, Alexander Mackey, and James Cotter.

The vote in favor of the "Housing and Tenant Guide" will allow up to $3000 dollars to be spent on it's publication. The Guide will be compiled under the direction of Executive Council member Tom Merluzzi and will rate the various off-campus housing available to students.

Up to $1,500 will be spent on the purchase and installation of lockers for commuters in the Campus Center. The lockers will be given out on a first come first serve basis.

The voting yesterday was extremely light, with only 2% of eligible commuters voting. Commuter Assembly President Paul Doran called the turnout "disgraceful." Only 118 out of more than 6400 commuters bothered to vote.

Also passed on the referendum yesterday were motions granting up to $100 dollars to approve the Commuter Lounge and an appropriation of $1000 to the Emergency Loan Fund.

Trustees Easier To Reach

By CINDY GONET

The Board of Trustees has designed a set of procedures so that it can be as open as possible to opinions existing within and without the University. The formalized rules by which a person can appear before the Trustees Committee were reached at the last Trustees meeting Dec. 2 as a response to meeting disruptions last spring by a group opposed to R.O.T.C. on the Boston campus.

The Board is trying to balance the desire for direct communications with the public and the need for conducting its business in an orderly fashion. For this reason, the Trustees places its primary reliance on the mechanisms which exist on campus for the full consideration and deliberation of any issue of campus interest.

The Faculty Senate, Student Senate, and Graduate Student Senate provide mechanisms which permit any item to be presented to the Chancellor or for his consideration. Items are then forwarded by the Chancellor to the President and the Board of Trustees.

The following are general procedures which explain how requests are handled: One must request that a letter or petition be sent to the Trustees; next a request for Trustee action on a particular subject must be submitted. These requests are handled under normal committee rules; the item is sent to the relevant Trustee Committee.

If one insists that items be heard by the full Board without Committee action, there must be a formal review by the Liason Committee. This procedure is highly irregular.

The Liason Committee meets to pass requests made from campus. It is composed of the Chancellor, two faculty members, two students, and an administrator appointed by the Chancellor. The Committee determines the appropriateness of the request in terms of the extent of campus consideration it has received.

Meetings are brought to order by the Chairman in such a manner as to guarantee that Trustees can hear and be heard in their deliberations and can have an opportunity to come to thoughtful decisions.

Meeting Canceled; Reason Unknown

PARIS (AP) - A scheduled secret meeting between Henry A. Kissinger and Le Duc Tho of North Vietnam was mysteriously canceled Tuesday.

The U.S. and North Vietnamese delegations announced that the peace negotiators will hold private talks Wednesday.

No reason was given by either side for the cancellation of the meeting, which had been announced by the White House on Monday.

The site for Wednesday's rendezvous remained undisclosed. It will be selected by the Americans in accordance with an agreement reached between the negotiators whereby each side alternately picks the meeting place.

The North Vietnamese first issued word that the meeting was off. The U.S. delegation confirmed this and then shortly after - almost simultaneously with the North Vietnamese - said a meeting would be held Wednesday.

During the pause, the cable traffic was heavy between Paris and the White House, presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said. Nixon received a number of cables, and sent instructions to his negotiator.

Officials on both sides maintained their tight news blackout.

In Saigon, South Vietnamese officials said Kissinger and Tho are working on a secret agreement in which Hanoi would pledge to withdraw its forces from the South. They added that this would not be written into the public agreement as a face-saving gesture.

North Vietnam has never admitted that its forces are in South Vietnam. South Vietnam insists on an agreed North Vietnamese withdrawal before it will sign a cease-fire.

Both U.S. and South Vietnamese sources said they believe North Vietnam will release some American prisoners for the Christmas season. This would be regardless of whether an agreement is signed.

In Brief...

Indians Paid to Leave Town

WASHINGTON (AP)–The threat of violence was so great during last month's occupation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs building that the government paid the protesters $67,000 to leave town, a top government executive said Tuesday.

The testimony of Frank Carlucci, deputy director of the Office of Management and Budget, was backed up by federal law officer who told of seeing handguns, a rifle and numerous home-made spears and clubs while touring the occupied building.

Murder Charges Dropped

FALL RIVER, Mass. (AP)–Murder charges against two Fall River youths were dropped Tuesday after an assistant district attorney said he had uncovered new evidence in the shooting death of a Swansea variety store owner.

District Court Judge Milton R. Silva dropped the charges against Gary Arruda, 17, and John Steele, 18, on the recommendation of Asst. Dist. Atty. Richard C. Paul.

James Lynn To Succeed Romney

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon promoted Undersecretary of Commerce James T. Lynn to secretary of Housing and Urban Development Tuesday while sources reported that Commerce Secretary Peter G. Peterson would be shifted to a new post as overseer of international economic policy.

Nixon announced also that Secretary of Interior Rogers C. B. Morton will remain in his second-term Cabinet. Morton, a former Maryland congressman and national Republican chairman, joins Secretary of State William P. Rogers and Treasury Secretary George Shultz as Cabinet holdovers.

The Washington Post and The New York Times, meanwhile, reported that South Carolina textile manufacturer Frederick B. Dent is being considered for nomination to succeed Peterson as Commerce secretary.

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler would not comment on the reported Commerce department switch, but said further announcements on second-term Cabinet shifts could come Wednesday.

Besides the top Commerce department post, the President's intentions are yet to be announced on three Cabinet positions-attorney general, Agriculture secretary and Tranportation secretary.

Richard Kleindienst is expected to be retained as attorney general and Earl Butz as Agriculture chief, but John Volpe is believed slated to leave the Cabinet to become ambassador to Italy.

Lynn, 45-year-old Harvard-educated lawyer, succeeds George Romney as head of HUD. Romney announced a week ago he was leaving the Cabinet to form a coalition of concerned citizens to work for solutions of national problems.

Lynn left his Cleveland law practice in 1969 to become general counsel for the Commerce department. He was made general counsel for the Commerce department. He was made undersecretary in 1971 and was Peterson's chief lieutenant in concluding the recent U.S.—Soviet trade agreement.

At a session with newsmen after his selection, Lynn read a brief statement saying, in part: "The goal set forth in housing legislation for over 20 years has been 'a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family'.

"Challenges to make substantial progress toward meeting these goals lie in the years ahead. I look forward to devoting my full energies to meeting this challenge."

Lynn declined to answer specific questions on his plans pending Senate action on his nomination.

Morton, 58, served five terms in Congress from Maryland's Eastern Shore before his homination to the Interior Department in 1970. He succeeded Walter Hickel who was fired from the secretary's job by Nixon.

Court Rules 6-3 Against 'Bacchanalian Revelries'

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court ruled 6-3 Tuesday that the states may shut down saloons that feature bottomless dancers, sex films or other forms of "bacchanalian revelries."

The decision, in a California case, held that the First Amendment is not intended to permit real or simulated sexual acts in public.

But the 21st Amendment, while ending Prohibition, granted state liquor officials broad authority to guard "public health, welfare and morals," said Justice William H. Rehnquist for the court.

The landmark ruling is likely to have an impact beyond California on bars and nightclubs in all states that sell liquor by the drink while displaying what Rehnquist described as gross sexuality.

Since the California regulations upheld by the court specifically prohibit the display of genitals, authorities everywhere would appear to have a green light to ban bottomless dancing.

Justices William O. Douglas, William J. Brennan Jr., and Thurgood Marshall dissented while Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices Potter Stewart, Byron R. White, Harry A. Blackmun and Lewis F. Powell Jr. supported Rehnquist.

The decision reverses a three-judge panel in Los Angeles which found the regulations to be unconstitutional in a suit brought by a group of bar owners.

Rehnquist said customers in California bars engaged in sexual acts with women entertainers and that prostitution involving some of the dancers flourished. Based on the evidence, he said it was not irrational for state liquor officials to conclude that "the sale of liquor by the drink and lewd or naked dancing and entertainment should not take place simultaneously in bars and cocktail lounges..."

Marshall, in dissent, said even if there was a link between sex-related entertainment and sex crimes "it would hardly justify a broad-scale attack on First Amendment freedoms."

He said there is not one word in the history of the 21st Amendment to indicate that Congress meant to tamper in any way with First Amendment rights.

Similarly, Brennan said "nothing in the language or history of the 21st Amendment authorizes the states to use their liquor licensing power as a means for the deliberate inhibition of protected, even if distasteful, forms of expression."

Douglas, meanwhile, filed a mild dissent in which he said, "certainly a play which passes muster under the First Amendment is not made illegal because it is performed in a beer garden."

The decision established a legal precedent because it separates sexual exhibitions in public bars from movies and books which are protected by the First Amendment from suppression by officials unless they contain what the court has defined to be obscenity.

As Rehnquist put the distinction: "...as the mode of expression moves from the printed page to the commission of public acts which may themselves violate valid penal statutes, the scope of permissible state regulations significantly increases..."

The ruling came on an appeal by California, which said a proliferation of such bars had increased prostitution, the sale of dangerous drugs, rape and other violent crimes.

Attorneys General Want Death Penalty

CORONADO, Calif. (AP)–Nearly all of the nation's state attorneys general want the death penalty to at least be available, says the chairman of a committee drafting proposals to reinstate capital punishment.

Proposed laws to reimpose capital punishment are being prepared for consideration at the winter meeting of the National Association of Attorneys General here.

Oklahoma Atty. Gen. Larry Derryberry, chairman of an 11-member volunteer group which worked out suggested laws to be taken back by the states attorneys general, said: "I think we will find that perhaps all of them, plus our friends from the Virgin Islands and Guam, recommend that the death penalty be an available punishment for the states that decide to have it."

A few attorneys general, including those from Idaho and Alaska, oppose reinstating the death penalty.

The head of the national association, Atty. Gen Gary K. Nelson of Arizona, said the group decided to take the lead because "the vast majority of the public, even higher than the public opinion polls say, favor the death penalty in certain kinds of cases."

"I think it's very likely that the death penalty will be restored on a state-by-state basis within 1 1/2 years or two years," Nelson said in an interview.

Derryberry said eight or 10 states now prohibit all capital punishment, but "we think even those states would favor the availability of it."

Atty. Gen. Clarence A. H. Meyer of Nebraska, who has served several years as chairman of the association's Criminal Law Committee, agreed. He said in an interview: "The people in the states are going to insist that it's going to be restored."

But Idaho Atty. Gen. Tony Park said he doubts capital punishment will ever be reinstated generally. "In addition to the humanitarian aspects, I don't believe it to be a deterrent," he said.

A member of Derryberry's committee, Alabama Atty. Gen. William J. Baxley, said he "very much" favors the death penalty but added: "In some certain times in the past we have abused capital punishment nationwide in that only black people, poor people and disadvantaged people would actually go to the electric chair."

Apollo 17 Countdown: The End Of An Era

CAPE KENNEDY, FLA. (AP) - Apollo 17, perhaps man's last visit to the moon for decades, is ready to blast off Wednesday night on America's most spectacular manned space launching.

A few minor snags have put the countdown about an hour behind schedule, but the time is expected to be made up. It still is considered the smoothest in the Apollo series.

It was ticking toward a 9:53 P.M. EST liftoff in the first after-dark launching of a U.S.—manned space flight, a fiery event expected to draw half a million visitors to the Cape Kennedy area.

If skies are clear, anyone for 500 miles around should see the rocket as it slicks through the darkness trailing a 2,200-foot tail of fire. However, a forecast of considerable cloudiness could dim the prospect for many areas.

Launch Director Walter Kapryan said the weather posed a threat to the launch only if the higher-level clouds contained ice particles which might create lightning strikes as the rocket passed through. But he did not anticipated a problem.

Kapryan reported that minor troubles with a defective battery mounting, a rocket engine igniter and a ground computer had put the countdown about one hour behind, but that the problems had been resolved and the time would be made up during the night.

Among those here to bid farewell to Apollo were the three members of Apollo 11 who flew man's first moon landing mission three years ago-Neil A. Armstrong, Edwin E. Aldrin Jr. and Michael Collins.

Astronauts Eugene A. Cernan, geologist Harrison H. Schmitt and Ronald E. Evans on Tuesday completed 16 months of training for the final and most ambitious of the Apollos.

They spent time in spaceship simulators and then took to the air in jet trainer planes for the third time in four days, flying high acceleration runs over south Florida to prepare for the gravity forces they'll experience on liftoff.

With zero hour approaching, the pace quickened at the launch pad as crews worked to prepare the Saturn 5 rocket, the command ship America and the lunar ship Challenger.

Flight batteries were activated, fuel cells serviced, tanks pressurized, and food and equipment stowed aboard the spaceships. Five tiny mice, packed in a sealed container, were put aboard in an experiment to determine the effects of cosmic rays on brain tissue.

Many critical countdown items remain, including the loading of the Saturn 5 on Wednesday with more than 800,000 gallons of liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen fuel.

Cernan, Evans and Schmitt, who have been adjusting their schedule to a late wakeup, plan to sleep until early afternoon Wednesday. They'll undergo a brief physical exam, eat and suit up for the trip to the launch pad, nine miles from their crew quarters.

After Apollo 17, the United States has no plans to return to the moon for the foreseeable future. Instead, its manned space program will concentrate on earth orbital flights, starting with the Skylab Space Station next April.

The Soviet Union also says it has no moon landing plans and that it too will emphasize earth orbital flights which can be of benefit to mankind in the fields of weather forecasting, communications and hunting earth resources.

Dr. James C. Fletcher, administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said in a recent interview that if U.S. astronauts return to the moon in this century it will have to be part of a joint expedition with the Soviet Union and perhaps other countries.

For the last Apollo, NASA has selected a scientifically intriguing site named Taurus-Littrow as the landing site for Cernan and Schmitt.

They are to guide the spindly legged Challenger to a touchdown in a three-mile long volcanic valley which Cernan terms a "box canyon" because it is ringed by mountains rising up to 7,000 feet.

They plan to spend a record 75 hours on this site, driving their moon taxi a total of 23 miles in search of very young and very old lunar material. Schmitt will use his expertise as a professional geologist to find this material which he said will fill in missing chapters in the evolution of the moon.

While Cernan and Schmitt prowl the surface on three outside excursions, Evans will be busy in orbit, operating an array of cameras and instruments intended to probe the composition of the moon's surface to a depth of more than half a mile, draw a thermal map of the area over which America passes and measure the constituents of a thin atmosphere.

Cernan, the articulate commander of Apollo 17 does not believe this is the end of lunar exploration.

"This is just the end of the beginning of a golden age of space flight," he said. "Man will go back to the moon, he'll establish bases there, and then he'll go beyond, to the planets and the stars."

Volpe Urges Plans To Curb Air Piracy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nixon administration moved on domestic and foreign fronts Tuesday to curb skyjackings through tightened surveillance at airports and through an agreement with Cuba.

The domestic program calls for electronic screening of all passengers and inspection of theiry carry-on baggage, plus the posting of armed guards at loading areas, at the expense of airports and airlines.

The Volpe plans drew prompt criticism from airport operators and municipal officials' groups who want the federal government to assume full responsibility for security activities.

Secretary of Transportation John A. Volpe announced the promptly challenged security regulations while Secretary of State William P. Rogers disclosed he is submitting to Cuban authorities a hijacking agreement intended to forestall further use of that Communist country as a haven for hijackers.

Volpe directed the airlines to implement within one month procedures for electronic screening of all passengers and for inspection of all carry-on items accessible to passengers.

He asked also that airport operators submit within 30 days plans for the stationing of armed guards at checkpoints during periods when passengers are boarding. Full implementation of the plans would be required within 60 days.

Benjamin O. Davis, assistant secretary of Transportation, told a news conference that federal funds will be used to acquire the electronic metal-detection equipment in a program which already is under way.

But he said the rest of the program-passenger screening and the placement of armed guards-will be the responsibility of the airlines and the airport operators although Volpe indicated these costs will be passed onto travelers, presumably in the form of higher fares.

Meanwhile, at the State Department, the Swiss ambassador to Havana received from Secretary Rogers a proposed hijacking agreement for submission to Cuban authorities.

Department press officer Charles W. Bray, while declining to give details of the proposal, said it is "fair to say that we now have what we regard as a promising basis for proceeding to an agreement."

The Swiss ambassador to Havana, Silvio Masnata, acts in the United States' behalf in the absence of diplomatic relations between Washington and Havana.

Airbag Law Deflated

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) - American auto makers were granted an indefinite delay Tuesday in implementing government orders to install air-bag-type safety devices in vehicles produced after Aug. 15, 1975.

The 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ordered the federal government to delay enforcement of standards for so-called passive restraint systems, pending development of new specifications for testing them.

The standards, issued in March 1971 by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, provide for the installation of airbag devices which are automatically activated upon the impact of an accident and provide a cushion for passengers.

The court's 2-1 decision came on petitions filed by Chrysler Corp., Ford Motor Co., American Motors Corp., the Jeep Corp., and the Automobile Importers of America.

The automakers contended that airbags have not been sufficiently developed, and that tests performed with dummies lack uniformity.

The court was sympathetic with the latter claim, noting that the federal safety standard "puts the burden upon the manufacturer

Excitement Reigns At Mission Control

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — With the Cape Kennedy crew at bat, the men of Mission Control in Texas play a waiting game. Excitement reigns, but underneath there's awareness that an era is coming to an end.

The last flight of Apollo has come to the Manned Spacecraft Center. A shifting mood hangs in the air. It is sweet and bitter, iovous and sad.

The landscape grounds of MSC called "the campus", and the spare, stark black and white building vibrate with the premission excitement of Apollo's last hurrah.

Crew-cut, conservatively suited executives stride briskly about, carrying bloated briefcases and wearing gaudy Apollo 17 badges. Mini-skirted secretaries, loaded down with documents, hurry from office to office.

The engineers-technicians artists who feed numbers into $100-million computers and read the results as success or failure-are ready for their last lunar performance. A few move into the dormitory-like sleep area next to the control center. After launch, the Spartan quarters will be home for some until Apollo 17 comes back.

Mission Control, the nerve center of all U.S. manned space flights, stands at ease, humming away with its quiet efficiency, waiting for that moment Wednesday night when again it guides three men a quarter of a million miles through space to the moon.

"Houston is now controlling," a voice will say shortly after Apollo 17 lifts from Cape Kennedy and the men of Mission Control will again be in action.

The surrounding area, which boomed on space money, also waits.

No crowds gather. There is no silver-smooth rocket ready for a spectacular show. Skeleton news crews have arrived to prepare for the days to come.

Motels and hotels which line the wide NASA Boulevard across from the Space Center complex have been booked weeks in advance. Staffs there also wait for the coming buzz of activity.

"Couple of days and it will be humming," said a barman at a near empty motel club on Monday night.

But underneath, the Mission men know it's the end of their work on a challenge that began in the early 1960s.

Officials take the hopeful approach when asked about the fading space program.

"It's really the beginning," they say, citing the motto of the Apollo 17 mission. They point to the space shuttle and wonders yet to come.

But the workers are more open.

"I know in my mind it's the last one, but I really hate to think about it," said one. "I want to enjoy this one and worry about tomorrow when it's all over."

And from another: "I've spent 10 years working to get Apollo up and back home. It's hard to believe that it'll be all over soon. I feel like a kid with a new football, but with nobody to kick it to. You find out you've still got something to give, but nobody wants it."

VC Gunners Rocket Saigon Air Base

SAIGON (AP) - Viet Cong gunners fired at least 25 rockets into Saigon's Tan Son Nhut air base just after dawn Wednesday, inflicting nearly a dozen casualties and setting a large fuel fire.

The U.S. Command said one American was killed and one was wounded. One U.S. rescue helicopter was destroyed, according to preliminary reports.

At least nine South Vietnamese were reported wounded and there were unconfirmed reports of more.

Reports said at least one wounded South Vietnamese child was taken to the U.S. Army hospital just outside the base.

U.S. Air Force officers expressed surprise at the attack.

"It's kind of strange," one said, "the enemy hitting in the daylight when they are most vulnerable." He said the attack came from the north and west of the base.

Tan Son Nhut serves as a military base and as Saigon's main commercial airport. It also is the headquarters of the U.S. 7th Air Force, which directs the air war in Indochina, and of the U.S. Military Command.

Report Finds Nixon-Nazi Party Link

LOS ANGELES (LNS)–In a report that adds to the growing list of sabotage and corruption linked to the Republican Party, the Los Angeles Free Press recently charged that the Committee to Re-Elect the President (CREEP) hired members of the American Nazi Party in an unsuccessful attempt to sabotage the American Independent Party (George Wallace's party). In May, however, Arthur Bremer conveniently removed Wallace from third party consideration.

The Washington Post and Mary Bess of KPFK Radio in L.A., who uncovered the Nazi-Nixon link, also exposed efforts by the Nazis to ensure a ballot position for Proposition 22, an anti-farmworker proposal rejected by California voters in the November 7 election.

According to Glenn Parker, a former California American Independent Party organizer and a Nazi sympathizer brought in to run the sabotage campaign, a meeting was held in the L.A. Hilton during the first week of November of 1971 at which a campaign was outlined to get the AIP off the California ballot by re-registering AIP members into the Republican Party. Parker stated that the people present at the meeting, besides himself, were Robert Walters of American Advertising and Sales Co., a prominent right-wing activist who had asked Parker to come from Arkansas; Jed Magruder, then campaign manager of the Nixon re-election effort; and then-attorney general who replaced Magruder as campaign chief last spring but was then forced to step down when Watergate hit too close to home, John Mitchell. Records at the Hilton Hotel show that Mitchell and Magruder were in L.A. during the week in which Parker claims the meeting occurred.

At the time of the meeting, according to Parker, CREEP was concerned about Nixon's chances in California if it was a three-way race. Polls had shown that the then-Democratic front runner Edwin Muskie would win California in a three-way race with Nixon and Alabama governor George Wallace. Wallace received, in 1968, 15 per cent of the Presidential vote running on the AIP ticket. It was estimated by Nixon aides that if Wallace was not to run for president in 1972 the president would get four out of every five Wallace votes.

"Basically," said Parker, "we talked to Magruder and Mitchell. They explained that the reason that they wanted it (re-registration) done was that at the time they thought Muskie would be nominated and they had information that Wallace would run third party again...In addition to the possible loss of electoral votes, Nixon didn't want the shame of losing his home state. They said this three times."

Soon after CREEP outlined its plan to get the AIP off the ballot, the National Socialist White People's Party (NSWPP, one of the several Nazi parties in the U.S.) was engaged to carry out the details. According to Joe Tommasi, NSWPP party lieutenant, he was contacted by Parker and Walters who promised the Nazis $5000 to re-register AIPs. Of this amount $1200 was paid to the Nazis, according to Tommasi. He produced photostats of $400 worth of American Advertising and Sales Co. checks signed by Walters.

Tommasi originally told of the CREEP-Nazi connection because, as he said, the Nazis had been double-crossed by Walters who refused to pay the full $5,000. At first Tommasi had reportedly tried to sell the story.

Walters, who headed the abortive re-registration campaign, denied any connection between himself and CREEP or the Nazis, claiming that the idea was entirely his own. Walters did, however, admit that Parker had been his state-wide re-registration coordinator but claimed that he had been dismissed.

"Coming from a discredited employee," Walters explained, "I think a story tying in American Advertising and Sales with the Nazi Party is ill-based." Walters could not deny, though, that the checks shown by Tommasi were real and that the signatures were genuine. He claimed however, that he had given a bunch of blank checks to Parker when he was working for him and didn't know to whom they were going.

The Nazis, though, also produced a contract signed by Walters in January 1972 in which the Nazis agreed to gather signatures to get the agribusiness sponsored anti-farmworker Proposition 22 on the California ballot. According to Tommasi the Nazis were paid $2000 by Walters "to stop the Communist Cesar Chavez." Walters argued that the anti-farmworker campaign would bring down food prices.

The Nazis were given pink "dodger" cards with which they were to cover the official description of Proposition 22 while telling potential signers that the measure would benefit the farmworkers. Tommasi said the plan fell through when he found out that Walters was getting 50 cents a signature from agribusiness organizations for the signatures that the Nazis had gotten only 20 cents for.

Parker identified the CREEP contact in California as businessman Jack B. Lindsay. He described a meeting with Lindsay at the Holiday Inn restaurant at which the registration campaign was discussed and $2500 was handed to Walters. The Justice Department has tied Lindsay to the $350,000 secret campaign funds that bankrolled the Watergate venture.

Walters admitted having business dealings with Lindsay through a trucking firm he owns that handles products for Lindsay's company, Early California Foods. (Remember the CREEP-Nazi-Agribusiness-Proposition 22 connection). Walters claimed, however, that he had asked Lindsay to contribute towards the re-registeration campaign but that Lindsay refused.

Parker told a different story though. He said that during one meeting, Lindsay asked Walters how he got people to work for him so cheaply. Walters replied that he was paying money to a political group. "Is it the boys from El Monte (the section of L.A. where the Naxis are centered)" asked Lindsay. When Walters said yes, explained Parker, Lindsay "just smiled."

Nixon Pocket-Vetoes 9 Bills

NEW YORK (LNS) - Waiting until Congress had adjourned until next year–thus making sure no attempt could be made to override his decision–President Nixon recently pocket-vetoed nine key domestic spending bills. He claimed that his action was the result of doing "everything in my power to avoid the need for a tax increase next year."

The vetoed measures included a $30.5 billion appropriation for the Departments of labor and Health, Education and Welfare; a $543 million authorization for clean waters projects; and bills expanding health care for veterans and vocational programs for crippled children.

Nixon had good reason to resort to the pocket veto technique. One bill to provide money to fund an anti-pollution program was overridden by Congress within hours of his veto in early October.

As usual, instead of facing the public himself to announce his actions, Nixon issued a memo announcing the vetoes and sent presidential assistant John Ehrlichman, the domestic Henry Kissinger, to brief the press on his boss's decision.

"He is," said Ehrlichman to the press, "by these actions, attempting to veto higher taxes." In his memo Nixon said the vetoed measures would have forced spending about $750 million more than his budget calls for in Fiscal 1973 and $2 billion more in Fiscal 1974.

Yet, while using the scare of higher taxes to dump the nine domestic-needs bills, Nixon signed a large number of others including a $74.4 billion defense appropriation, $4.7 billion State, Justice and Commerce Dept. bills and $2.3 billion for military construction.

Children: Teach Your Parents Well

NEW YORK (LNS) - A federally-funded private study has recommended that "it might be more appropriate for drug-knowledgeable youths to be educating ill-informed and fearful adults rather than the reverse," according to an AP release.

The three-volume study, which cost about $300,000, had been kept secret since June by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare but is being leaked now that the elections are over. It described the government's drug abuse prevention program as "burdened with failure and scare tactics," and suggested official acceptance of limited drug use–particularly of marijuana.

Previously, the President's Commission on Drug Use issued a report favoring lowered penalties for the use of marijuana, noting that available studies had shown that the abuse of alcohol constituted a much greater problem in the U.S. The conclusions of that report were ignored.

Now, this newest report went so far as to assert that, "in the place of prevention as a reachable goal, drug use on the part of youth could be accepted."

It is probably because the recommendations of the report were going to be ignored that its release was delayed until after the election in an effort not to alienate the youth vote.

UN Calls For Napalm Ban

NEW YORK (LNS) - A special report prepared for the Secretary General of the United Nations, Kurt Waldheim, calls for an immediate world-wide ban on the use of napalm.

Napalm is used extensively by U.S. forces in Indochina. Portugal also used napalm in its war against the liberation movements in Mozambique, Angola and Guinea-Bissau.

Napalm is a gasoline-thickened jelly substance which ignites when exposed to air. It clings to and burns off human skin. Napalm is generally deployed by dropping it in bombs, which, when exploded, spray the inflammable jelly in every direction.

The anti-napalm report which was prepared by a number of countries including Sweden, Peru and Mexico will be debated in the political committee of the United Nations General Assembly soon.

The U.S. Declined to supply an American expert to participate in the U.N. study when it was invited to do so.

Black Science Society Election

The Black Science Society held its election for officers Monday night in New Africa House. The interest generated by the creation of this society recently has doubled their numbers. The election results are as follows:

1. CO-DIRECTORS
Trent Poole	Mechanical Engineering	1973
James Parks	Industrial Engineering	1973
2. ASSISTANT DIRECTOR
Sharon Miller	Nursing	1975
3. SECRETARY
Carol Ingram	Pre-Med.	1973
4. TREASURER
Kenneth White	Med.-Tech	1974
5. PUBLIC RELATIONS
Ronald Gordon	Food Science	Grad.
6. EXPEDITOR
Patricia O'Bryant	Public Health	1974
Sophea Treadwell	Public Health	1973

Immediately following the elections the society charted the courses for action with priorities. The society will petition for charter membership in the New York City Society of Black Scientist.

The membership agreed to begin planning a series of science seminars for high school students. This will be in conjunction with Upward Bound and the Avocational Counseling Unit of CCEBS.

The membership endorsed an action whereby the executive committee will engage in a recruitment program for minority faculty for the various science departments.

The society intends to pursue immediately with the Provost all information on programs in science directed towards minorities and take an active part in their development and promulgation. The society is also developing its own academic support system for its members, to insure their successful pursuit of the individual disciplines.

Two of the officers presently are intimately involved in the development and implementation of a new engineering experience for minorities in cooperation with the School of Engineering.

The meeting ended with congratulations for the newly elected officers and a unanimous commitment to make the Black Science Society an integral part of the Third World Community's life here at Amherst.

Plan To Give Faculty Responsibility, Power

By DON GLICKSTEIN

A new internal governance plan for the School of Education—one that gives faculty more responsibility as well as power—will be voted on by the Education faculty next Monday.

The plan, proposed by the School's Governance Task Force, will create a Faculty Assembly and a School Cabinet, both of which will have student, staff, and administrative representatives.

The Education school's previous governing body, the School Council, was abolished by Dean Dwight Allen and Provost Robert Gluckstern last Spring in the wake of political and racial dissention. The Council was a 30-person body of undergraduates, faculty, graduate students, staff, and administrators, each having an equal vote on personnel, policy, and budgetary matters.

The new plan was presented to the School of Ed faculty on Monday of this week. It suggests "guidelines", rather than a new constitution in order "to be shorter and less complex than the past Constitution."

The plan recognizes the "authority and responsibility" of the Dean, and notes that University policy prevents any faculty or student -decided policies from being anything other than advisory. Some faculty and students have complained that Dean Dwight Allen has too much power.

The proposed Faculty Assembly would be responsible for all academic policy and programs in the School.

"During the past", the guidelines explain, "the faculty has rarely met as a group to discuss how it would fulfill this responsibility."

The Assembly would meet monthly. Two staff members, two graduate students and five undergraduates would be part of the Assembly as well as all of the faculty. The guidelines implied that the students would be voting members.

The governance plan advocates the abandonment of the School's present "Centers", in favor of 5 to 7 larger organizational "units". Centers—there are almost 2 dozen of them— function like departments, except that they must justify their existence every third year, and a student may be in more than one of them at any time. They self- determine their governance.

Each "unit" would need a minimum of eight faculty members to function, would have student representation on personnel committees, and would sponsor at least one undergraduate teacher training program.

A School Cabinet, consisting of about a dozen faculty, students, and administrators, would supplement the Faculty Assembly by meeting weekly and advising the Dean on resource allocation, grant proposals, and all other matters.

The existing School Ombudsman, under the plan, would remain an element of the School.

Although two minority members were part of the Governance Task Force, there was no official representation of the Third World Caucus–one of the principles in last Spring's dispute.

A member of the Task Force, Jeanne Frein, said that "a real effort" to consider the questions raised by the Caucus was made. She said that the new governance scheme won't solve all of the Third World problems, but that the scheme "hopefully sets up the framework" to solve them.

Chairperson of the Task Force, Dr. Ann Lieberman, feels that the plan will "keep the flexibility, but get a greater stability" in the School by making the Faculty more accountable for what happens.

She noted that any undergraduate or other interested person wishing a copy of the proposal can get one in Room 104 of the School of Education. An open meeting today in Room 128 at 1 pm will discuss the plan, as well as a controversy about the admission of an undergraduate student, Paul Chandler, into the School's graduate program.

Meeting On Chandler

At a meeting Monday of the faculty of the School of Education, a motion was passed to consider the case of Paul Chandler's admission to the graduate school, before an administrative decision can be made.

That meeting will be held today at 1:00 pm in room 128 of the School of Ed. All parties involved in the case have been invited to attend by the Faculty Coordinating Committee, to present criteria for accepting or rejecting Chandler.

The meeting will be open to the public and all undergraduate members of the School of Ed. are especially urged to attend.

What Has History Done With Women Artists?

(Editor's Note: Much of the information in this article was not known until a few years ago when some women critics and artists, Linda Nochlin, Therese Schwartz and Cindy Nemser among others, began the ground-breaking work in this field.)

NEW YORK (LNS)--All the years that I went to art school, studying under male artists and reading art history books written mostly by men, I was never aware there were any women artists before modern times. No one ever mentioned any and it didn't occur to me to look beyond the hundreds of reproductions of work by men in the large and heavy books I studied to search for the work of my sisters in the past.

Yet once you begin to think about it, isn't it rather strange that, with all the artistic talent and sensitivity we women are traditionally credited with in our stereotypes, there really were no women artists in ancient, medieval, Renaissance or Baroque times?

According to a Greek legend, it was a Corinthian maiden, Dibutade, who made the first painting. Knowing that her lover was about to leave, she took a piece of charcoal from the fire and traced his silhouette on the wall. Why not? Or take the Cave paintings back in prehistoric times.

Who spent most of their time in those dingy old caves looking at those dull grey walls through the long winters just longing for a touch of color, a little brightness and liveliness on the walls? It is known that women invented pottery and farming—why not painting and sculpture too?

In medieval and Renaissance times artists and craftsmen were organized into guilds and young boys were apprenticed to master craftsmen to learn the trade. Artists generally trained their sons in their own profession and just as tailors' sons became tailors, artists' sons became artists. But occasionally an artist had no sons but only a daughter. In that case, often as not, he trained her in his profession.

Until recently, paintings by Mariana Tintoretto, daughter of the great Venetian painter, were sold as her father's work.

Sabina von Steinbach, sculptor-daughter of Erwin von Steinbach, took over his work carving the statues for Strasbourg Cathedral when he died in the middle of that immense project around 1230 AD. Lots of critics think her statues are finer and more original than his but I never saw them in any art history classes, never read her name in those immense and complete texts.

In their own period, these women were recognized by their brother artists and by the organizations that gave out the commissions for artistic work. Until after the French Revolution artistic work was ordered and paid for in advance. Artists did not create "for themselves" or "for posterity". Patrons, the church, the powerful, or the government picked out the best artists and commissioned them to do a job. If they picked a woman artist it was because she was the best person for that job.

Or take one of the most interesting of the Renaissance Women, Artmesia Gentileschi—in her time (the early 17th century)—many of her paintings concern the beheading of Holofernes by Judith—a popular biblical theme of that time —but one which she did perhaps more passionately and with more feeling than any other artist. In her youth, Artemisia was raped by a drawing master hired by her father. When her father sued for damages, the church officials, trying to get at the truth of the matter, tortured not the drawing master, but Artemisia.

Closer to our time, in the period of Marie Antoinette, just before and during the French Revolution there were several famous women painters. Two women, Angelica Kauffman and Mary Moser, were among the founding members of the British Royal Academy and four French women painters were elected to membership in the French Academie. In those days, election to the Academy was the highest honor that painters could aspire to.

Angelica, the daughter of a Swiss journeyman painter, showed her remarkable talent as a young child and by the time she was thirteen she was painting portraits for the Italian nobility and supporting her father. The same is true of Madame Vigee-Lebrun. Both of these women were recognized as among the top portrait painters of the period and their income in both cases was sufficient to support husbands, fathers, etc.

In fact, Angelica (who was second only to Reynolds as a portraitist during her stay in England) was such a fine income producing property that a young Swedish adventurer (and bigamist) tricked her into a secret marriage with him. When she discovered the deception she kicked him out, sued him for fraud. Settling out of court she had to pay a tremendous sum of money to get rid of him for good, her second marriage contract had written into it clauses that protected her property from any attempt by her husband to claim it.

In a very real sense, women artists of exceptional talent were freer from psychological and institutional pressures before the "democratization" of society of the French Revolution that put down the aristocracy and brought the capitalist bougeoisie to power.

The new French academy of Art founded by the victorious revolutionists, had as part of it by-laws the complete exclusion of women. They were admitted more freely than ever to the lower ranks of artistic workers, but the highest honors were now officially closed to them.

A book on methods of drawing and painting by a woman, Elisabeth Boulanger Cave, published in 1850 and directed specifically toward the artistic education of girls, makes this very clear.

Drawing and painting are necessary for many occupations she states (and very useful to women, who, after all never know what the future may hold and might find it necessary to make her own living) but women should not compete with men, according to Madame Cave. Rather they should strive to do only "feminine" types of art— decoration, paintings of children and other genre subjects, portraits, and leave the History Painting and major projects to men. Women in this period were admitted to the artistic world (as now) but they were supposed to stay in their place.

In the late 19th century, the period when modern Art Historical writing began to roll, earlier women artists were written out of Art History. Angelica Kauffman becomes "more important for her charm and her beauty than her paintings". Other women are mentioned, when they are mentioned at all, in terms of their love life or in relation to some male artist—almost never in terms of their work. After a few such mentions in earlier books (where it was difficult to exclude them altogether because they are so well known), later books drop them entirely.

Often the work of these women artists is simply promoted into that of similar male artists and credited to them. The most striking modern example of this is a painting in the Metropolitan Museum of Art by Constance-Marie Charpentier that until a few years ago was identified as the work of the Metropolitan in 1917 paid the modern equivalent of two million dollars for it and it was long known as one of David's finest paintings. How many other great paintings praised by men who thought other men painted them hang in museums?

Attica State Prison Guards Break Up Black Solidarity Day Celebration

ATTICA, N.Y. (LNS) - It's been 15 months since the Attica Rebellion and it's been just about a year since the Monroe County Grand Jury began meeting to decide which inmates to indict for the rebellion. (It's still meeting, making it one of the longest grand juries in history). The nearly 80 or so men who were charged with being "leaders" of the rebellion and who were waiting for some or all of them to be indicted, have now been moved from segregation in Attica and transferred to other prisons all over the state.

Most of the changes that have come in the year since the rebellion have been increases in the prison stockpile of weaponry and changes in the color of the inmates' uniforms. Also more petty regulations have been added - like having to stand when guards go around to count - which they do several times a day including during meals.

On November 8, in celebration of Black Solidarity Day, after an administration-approved program was held, the 250 inmates who attended went out into A-yard and participated in a peaceful, order, "exercise demonstration." It began with a few inmates jogging, then a few more, and then a few more, until all were in step, jogging a few laps around the yard, clapping and singing. Then the lines formed into one big circle. Everyone clapped hands after each exercise and voices rose with the cries of "Right On!" and "Yes, sir!"

After about 20 minutes of this, the circle broke, forming two columns, jogging, singing and clapping around the yard. After a few more laps, the lines formed a circle again. the circle of men then embraced each other.

By this time guards had appeared - armed to the teeth with new weaponry - gas guns, shot guns and machine guns and wearing vests to carry their shells in.

After being ordered back to their cells, some men went back in and refused to come out all the next day. Other inmates refused to go back in and stayed out in the yard all night.

The next day, about 100 men were put in segregation where they had no matresses, blankets, pillows or sheets. Nobody was given any of their personal property, books or legal materials. Since that time, they have gotten blankets and bedding but none of the personal property. And already the administration talks about disciplinary action and transfer for the supposed "leaders" of the action.

Pubs

A Long Way From Henry VIII

LONDON (AP) — British drinkers, who downed an average of nearly 30 gallons of beer each last year, today toasted what they hope will be the end of some of the wierdest liquor laws in the world.

A government commission proposed that British pubs stay open 14 hours a day - 5-1/2 hours more, and that liquor stores be open 15-1/2 hours a day, seven hours longer than now.

And it urged the legal age for buying a drink be lowered from 18 to 17 and 14-year-olds be allowed in some taverns.

If approved, the recommendations would be the biggest shakeup in this nation's drinking laws since Henry VII decreed in 1495 that "useless ale-houses" be suppressed.

Pubkeepers say additional drinking hours mean more work and more expense, but the extended hours are not mandatory.

Pubs and liquor stores in England and Wales now have split hours - between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. and 5 p.m. and 10:30 p.m., although Londoners get an extra half-hour before the host cries, "Time, gentlemen, please."

These jerky hours have long irritated Britain's dedicated drinkers. The new hours would be 10 a.m. to midnight.

The commission argues that now drinkers are bundled out at the same time every night in a discordant deluge of boozey ballads that give police a headache. A midnight closing may mean the patrons would stagger home at different hours.

The commission cautioned that its recommendations were not the dawn of "drinkers lib," and said road safety and safeguards against excessive drinking are necessary.

Minimum-age drinking laws are not enforceable in Britain's 61,000 pubs, the commission said. So the age limit should be lowered.

"We were repeatedly told of cases of young girls looking at least 20 in the evening, but no more than 16 when appearing in court without makeup and in school uniform," it reported.

The commission also made a recommendation that was guaranteed to strike horror into the hearts of dedicated drinkers - turning some olde English pubs into Parisian-style sidewalk bistros serving pints of beer along with tea and crumpets for the tourists.

It was all a long haul from King Henry's statute cramping alehouses 477 years ago.

98 Charged With Evasion

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) - A federal grand jury indicted 98 young Buffalo area men today on charges of violating the Selective Service Act.

Some of the defendants were charged with refusing to submit to military induction or failure to report for induction while others were accused of refusing to perform civilian work after being classified as conscientious objectors.

Criminal evasion of the draft carries a maximum penalty of five years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Poor Planning

Last Thursday night at a meeting of area government presidents decided to hold an off campus conference for people involved in area and dorm governments. The tentative plans call for the conference to be held around the first week in February. The site has yet to be chosen. Hoped for attendance is about 300.

The conference is unfeasible for a number of reasons. First, it is too late to plan this type of conference now. It took six months to plan SWAP, and the area governments are leaving themselves only two. Furthermore a sight has yet to be chosen, and the procurement of a sight isn't easy on short notice. The plans also call for the expenditure of a few thousand dollars out of area government money. This is questionable at best. The expected attendance of 300 people is unrealistic, and should be more carefully studied before anything is spent. Finally, the conference will conflict with the Student Government Association conference, in the planning since July, and each conference will hurt the other, which is foolish.

The whole conference is a rather ill conceived notion that appears to have been rushed into without much foresight. The people involved ought to reconsider before doing something they might regret.

Rudolph Grounded

By DEAN TUCKER

North Pole–Informed sources here said today that a change in usual Christmas eve tradition will be necessary this year due to legal hassles with the FAA.

Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer will not be able to guide the sleigh this year.

The decision comes as a result from recent FAA hearings during which Rudolph was declared unfit to fly by a panel of judges headed by the honorable D. W. Cooper.

The hearings were called to investigate an accident last Christmas Eve when the Santa Claus sleigh was in collision with a TWA 747 enroute to Miami. The two aircrafts collided over Bayonne, New Jersey, shortly after the 747 took off.

There were no injuries reported. Estimated damage to toys and other gifts was in the tens of thousands of dollars. North Pole sources take blame for a shortage of gifts last year. Initially the blame was placed on a sluggish economy but this excuse has been retracted in favor of the new release.

An on the spot investigation of the collision was held by the New Jersey State Police. Rudolph was asked to take a breathalyzer test. Results of the test later showed his saliva to contain an amount of alcohol that is considered to be dangerous for the operation of aircraft. Exact figures were not made available to newsmen, but reliable sources have indicated that the figure was close to .40, the level of unconsciousness.

Sources indicated also that the problem of Rudolph overdrinking in the holiday season is nothing new. It was revealed that Rudolph hates children and has for years, ever since, it is claimed he was fed an LSD spiked apple by a youthful visitor. Every year at Thanksgiving he begins drinking, the result of which is a high level of intoxication by Christmas Eve. Sources claim that his red-nosed condition is simply reaction to extended bouts with Thunderbird 20/20. The invention of his myth was simply a coverup conceived by the North Pole's publicity staff in an attempt to recover holiday business lost when large discount toy shops appeared on the American consumer scene. It was luck that kept the tale alive for years.

An appeal has been petitioned in the case, but will not be scheduled before February.

No substitute has been found for Rudolph, but sources at Lockheed would not deny communication with North Pole representatives.

Santa Claus declined to comment on the issue, but said his ambassador at large, Henry M. Blitzen, would handle the issue.

Blitzen could not be reached at his Paris hotel for comment.

Private Property and Justice

We have a friend who was recently involved in a situation which we think demonstrates amply how the American system by its very nature circumscribes justice. Here's the story.

This friend of ours was proceeding to campus one day last week. He owns a parking sticker for "H" lot. "H" lot is located in three main areas scattered around the Central dorm area of campus. One area is located behing Greenough, one across the street from Greenough, and one down the hill behind Gorman. The lots are distinguished by small "student parking H—lot" signs with arrows on them pointing towards the parking areas. The spaces themselves are marked by white parallel lines painted on the pavement.

As our friend arrived on campus he headed towards "H" lot to park his car. He checked all the areas of "H" lot and could not find an available space. He informs us that this situation is not unusual. On previous occasions he has approached the security guard at the entrance of #2 lot and this guard allowed him to park in that lot without penalty. On this morning however the guard was not too keen on letting our friend use #2. Instead he informed him to park as close to "H" lot as possible. On this directive and with the time factor before his next class our friend proceeds to find a space as close as he can to "H" lot. He heads towards the Gorman area of "H" lot assuming he has the sanction of the security police to park his car as close as he can to "H" lot. He finds a spot very close to the H-lot sign in front of Gorman house heading up Butterfield Terrace. The car was squeezed between two other cars on the left side of the sign. The sign had an arrow on it designating, that the parking area started just to the right of the sign. So our friends car was parked as close to "H" lot as it could be, however it was one space out of the lot area. Hoping he wouldn't receive a ticket he tacked a note on his windshield saying: "H-lot full 8-9 a.m." At this point he proceeded to class.

When he arrived back about two hours later his car was gone. He went over to the aforementioned officer in the #2 booth and asked him what exactly happened. The officer said that he saw our friends car being towed, but informed him that the university had not authorized it. Even though our friend was acting under the directives of the university police, by parking as close to the lot as possible, they denied any responsibility for the towing. The officer saw the car being towed, but did nothing to intervene then, nor did he do anything in the subsequent future. Our friend was left holding the bag.

The university police did enlighten our friend to one crucial fact. The parking space that his car was parked on was private property. The private property of the Kappa Sigma fraternity. This land was not under university jurisdiction but under the jurisdiction of the town of Amherst.

With this in mind our friend went down to Amherst Towing, the towing monopoly of the Amherst area, and was informed by them that the tow was authorized by the Amherst police. He paid Amherst Towing $17 and went over to the police station, to file a formal complaint. The Amherst police denied authorizing the tow. They said they were only observers. They told him that the fraternity authorized it.

At this point our friend went back to the scene of the incident to look things over. The area from which he was towed away was clearly designated as not being part of "H" lot but there were no signs which pointed out that it was a tow-away zone or private property. Our friend could of been receiving a warning or even a ticket, but he thought a tow-away was illegal. We agree, this was the case. In view of the fact that he was directed to park there by the university, and also that there were no signs stipulating that he was in a tow-away zone, we think he has every right to bring the incident up as an illegal tow.

Our friend now went to seek legal advice from student attorney Richard Howland. Howland informed him that this same incident was not unfamiliar. He said something to the effect that this sort of thing has been followed up but that justice hasn't been able to be realized. Our friend has hit the dead end. He has been fucked-over and there is nothing more he can do about it. If justice were to be done to him now it would mean at least being reimbursed for the towing charge. This of course lets the inconveniences he bore go by the board. The university directed him to park there but can do nothing for him. No signs indicated that he was in jeopardy of being towed away, yet he has forked over $17.

Why is this so? Why have previous suits of the same nature been tried and failed? The reason is that when it comes down to private property in America, you can throw justice out of the window. When human rights conflict with private property rights maximal protection in our system goes to property. The police observe the protection of this private property right (i.e. they looked on when our friends car was being towed), the university fails to intervene and try to see that justice is restored to someone who they helped get into the mess, and if a case like this gets to the courts maximal protection of private property is consistently upheld.

By the very fact that the American society upholds private property to priority over all other rights necessitates that justice has to be circumscribed. The story recounted above is just a local and additional incident which goes on continually. Hasn't something similar to this happened to you before? It's happened to us.

Threat To Academic Freedom

By DIANA MELLEN

Someone once wrote about the purpose of Education, "At school you are not engaged so much in acquiring knowledge as in making mental efforts under criticism. A certain amount of knowledge you can indeed with average faculties acquire so as to retain, nor need you regret the hours you spend on much that is forgotten, for the shadow of lost knowledge at least protects you from many illusions. But you go to a great school not so much for knowledge as for arts and habits; for the art of expression, for the art of entering quickly into another person's thought, for the art of assuming at a moment's notice a new intellectual position, for the habit of submitting to censure and refutation, for the art of indicating assent or dissent in graduated terms, for the habit of regarding minute points of accuracy, for the art of working out what is possible in a given time, for taste, for discrimination, for mental courage and mental soberness."

This is the ideal and goal of every serious student. The developmental process thereof requires encouragement and guidance from trained professionals, in other words, qualified teachers. The emphasis in the School of Education at this University is on relevance of subject matter to student concern, regarding courses, curriculum and teaching methods in terms of a humanistic approach. How Children Fail says that students of all ages lose interest in school because it is unrelated to their experience and because they are bored. Perspective teachers at this University at one end of campus are being taught this failing of traditional education. On the other side of campus in the College of Arts and Sciences, teachers in many departments, who approach learning with enthusiasm for their subject and a genuine interest in the needs of the students, using every effort to create relationships between courses, to eliminate segmentism, to initiate new and challenging courses that stem from changing needs in a society in constant flux, are attracting many students with courses that appeal to them, students being utmost in the innovative teacher's mind. Some of these teachers are in the English Department and have been denied tenure. If a university is in practice, as it is in theory, student oriented, then the administration's rejection of superior teachers of this sort, as well as progressive learning and exciting courses that appeal to student interest are in jeopardy of being stifled.

One such English teacher, who has met all conventional criteria for tenure: excellent student ratings, a Ph.D., and more than thirty publications to his credit, is Jack Shadoian. Academically he is extremely knowledgeable. Not only does he teach standard English courses well, but he gears his thinking from the students' point of view by developing new courses that cross the stringent lines of English study and combine new media to expand awareness in many areas. If his innovation and human approach to learning, as well as those of other teachers, are being questioned and rejected, what is going to happen to free expression and individual choice on this campus in years to come? If students evaluate Professor Shadoian as a superior teacher, and a course in film, initiated by him and overenrolled by hundreds of students so that it has been expanded from two sections into eleven, and excellent academic credentials and productivity are not enough to satisfy a personnel committee, then what is? If issue is being taken with a type of pertinent course that involves film, an entire new area of study on campuses across the country, then what is going to happen to the quality of our students, who will be more and more confined, restricted to conventional courses that offer little choice or concern to students in today's world? Are student evaluations and interest in a course no longer taken into consideration?

Are potential teachers going to be interested in teaching at the University of Massachusetts if their learning and philosophies would be constantly threatened?

If the administration has the overwhelming power to dictate courses to be offered and the image of the teacher who will teach them, what effect will this have on our opportunity to select interesting courses and the possibility for them even existing? Every student who cares about the quality of his education and is aware of this degeneration at our University is appalled. This issue poses a threat to academic freedom. Can we sit idly by and allow the bureaucracy to dictate and control us by deadening the vitality of teachers and killing the free flow of ideas by prohibiting change? Every thinking individual must recognize the immediate and long range effect of this crisis and protest NOW to protect the unique pursuits of thousands of students and preserve the ideal of education.

Letters To The Editor

A Festive Mixer

To The Editor:

The first winter social event of the season was a smashing success. Approximately twenty students were introduced to their neighbors and townsmen Thursday night. The occasion was held over rumpled fenders, fractured head and tail lights, creased doors and spilled oil and gasoline was served to all. Formal introductions were performed by the local constabulary.

This always festive mixer was held earlier this year than in the past to mark the celebration of the wedding between a Northeast low and a cold Canadian high.

A zoology student who lives in a trailer on top of Mount Toby was perhaps the happiest of the dismal celebrants I saw that evening. After his 1961 mongrel had piled into a psychology major's 1972 Lincoln (with electric windows, air conditioning and tilting steering wheel), Fred (zoology) leaped from the mongrel (which had suffered a total wreck requiring $12.27 to repair) and inquired of the shaken Celeste (psychology) whether she was hurt.

Celeste was not physically injured and realizing that her Massachusetts no fault insurance gave no solace to "whip lash", she unstrapped her shoulder harness and seat belt while lowering her head rest and tilted the steering wheel forward. In the meantime Fred placed several flares on the side of the roadway and lifted the hood of the mongrel to alert following drivers. Fred and Celeste exchanged driver's license and registration information and surveyed the carnage. Fred had option 3 and reflected that he would have to pay the full $12.27 to repair the mongrel's front end. Celeste's Lincoln had nearly collapsed as a consequence of the mongrel's caress and since she carried option 1 and since Fred had struck her in the rear, the full $2172.98 would be borne by her insurance company and the bumper would be replaced.

Since both cars would move, they drove them both to the top of Mount Toby and called their respective insurance companies...

Please observe that the reason for Fred's happiness was that he had followed the simple rules of what to do if you have an accident:

1. Check for injuries to people;
2. Protect against further damage or injury by alerting motorists;
3. Summon assistance if necessary (police are not required for minor bumps);
4. Exchange information as to license and registration, get names and addresses of witnesses;
5. Move the vehicles; and
6. Call your insurance company.

Then enjoy the exquisite anguish of being in a dilemma with nothing more you can do about it.

Please never drive motor vehicles that are not properly registered, tagged, insured and inspected. If in doubt, don't drive it, check it.

Richard M. Howland

Clarification

To The Editor:

I was disturbed at Paul Mishler's gross misrepresentation of facts in today's Collegian. He claimed that the Israeli government imposes a tax on immigrants that wish to leave the country.

This assertation deserves clarification. The Israeli government extends special financial privileges to all immigrants. These privileges include loans, housing, and tax exemptions. These are good for three years. At the end of three years the privileges are completed and the immigrant is a confirmed citizen and must assume the duties of such.

However, if the immigrant decides to leave the country before the three years, then he is requested to repay the government's courtesy. But I know of no case where a person was prevented from leaving due to the repayment of loans, etc. Therefore any statement claiming that the Israeli government forces the immigrants to repay loans should be (1) examined more closely, and (2) substantiated.

One last point, how does Mishler possibly compare this to a head tax of any kind?

The Americal Division

To The Editor:

The Americal Division, a film of the winter soldier investigation in Detroit, 1971, will be shown tonight, Tuesday, December 5th, at 8 p.m., in 162 Campus Center. The film shows interviews with soldiers who have been in Vietnam and describe their own experiences there.

This film is a part of the Indochina Film and Lecture Series sponsored by the United Christian Foundation. Next week, Russell Johnson, of the American Friends Service Committee, who has spent time in both China and Indochina, will speak on all five campuses.

After the showing of the Americal Division there will be discussion and a meeting of Young Friends (Quakers) and all others interested in peace and social concerns.

Grease Band

To The Editor:

The Amalgamated Grease Band will perform a benefit concert for Sunset Farms, a group home for teenagers.

The concert will be tomorrow evening, Thursday, at 9 p.m. at the Worcester Dining Commons. Admission is 50¢.

As an occasional music critic for Poor Richard's, I would like to call attention to this benefit. The Grease Band is a swarthy bunch of vaseline-struck musicians who, I can assure you, will give you your money's worth. Your money's worth, incidentally, will be donated to Sunset Farms to help them continue their community above and beyond what the state gives them.

I urge all music lovers to attend the concert.

Life Church

To The Editor:

Calling all Illustrious Reverends of the Universal Life Church, from their respective niches, to the Annual Commencement of Churchwide Rites. At this meeting we shall proceed to Step 2 on our path toward Spiritual Ascendancy: namely, now that we are an imminently established RSO (Step 1), we need a free Campus Office, as provided to all the other Establishment Religions by our State University, where we can pray and scheme. The plan being to begin a Life Guidance Service responding to troubled souls who find Brand X Counseling either too pious or too secular.

Calling all Nudists (or whatever you are in God's Clothes) to the formation of the University Nudist Colony. Admire dick, titty and asses joggling, as well as the more Pristine Naturalism, when we organize Evening Swims at Campus pools and Partime Nude Dorm Floors and Sauna Bath.

CALLING BACK THE SUN CEREMONY around Dec. 20. Fire and Ice at the Polar Bear Club Sauna.

Formation of the Cultural Revolutionary Committee for Secular Affairs of the ULC to be funded in part by your student tax dollars. Heartening Plans formulated according to your dispositions whether you are ordained or simply wish to be a Friend of the Church. MEETING: Thursday, Dec. 7, 7 p.m., Rm. 901, Campus Center.

Winter is great.

That first editorial point isn't for real, it's just that the winter freaks have been clamoring for equal time in Editorial Points. Now that they've got it, we can say that we still hope they all slip and fall in the snow.

Rumor has it that President Wood is fulfilling a childhood dream and saving a snowball from this winter to throw at the Governor in July. Rumor also has it that the Governor is saving a political football for Wood when the budget comes around.

In Response

To The Editor:

I am writing in response to Mr. Tripoli's editorial which appeared in Monday's Collegian. I feel the editorial constitutes a grave injustice to some individuals. Mr. Tripoli admitted as much himself when he stated: "The major fault of Ladd's presentation was that he chose to do it before the whole senate. While the reason he gives for this is that he wanted the internal politics of the senate out of the back room, there is no reason why he had to slap people's wrists in front of the whole senate. He could have dealt with the problem without going into the 'backroom', and left it on a person to person basis. The way he did it was both offensive to those he did it to, and less effective than he wanted it to be..." If Mr. Tripoli agrees that it was offensive and embarrassing to mention names before the whole senate, how much more offensive was it to mention names before the whole campus? In addition, I think Mr. Tripoli's sources may have been mistaken in assessing the motive behind Mr. Ladd's speech. If it had been merely to castigate individuals, than certainly that could have been done on a personal basis. If however, the reason for Mr. Ladd's speech was, to disspell some of the ugly rumors which have been circulating and which just about every member of the senate has heard, than his speech was in fact justified. Many new members of the senate have heard these rumors and lack the knowledge to correctly interpret them; therefore I believe that Mr. Ladd did a service to all concerned by labeling such rumors for the politically motivated falsehoods which they are. His mention of individuals was kept to a minimum and was of secondary importance. It was done in private executive session because it was concerned only the senate and because it was less embarrassing to the individuals concerned. This was the case until Mr. Tripoli chose to make the matter public. In addition, it must also be remembered that the individuals who figured in the article have political enemies and they are quite probably the only ones who profited from Mr. Tripoli's article.

The Axe Falls Again

To The Editor:

I am a senior and I am taking an excellent course entitled "Gangsters in Film in Literature". My professor is Jack Shadoian who will be "loosing his job" at the end of the spring semester because of "dirty politicing" by someone in the English Dept. I enjoy Jack very much and his course I feel is one of the best offered on campus. I am very upset at the fact that a good professor like Jack will be loosing his job but more so because: No one will have the decency to tell him why?!!! Why must he suffer because someone is doing him in without his knowledge. Why must the students of this university also suffer by losing a good man like Jack and lose "good qualities" of a course like his whenever the administration decides to "blackball and backstab." To the rest of the students on this campus "Please wake up"!!! This is not the first case of this and chances are it will not be the last. To the people or person responsible for this, I can only say to you, if you do finally decide to give "Jack the axe" please have the decency and the nerve to tell him why!!! Even though he doesn't deserve this "shafting" at least let Jack know what he did do wrong if anything. One final question to the people or person responsible for this "personal hatred", "how can you sleep at night".

More Fascist Action

To The Editor:

On several previous occasions predominantly white prties have been held in Mackimmie Humanity House resulting in complaints about noise; none of which resulted in any action by the police. However, last Saturday night, Dec. 2, at a comparatively quiet Third World party held here, the Head of Residence received one phone call from the police department requesting that action be taken to reduce the volume of noise. Upon request of the Head of Residence the stereo at the party was immediately turned down. Within fifteen minutes of the original call three ARMED police-persons entered the dormitory, walked through the party, and demanded that the stereo be turned down. This intrusion occurred despite the facts that:

(1) the stereo had already been turned down to a reasonable level

(2) no attempt was made to contact the Head of Residence though there exists an agreement between Southwest and the police department that police inform Heads of Residence of entry into dormitories except in cases of emergency. Clearly this was not an emergency.

We believe this action by the police department was both racist and stupid. It is obviously more than coincidence that this police intrusion occurred at the one Third World party and not at the earlier predominantly white parties. Furthermore, in light of the recent murders at Southern University, this immediate recourse to armed intervention demonstrates a total lack of sensitivity to the potential tragedy to which this kind of action could lead.

We, the members of the Mackimmie Humanity House Council, demand that the police guarantee that such impulsive armed intervention does not occur again, and that steps be taken to eliminate racist behavior in the department.

Uneasiness And Guilt Feelings

To The Editor:

This is in response to J. A. Gorham III's letter last Tuesday. He thinks that his niece is fortunate because she "will not be despoiled by some lusting lout out for a cheap night's adventure." My question is, how fortunate is she really? One of the big problems that confront analysts today is the uneasiness and guilt feelings that a lot of women that have sex with their husbands or, if unmarried, intimate friends. From the time children can talk they are told that sex is wrong, sinful, immoral, or just plain dirty. Some sexist parents even teach (condition) their children to think this way until they are old enough to leave home and live on their own. Consequently, when this person is ready for marriage or hetrosexual relations she cannot cope with these situations and retains acute guilt feelings every time they engage in such activities.

Some of these women are smart enough to know that these feelings are not the feelings that they desire and either consult close friends or an analyst. The analyst is then faced with the problem of eradicating these guilt feelings. Some analysts do this by a process which is called "systematic desensitation". This is a long and involved process in which the analyst extracts an neutralizes all the feelings his patient might have about sex. Then he gradually teaches his patient the appropriate responses and feelings relating to these sexual experiences.

Does this sound complicated? Well it is, and expensive too! I ask you, Mr. Gorham, in all seriousness, is this the way you would like your niece to end up? All this pain and expense could be eliminated if people, like yourself, were more thoughtful and understanding to start with, instead of making sex out to be something criminal and ugly.

Furthermore, how do you know, Mr. Gorham, that your niece's "tender bosom" has gone untouched? I seriously doubt that she confides in you on such matters knowing what your opinions are on this subject.

Lastly, I would be extremely offended if my girlfriend's uncle called me a "lusting lout out for a cheap night's adventure," for having a meaningful and loving relationship with her. I think that some of your own guilt feelings about sex are being directed towards your niece, by yourself, Mr. Gorham. You forget that the act of "making love" is not for the sole purpose of reproduction. It is a beautiful and rewarding experience, and I truly feel sorry for you if you have been deprived of this. If your niece is old enough and intelligent enough to be in college, I'm quite confident that she is capable of making her own decisions, especially when it comes to making the choice of whether to love someone and be loved in return, or FUCK a lout! Thank God that there is an organization, like Women's Lib, around trying to straighten out people like yourself, Mr. Gorham.

Steve Arzillo

P.S. This is to say nothing about the total utility created by the University's distribution of contraceptives. J. Arthur Gorham, III, I ask YOU to take a moment to reconsider your peril, and what you may have left of a future, and tell me, who's side are you really on.....?

Try Again

To The Editor:

We would like to take this opportunity to apologize for the unfortunate circumstances surrounding the ill-fated nine and eleven o'clock show of Take the Money and Run on Sat., Dec. 2, 1972. The problems that arose were due to two faulty projectors over which we had no control. There was no intention to rip-off students. This can be attested to by the approximately seventy-five people at the nine o'clock show who asked for and were granted their money back.

We would like to thank the people who attended that show and those who were waiting for the eleven o'clock show which was not to be. Their patience and good humor was admirable and a possibly dangerous situation was averted. The attitude of these people made a very dismal night a little more bearable. Only our futile hope that our overtime janitor would show up kept us from cancelling the show before eleven o'clock. At this time all we can say is we are very sorry this had to happen but at the same time thank you for acting the way you did. But take heart, WOODY ALLEN WILL TRY AGAIN THIS FRIDAY NIGHT.

Axed Again

To The Editor:

Monday's Collegian reported Prof. Bongiorno's views of the French-Italian Department's reasons for not rehiring him. My opinion of the situation corresponds to his.

Having taken several courses with Prof. Bongiorno, I can think of no reasonable grounds for his non-reappointment. He has distinguished himself as a teacher, as a scholar, as an artist, and as a person worth knowing. He is willing and able to relate his course material to wider issues of concern. His manner with students is friendly and down-to-earth. Unlike many other professors, he respects our opinions and capabilities. He is far from being a stiff, academic stuffed-shirt.

The University recognizes three criteria for evaluating professors, all of which Mr. Bongiorno amply satisfies. These criteria are teaching, scholarship and service. The excellence of his teaching is evident from his enthusiastic student evaluations; the quality of his scholarship is apparent from his receipt of the Dante prize, and from his other fine writing; and his service is demonstrable by his contributions to several different University programs: Monday's Collegian gave more detail.

Nevertheless, Mr. Bongiorno will not be rehired. Why? It is obvious that this decision must have been based upon some other, unstated criterion. If this fine teacher's appointment is not renewed for some non-academic reason, it will be a grave injustice, not only to Prof. Bongiorno himself, but to all of us who are concerned with excellent teaching and with academic freedom.

Racist Myth

To The Editors:

To that fellow who stated that he didn't wish to pay his Student Activities Fee because it went to such "blantent racists" as the Afro-American Students. I don't have much to say to you except that your epithet reflects the attitudes, spoken or unspoken, of many of our fellow whites. I mean the attitude that calls Black suspicion or hostility towards white people "Black racism". I agree with George Jackson when he said "too much Black blood has flowed into the chasm between the races" to call Black suspicion towards whites anything but appropriate.

Consider this. What you call "Black racism" results in some white people's feelings being hurt. White racism as an ideology and an institutionalised practice results in Black and other non-white peoples in this country:

1. having the lowest paying jobs
2. having the most dangerous jobs
3. living in the most rundown housing
4. having the worst medical care
5. being killed in the streets, campuses, and prisons
6. and on, and on.

Forget this racist myth of "Black racism". Look beyond your "hurt feelings" to justice.

The Horse Without A Head

To The Editor:

About a month ago, you carried a cover story by cub reporter Mark Vogler about the dining commons employees that I understand Jack Webb is interested in using as the basis for an upcoming Dragnet. Reading the article caused me first to think that it was an excellent spoof in the tradition of Harvard Lampoon; yet funnier still was the realization that it was serious in intent (well, even Jack Anderson makes mistakes). May I suggest that the two super-sleuths (John Walker and roommate), Mark Vogler and all those fascinated by the article read, The Horse Without a Head - it's no longer and has a more complex plot (better yet; if you enjoy television, check the Disney listings - they run some fascinating mysteries).

Also kudos to the editorial staff for exercising such good judgement in using the articles as a cover story, and particularly for allowing the inclusion of that wondrous photo. Joe McCarthy'd be proud of your editorial practices and Mark's sensitive reportage; especially the adroit use of the darkroom to obliterate the women's eyes from any possible recognition (reminiscent of officer Obie and his 8 by 10 colored glossy photos with the paragraphs on the back).

The irony of the article is that despite its banality, the university community appeared to have taken it seriously. Many seemed to consider it irrelevant that the woman was easily identified from the photo, and that within the "2 feet by 3 feet by 1 foot deep container" were used pie tins that she was merely using at home, without pay, to make Christmas decorations for the dining commons.

It just seems a shame that people can be so naive as to accept the assertion that the low quality of our meals is at least partially caused by the employees occasionally pilfering a loaf of bread. Wouldn't it have been more humane to have at least faced those two women and allowed them to defend themselves (perhaps the Napoleonic code is the guiding light behind the Collegian's editorial practices). Or, better yet, have a little empathy for the employees: don't LOOK for them to do something wrong; for, after all, they've spent their lives in degrading, low paying jobs. For students who are on scholarships and/or being supported by their parents (in one form or another) to attack these workers in such a slanderous manner is the height of insensitivity.

Your Head

Study Too Much? Here's Why

By DRS. MCCASHIN AND KLEIN

Q: I am intensely committed to academic work. I work very hard day and night. I've always been successful. Recently, though, I've worried so much about my performance that I can't concentrate. I'm so upset I've even thought of dropping out of school. Why am I so anxious?

A: Your present turmoil suggests that you are overly invested in academic pursuit. Your "intense commitment" and "day and night" routine may represent behavior that is compensatory in nature. Compensations are defenses against feelings of inferiority and inadequacy that arise from perceived real or imagined personal defects or weaknesses and/or preoccupations about past failures and setbacks.

Our highly competitive society actually stimulates compensatory reactions by valuing and establishing a person's worth largely by achievement, status and material success. The fact that you are highly motivated to achieve academically could be considered quite adaptive in a University setting. Compensatory reactions are not so useful, however, when they become exaggerated and result in worry and anxiety.

Examples of over-compensation are numerous. The "super" masculine male is compensating for a fear of sexuality and impotency. Eccentric behavior may attract attention to the person who feels ignored and rejected. Insisting that one is a paragon of virtue and morality may reflect a distrust of one's impulses.

The relationship between compensatory behavior and the perceived personal deficiency can be direct or indirect. Exaggerated academic motivation could relate in a direct form, for example, where an individual feels insecure about the lack of intellectual achievement or status in his or her family, or is preoccupied with bad grades in high school. More commonly the compensation is an indirect expression of inadequacy and often reflects feelings about one's social and interpersonal ability.

Here a person may avoid or severely regulate his or her relationships, for example, seeing a boyfriend or girlfriend once a week for a prescribed period of time under the guise of having to spend most of the time studying. Interestingly it is often a social or interpersonal setback that precipitates excessive anxiety in the compensating academic performance area. Consequently we "ignored" areas of your life. It is unlikely that your academic future is in peril but that you need to work through concerns in some other area of your life.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will answer your questions or discuss any issue on your mind. Send or bring your questions to Mental Health, 303 Machmer Hall. All inquiries are strictly confidential.

Financial Aid Applications

Financial aid applications for 1973-74, including Summer School 1963 and all special summer programs sponsored by the University, will be available in the Financial Aid Office, Room 232, Whitmore Administration Building, after January 1, 1973.

All students wishing to be considered for any type of aid whether or not assistance has been received previously, must file an application.

The Deadline for filing is March 1, 1973.

Plumb To Talk

J. H. Plumb, Professor of Modern English History at Cambridge University, will be speaking on Thursday, December 7, at 8:00 p.m. in Herter Hall 231. His topic will be "The Commercialization of Leisure in the Eighteenth Century."

Professor Plumb, among the most distinguished of British historians, is the author of England in the Eighteenth Century, Studies in Social History, The First Four Georges, a two-volume biography of Sir Robert Walpole, and other works. His lecture is being sponsored by the Department of History at the University.

Belchertown Xmas Party To End Year

The Belchertown Volunteers will conclude their semester's activities on Saturday December 9 with a Christmas Party for residents of the Belchertown State School.

The party will be held from 1:30 til 3:30 at the Belchertown State School and not on the UMass campus as had been previously proposed. A bus will leave UMass at 12:45 P.M. Saturday from in front of the Whitmore Administration Building to take interested students to the party. The bus will return to campus by 4:00.

The party will include the trimming of a Christmas tree, singing, dancing, refreshments, and hopefully, a visit from the grand old man himself, Santa Claus. Twenty five to thirty youngsters from Belchertown will be entertained at the party and it is hoped that at least an equal number of UMass students will attend.

The Belchertown Volunteers have been very active in this semester at Belchertown. Through their efforts, residents were able to attend a town fair in October and the UMass-UNH football game on November 18. A Halloween party was held in the Campus Center on October 28. The Volunteers are hopeful that the Christmas party will be as successful as the Halloween party but the success of the party depends upon the number of UMass students who attend on Saturday. A large group of volunteers are needed.

Those who are planning to attend the party are requested to bring homemade or storebought ornaments for the tree trimming: strings of popcorn or cranberries, or candy canes have been suggested. Also, if possible, some baked goods such as cookies, brownies or cake would be greatly appreciated.

Since Saturday's party will be the last function of the semester, the Volunteers are looking for a large turnout. One does not have to be a member of the Belchertown Volunteers in order to attend. Anyone is welcome to come to the party to bring some joy and happiness of the Christmas season into the lives of some Belchertown residents.

Doing Your Thing And Making Money Too

By GILBERT J. SALK

Money is a hassle for almost all of us, and, for those who are trying to find ways of reducing our dependency upon the more established lifestyles, one major problem is getting enough money to survive without putting the major part of our lives into non-creative, uninteresting jobs.

My hunch is that most people would prefer to do work which in some way satisfied more than their need for survival money. Ideally, a job should be fun. It should allow you to use those of your skills which you find most enjoyable. You should be producing something which satisfies you, something of which you can be proud. And it should be flexible enough so that you can move around pretty much at will.

That's kind of an ideal picture, but let's hold onto it for a while and see how close we might be able to get to it.

The first step, of course, is to figure out what the hell it is that you would really like to do, if there were no restrictions whatsoever placed upon you. This isn't an easy step, because it requires overcoming a large mound of bullshit (read: social conditioning) which tells us what "work" is. But take a look at your hobbies, at the things you've done in your life which you really enjoyed doing, at the times in your life when you've been happiest. Then analyze what's going on in all that.

The next step is to figure out how your interest might be marketable, and what kind of skill certification might be needed (or helpful.) The important thing here is to avoid the trap of shutting doors on yourself because you're afraid that the doors might already be shut. Don't box yourself out. Assume that anything is possible until you've explored every possible way around all the obstacles. Convince yourself that "no" is not an answer, and usually you can find some new way of saying "yes." Begin with the presumption that if you have a skill or ability, then there are probably people somewhere you have a need for that skill and might be willing to pay you for it.

Note: This does not mean that you should rip people off. It does mean that you should recognize the value of what you have, and deal with that value in a way that doesn't rip you off either. Find a fair compromise (fair to you and to the people/institutions you're working with), and you've made an important first step.

I'm not going to take up a lot of space putting out specific ideas on how to go about doing your thing. It's yours, and you have to take the responsibility for it. If you get into a bind, sit down and rap with someone else who has an imagination and who can look at the whole thing from a fresh perspective. The trick is to teach yourself to find new ways to approach traditional problems.

A couple of quick thoughts before I review some books. Whenever you're approaching something new, and especially if you're trying to do it from a new angle, it is useful to know who's around who can be helpful as a resource or an idea person. To gather and disseminate this information, a CULTURNATIVES Clearinghouse has been started. For those interested in working with the Clearinghouse, there is a meeting in 905 CC on Wednesday at 7:30 p.m.

There are two services on campus you should know about. The first is the problem pregnancy counseling service offered by the United Christian Foundation. The counseling, done by Elaine Fraser, is confidential, covers adoption, abortion, and other options, and can arrange referrals to abortion clinics in New York. The office is in 319 Hampshire House, and the phones are 545-2661 and 545-2789. Cut this paragraph out and save it. You or a friend may need the information some day.

Draft Counseling Services offers free draft counseling, and moves to its new office in 430 Student Union (2nd floor) Wednesday. (Mother Earth News and Whole Earth Catalogs are available there.) There is also a branch office open Thursday evenings from 7-10 in Wally Silva's office in the John Adams lobby. The phone for the main office is 545-0813.

Before I get into the books, let me relate them back to the theme of this column. One of the things I'm into as a source of income grew out of what is still basically a hobby. I really enjoy photography, and do a lot of nudes and nature studies for my own enjoyment–and, who knows, maybe a book or show someday–but it's an expensive hobby and I decided that I've got to start making it pay for itself. As a result, I've done some advertising work for a local horse ranch/riding school, publicity shots for a play, passports, portfolios, and some newspaper photos. At some point, I expect I'll try to make it a paying enterprise.

All this is a rationale for reviewing some books on photography. They're relevant because they're the type of resource available to help you turn a hobby into a source of income. If photography's not your bag, come rap with me and I'll try to turn you on to some other things.

All of these books are put out by Time-Life Books, and can be obtained from Morgan & Morgan, Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y. They all cost $9.95, but can be bought on sale or in discount stores for less.

Photojournalism is an action-filled study which points out the fundamentals of following action, multi-picture stories, anticipating events, and critically evaluating the results. It is a beatutiful book with exciting photographs. It's given me a lot of ideas for approaches to creative story-telling with a camera. If you are into news work, this is a fine sourcebook.

The Print deals with darkroom techniques. It is also profusely illustrated, and is a sourcebook of creative ideas for turning the darkroom into a further step in the entire creative process of photography. There is also a section dealing with the use of printing paper without negatives as an artistic medium of its own.

The Camera was the first of the Live Library of Photography. It is an intriguing history of the development of the camera from a simple box to the complex instrument it has become–and shows that the possibilities of what can be done with a camera are limited more by the imagination and ingenuity of the photographer than by the simplicity of the instrument. The book explains how to use the different types of cameras, and the controls on them. It also discusses lenses and the kinds of effects they can achieve.

To put it simply, I'm impressed with all three of these books, and don't hesitate to recommend them. They're available in the Bookstore, so take a look at them.

If You Want To Get Away

Applications are available from December 1, 1972 to March 1, 1973, in the Admissions Office, Whitmore Hall, for Undergraduate Students interested in going on exchange either semester of next year. The participating institutions for 1973-74, are:

Illinois State University, Montana State University, Morgan State College, Ohio University, Oregon State University, Rutgers–the State University of New Jersey (at New Brunswick), University of Alabama, University of Hawaii, University of Idaho, University of Maine-Fort Kent, University of Massachusetts-Amherst, University of Montana, University of Nevada-Reno, University of Oregon, University of South Florida, University of Wisconsin-Green Bay.

The student applying for an exchange should be a sophomore. The exchange would be during his junior year. The student must have at least a 2.5 cumulative grade point average. Students who are interested in participating in the program for next year must complete an application and return it to Mr. Loder, Office of the Registrar, no later than the deadline of March 1, 1973. Final selections, including a list of alternates, are expected to be completed by March 31, 1973."

'Fantasticks' Coming To SW

This Thursday, Friday, and Saturday The Fantasticks comes to UMass. The Fantasticks was originally produced in 1959 in New York as a small, unpretentious musical. Since then it has had a continuous run of over thirteen years in ever one thousand different productions making it America's longest running musical.

This version, an entirely student-produced production, will be performed in Patterson House Theater, corner of Fearing and Sunset Streets in Southwest, on December 7, 8 and 9 at 8:30 PM. Admission is 75¢ and tickets are sold at the door.

Upton Bell Out; Carl Garrett In

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - Upton Bell, son of a former pro football commissioner who rose through the upper echelons of the sport in a career that began as a $65-a-week dressing room attendant, said Tuesday he had been fired from his post as general manager of the lowly New England Patriots.

Bell, 34, who had one year remaining on a reported rich three-year contract, was a center of controversy in his nearly two years as general manager of the Patriots as he failed in attempts to bring the club out of the depths of the National Football League.

The announcement of the firing of Bell came only hours after NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle ordered the Patriots to reinstate suspended running back Carl Garrett. Bell had been in the forefront of the move to suspend Garrett, the team's leading rusher, three weeks ago when the action was taken.

The son of the late Bert Bell, former NFL commissioner, Bell was hired by the Patriots in February, 1971, leaving the job of personnel director of the Baltimore Colts, a team he had spent a decade with, rising from a dressing room attendant to a top managerial post.

Bell accomplished what he said was his first hurdle in his job with the Patriots-signing the 1971 top draft choice, quarterback Jim Plunkett.

But after that there were few victories for the outspoken Bell despite a slew of trades and a long, finally successful battle to get rid of Coach John Mazur, who quit three weeks ago.

The Patriots were 2-12 in 1970-the season before Bell joined the team-and he said his goal would be "to give the New England fans a consistently winning football team."

The team's record did improve slightly in 1971, climbing to 6-8, but the bottom fell out this year.

After upset victories over Washington and Atlanta in the second and third regular season games this season, the Patriots went into a nosedive that now has accumulated nine consecutive defeats. The team currently has a 2-10 record with two games left to play.

Bell made several controversial trades earlier this year, saying on several occasions that the Patriots must be a team and that individuals who did not contribute to that image weren't needed.

He traded the Patriots' all-time leading rusher, fullback Jim Nance, to Philadelphia for a future draft choice, sent wide receiver Ron Sellers to Dallas for another draft choice and shipped linebacker Steve Kiner to Miami for a taxi squad lineman.

When he took over his job in 1971, he said he had "been given full authority and I intend to run the whole organization."

"I have the authority to make trades" and do whatever else is necessary to make the Patriots a winner, he said. More than a year later he found out differently, when he sought to remove Mazur after the 1971 season.

The Patriots' board of directors did not agree and rehired the coach who subsequently resigned after the Patriots were dealt the worst defeat in their history earlier this season-a 52-0 drubbing at Miami.

Bell also had other problems, losing rebel quarterback Joe Kapp when he jumped the club during training camp before the 1971 season.

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - Running back Carl Garrett, the leading ground gainer for the punchless New England Patriots who was suspended for missing practice, is back on the squad.

Pete Rozelle, commissioner of the National Football League, ordered Garrett reinstated Tuesday for the remainder of the season. The Pats now 2-10 play Sunday at New Orleans and close out their season Dec. 17 at Denver.

Garrett's return to the team came on the same day that Upton Bell was fired as general manager by the Patriots' board of directors and owner William Sullivan.

A spokesman for the Patriots said a telegram from Rozelle read:

"Pending a decision to be made at the full evaluation of the record of a hearing held yesterday Monday, this office has determined that Carl Garrett should be free to participate in the New England Patriots' two remaining regular season games.

"Accordingly, while the action is not to be interpreted on the merits, the Patriots are hereby directed to reinstate Mr. Garrett immediately."

Garrett is the Patriots' leading rusher with 418 yards in 104 carries and three touchdowns.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Cancer men appear to be attracted to older women. Scorpio women are drawn to younger men. Gemini men and women are open-minded in this area and seem perfectly willing to experiment. Leo men and women are willing to be convinced and age is no barrier where Capricorn is concerned.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get finger on pulse of public. Means go with tide. Be sure your concepts are understood. Don't veer too far from practical course. Consult one who has traveled. Hold off on journey of your own. It is best now to delay.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may be going in too many directions simultaneously. Key is to be versatile without confusing basic issues. Be wary in financial area. Take no unnecessary risks. Older individual means well but lacks strength.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take time to be thorough. Check fine print. Become familiar with subtle nuances of any undertaking. There is weight of added pressure, responsibility on your shoulders. Emphasis is on making opposition understand your views.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make inquiries. Doors previously closed could now be ajar. Accent is on the hidden, restricted and basic health. Relationship with member of opposite sex could blossom.

Travel plans should be made prior to vacation period.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Emotions could take over and cause impulsive actions. No time for speculative ventures. Wait until air clears. Additional information is necessary. Family member does not deserve a shouting match.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may not be holding objective view in connection with goals, ambitions. Key is to find out what is really required. Necessary materials are available. However, indirect course may be necessary. Means find alternatives.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may be held responsible for actions, statements of relatives. Know it and be aware of plans. Someone may be trying to pull wool over your eyes. Capricorn could offer counsel of value. Throw aside pride-ask.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Finish rather than start-don't throw money into project that has proved to be losing proposition. Take time to review situation. Aries could play important role. Finances continue to dominate.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): One who is close to you also is troubled. Be mature enough to listen without casting first stone. You gain if legal matters are checked. Key is to show that you can understand. Then fresh start can be rewarding.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You have tendency now to fool yourself. Key is to be practical about health, work, confidential matters. Pisces is involved. You can create now and express in beautiful manner. Do so rather than waste time brooding.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friendship is put to test. Obtain hint from Capricorn message. Young person may be on wrong track. Don't permit sentiment to cloud objective judgment. Study alternative methods. Highlight ability to use available material.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Delays, apparent obstructions may actually benefit you. Know it and respond accordingly. Your goal apparently is blocked by law, older individual. Key now is to maintain steady pace, checking details along the way.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are interested in music, can do much with your voice. You began new cycle this year and you are more independent as result. Much of past has lost its grip on you. Real progress is possible and June will be your most significant month of 1973.

USC, No.1

Southern California sits atop the college football world, but the Ohio State Buckeyes could rock the boat by upsetting the Trojans in the Rose Bowl.

Although unanimous No. 1 in Tuesday's final regular season Associated Press poll, the 11-0 USC team must risk its top-rated neck one more time.

Post-bowl balloting in the infant hours of 1973 will determine the 1972 national champion since most leading teams have post-season duty ahead.

Southern Cal grabbed all 50 first-place votes from sports writers and broadcasters in final regular season voting in a runaway decision over No. 2 Oklahoma, Sugar Bowl bound with a 10-1 record.

Ohio State, 9-1, was third and retained hope of overtaking the Trojans in the post-season poll showdown if it spills Southern Cal on New Year's Day at Pasadena.

A Trojan victory would almost certainly earn USC its third national title in 11 seasons. Southern Cal became the only major unbeaten last Saturday with a 45-23 smashing of Notre Dame.

Under the Boardwalk

By MARTY KELLEY

The Political Arena - They'll be a lot in the air at that undersized Hall this weekend. The smell of victory for one squad, the tears of the loser as well. You'll see the smoke of the critics trying to call it for each others benefit. The television lens of ABC and the banners of flags will abound, but of most of the pomp and pageantry pervading the '72 Boardwalk, most of all you'll see a helluva a lot of flying footballs.

For passing will reign supreme at Convention this weekend with some of the most colorful offensive components of the small college circuit showing their worth. So if the Bookies want points, they'll get 'em in this one.

So just how will the hungry Minutemen that put any passing myth about Gary Marangi to rest, handle the best one-two passing punch in the country. Well, how Mr. Larry Pasquale (defensive backfield coach for the Minutemen who received gold bars after his BC performance).

"Well, basically there are three ways to defense the passing game," said Pasquale. "First of all you have to delay the receivers. You do this by cutting them down at the line of scrimmage. Another alternative is to put a strong rush on the passer, and finally you defend with extra backs namely the linebackers." Well, coach it looks all fine and dandy on paper but will it work?

And when you consider it, Coach Pasquale in outline form has given the real keys to victory in the Boardwalk Classic.

So like any factory setup, you're given the blueprint and then you need the manpower to make the structure go. For the Minutemen the tangibles that failed to produce only at Bucknell and the Cross will be on the firing line again. Do the names Healy, Parrot, Hansen, and Brown ring a bell. For Pasquale and his cohorts that took a feather out of the Eagle's bonnet awhile ago, welcome to Atlantic City. It won't be a vacation.

And Paul Hansen knows this all too well. As a matter of fact the Junior cornerback wished the Atlantic City fiasco would end a bit earlier. Paul wishes he could get back to the Commonwealth Saturday night. The reasons are much more academic than social. The academic grind of the elongated football season that badgers each Minuteman has not passed Hansen by. With two tests on Monday, a final on Tuesday, 2 finals on Thursday, and a pair of papers due the end of the week, you might say that Paul has had problems thinking football. But not so.

"Mac has done a tremendous job making us forget about BC", admitted Hansen. "You really can't be worried as a defensive back about the fact that they throw the ball a lot. I know my assignment will be mainly the tight end as usual and I'll be ready and I know the rest of the guys will".

Hansen besides being in the right spot at the right time ala John Healy has all but carried a distinction of his own on the grids this fall. Check game films from BU and Rhody and you'll find that it was Hansen that hibernated in the quarterback's shirt. The Rainbow defense and John Healy were instrumental in Hansen's success.

"Healy's something else", said Hensen. "He'll call the signals that allows me to release from the tight end and concentrate on the strong side backs thus leaving me a clear shot at the quarterback as well as an even shot at getting the screen before it develops".

Pasquale added that the Aggies will be using a lot of wide out patterns so in essence Hansen will probably not be blitzing at all. "It will primarily be a man to man type of coverage game", added Larry. "I know we have the personel to play them head for head. You won't see any daylight at the line of scrimmage".

Zone will be situational for the Minuteman deep backs and that should help Earl Brown, because he can't play it. His inexperience with zone rotation was self evident in both the Bucknell and Holy Cross games, but the loss of Healy who wasn't around to babysit like he's done so well all season, really hurt. But John will be more than ready for the East-West affair.

As a rookie Brown has had his share of problems but it's all chalked up to experience, some of it costly. However Earl went over his basic adjustment to college football.

"In high school 'I was used to putting moves on people and not having them thrown at me". But Earl offered some interesting points on the art of defense.

"My basic problem in the zone situation is the fact that I lose my concentration. To be successful defensively you have to concentrate on the waist. The man can move his arms and head in any direction but he can't go anywhere without his waist". You got a point, Earl.

So in the Rainbow defense it's simple. Healy takes the inside release, Hansen the outside with primary responsibility on the strong side backs. But expect the Aggies to adjust to different defense as Pasquale has said they have all year.

Said Pasquale, "They don't have particularly great speed, but they have good moves, better hands, and they really know how to utilize the passing game". But in Pasquale's three part serial on pass stoppage look for the rush with the web of MacAlleney and Bradshaw to lurk over the diminutiveness of the most statistical college qb in the country, Bob Biggs, who by nature's benevolence, stands but 6 ft. tall. By all means rushable.

Details

With the Boardwalk Bowl just three days away, this is how the minutiae of an undertaking like this stack up:

TICKETS: Priced at $6, $4, and $2. They'll be on sale until 8:00 PM tonight at the Boyden Ticket Office. There is not a bad seat in the Convention Center.

ACCOMODATIONS: The official university party is staying at the Holiday Inn on Missouri Avenue in Atlantic City. For a single occupancy it costs $14.00 per day, per person; for a double it's $7.00 per day, per person; and for a triple or quadruple it's $6.00 per day, per person. The rates are subject to a 5 per cent tax.

Reservations at these rates can be made by calling the nearest Holiday Inn. There's a Holiday Inn in Springfield and its number is 781-0900. If you identify yourself as being associated with UMass when you call these rates will apply.

DEPARTURE AND RETURN: The team will leave campus at approximately 12:30 PM Thursday and will return to campus at approximately 1:30 PM Sunday.

Rally!!

Athletic Director Frank McInerney announced yesterday that classes have been cancelled from 11:55 AM to 12:30 PM Thursday so that members of the student body may attend the send off rally being given to the football team prior to their departure for the Boardwalk Bowl in Atlantic City.

The rally will be held on the street side of the campus pond and has ben organized under the supervision of Marie Romanus and Kris Fletcher, co-captains of the cheerleaders.

Cocktail Party

The Alumni Office is sponsoring a cocktail party after the Bowl game at the Shelburne Hotel, right near the Convention Center.

The party will be open to anyone associated with the University of Massachusetts, be it students, faculty, alumni or just friends.

In addition, anyone staying for a meal at the Shelburne after the cocktail party will get a free cocktail with their meal.

Bad Boy Rodgers Wins Heisman Award

NEW YORK (AP) — Johnny Rodgers, Nebraska's triple-threat dynamo, outran his badboy image and was awarded the Heisman Trophy Tuesday as college football's premier player of 1972.

Explosive Oklahoma running back Greg Pruitt finished second and Rodgers' teammate from the Cornhuskers, middle guard Rich Glover, third in a 12-3 sweep for the Big Eight Conference.

"Give Coach Bob Devaney a lot of credit for this," said the 175-pound wingback who dazzled opponents with his pass catching, running and punt returning.

"I never knew my real father and Coach Devaney has been like a stand-in father to me. I'm sort've an 'old' 21, but a much better man than when I was 17. I had my scratches with the law, but I'm not a bad guy."

Pruitt showed up prior to the announcement at the Downtown Athletic Club of New York, which awards the prestigious Heisman Trophy. He was openly disappointed.

"I'm upset at losing," said the Sooner speedster. "Johnny won because of two things--he does more than one thing on the field and he had more publicity."

Pruitt and Rodgers each said they were close friends, but the Heisman frontrunners from Nebraska and Oklahoma passed without speaking when Johnny arrived 30 minutes after the announcement.

"He won, I lost," said Pruitt, "that's life."

Rodgers polled 301 first-place votes from 934 selectors, piling up 1,310 points. Pruitt had 966 with 117 firsts and Glover received 652 with 99 for the No. 1 spot.

Only two linemen, including the 234-pound Glover, placed among the top 14 vote-getters. John Hannah, a 275-pound offensive guard from Alabama, was 11th. He was on hand for Tuesday's ceremony.

Rodgers, an English major from Omaha, set 19 Nebraska records in leading the Cornhuskers to national championships in 1970 and '71 and an 8-2 record this year, good enough to get them to the Orange Bowl against Notre Dame.

In three seasons, he caught 147 passes for 2,667 yards and 26 touchdowns. His dazzling punt returns averaged 16 yards and Rodgers also ran the ball 133 times for 838 yards.

"He is the only man who should get the Heisman Trophy," said Devaney. "He's the greatest football player in college today. Sure, the kid got into trouble a couple of years ago and is paying the price, but there's nothing in the Heisman rules that says a violation makes a man ineligible."

The Nebraska coach called Rodgers "a fine kid and a great football player. Any voter thinking about the best player in America had to vote for Johnny. This could restore his faith in human beings a little bit. I don't believe there has ever been a more exciting player to see or work with."

Perhaps the most spectacular Rodgers statistic was that he averaged 13.8 yards every time he put his hands on the football, not counting pass receptions.

Several sports columnists, noting that Rodgers was jailed for a 1970 gas station holdup and had brushes with police over traffic violations, had campaigned against his selection.

Rodgers suggested that those against him should "take the time to know me. Then, I might change their mind. Otherwise, it's like putting handcuffs on me now for what happened in the past. I'm a better man now."

Rodgers alluded to his most serious scrape, a $90 gas station holdup in Nebraska two years ago prior to his sophomore season with the Cornhuskers.

"That was the only bad scrape. Considering the kind of environment I came from, it could have been 10 or 12 times. I never knew my father and I give football credit for saving me."

Pruitt, asked his opinion on the moral issues whirling around the Heisman award, said, "They should tell you what the award is for...-whether character is involved. If it is, Johnny's record should count against him. If it isn't, they should just look at what he did on the football field."

Rodgers was No. 1 in each of five geographical sections. Pruitt was second in the East, Midwest, Southwest and Far West and Davis was runnerup in the South with the Oklahoma star third.

Ballots distributed to sports newsmen include first, second and third choices and are counted on a 3-2-1 point basis.

"I haven't kept up with how popular or unpopular I was in various areas," Rodgers said. "I know some writers in the East were on me. I knew there would be controversy and I had to deal with it. All I know is I had the best statistics for three years anyone ever had in college football."

Domres Named Player of the Week

NEW YORK (AP)—"We want John! We want John!" the Baltimore crowd chanted. They finally got Johnny Unitas–but not before Marty Domres had given them a victory.

The young quarterback, who has replaced a veritable legend in the Colts' backfield and has succeeded admirably despite more than the usual amount of pressure, passed for three touchdowns and ran for a fourth last Sunday to lead Baltimore to a 35-7 victory over the Buffalo Bills.

It earned him the selection Tuesday as The Associated Press Offensive Player of the Week in the National Football League. Other nominees included San Diego running back Mike Garrett, New York Jets' place-kicker Bobby Howfield and Los Angeles' quarterback Roman Gabriel.

"What Marty is doing now, even when he's not having a big percentage day, is getting us in the end zone," Coach John Sandusky said after Domres had guided the Colts to their fourth victory in the past five games.

The performance against the Bills was a good example. Domres hit on 12 of 24 passes for 138 yards and rushed seven times for 40 yards. Not overly impressive. But he got Baltimore over the goal line with scoring tosses of 29 and nine yards to Don McCauley and 18 yards to Lydell Mitchell, then ran 15 yards for another touchdown.

By EARLE BARROLL

Perhaps you've been wondering who the New England football coach of the year is going to be. You might also be asking yourself what this beautiful weather is doing to UMass' preparations for the Boardwalk Bowl.

Here's the answers:

Yesterday at Boraschi's Restaurant in Boston, Dick MacPherson who guided the Minutemen to an 8-2 season and a bowl bid was honored as the New England coach of the year by the New England College Football Writers Association.

MacPherson's selection came in the wake of an unusually strong year of coaching in this region. The second year coach was chosen over Ed Doherty of Holy Cross, Jake Crouthamel of Dartmouth, Ed Farrell of Bridgeport, Bo Lyons of Northeastern, Carman Cozza of Yale and Bob Odell of Williams just to name a few.

MacPherson returned late from Boston yesterday, he ran his gridders through their paces at practice and then left immediately for a speaking engagement in Lynn. But assistant coach Larry Pasquale expressed the feelings of the entire football team and staff when he said at training table, "We feel so happy for the Man (as they call him). He's a great guy to work for in every way."

Captain Clarence Brooks accompanied MacPherson to Boston as this was coach-captains day for the Beantown scribes. The senior guard was overwhelmed by the reception he and MacPherson received.

"They're in love with us in Boston," he smiled. "They're behind us one-hundred percent. They said that UMass was representing New England football at the Boardwalk Bowl."

As for the Bowl game itself, it's quite obvious that there won't be snow and cold and winds in Convention Center. UCal at Davis has been preparing for this game in California and the rest is self-explanatory.

Will this weather affect the Minutemen? A consensus of UMass assistant coaches has it that it won't help, but it won't hurt also. "Right now in the season the only hangups should be mental," said Bob Lord. "But mental hangups should not effect an athlete.

"Physically the snow shouldn't hurt us. Our backs haven't been able to make the sharp cuts in the snow, but it's like running in the sand and this should help our physical condition.

"We'll be leaving for the Bowl on Thursday, so we'll be able to get two good days of practice indoors at Convention Hall."

Yesterday Bob Biggs, who will quarterback the Aggies against the Minutemen was named first team all-America in the small college division. Pasquale, who coaches the defensive backs indicated that he won't be changing his strategy for this game.

"We'll use our basic coverages" he said, and "We're 8-2 and we've played some pretty good teams this season, so I don't think we'll be changing for this one."

Pucksters Face Williams

By BILL BALLOU

The UMass Minutemen play their final road game before Christmas when they travel up to Williamstown, Mass. and take on Williams College tonight.

The Ephmen have twelve lettermen returning from last year's squad which played against UMass twice, once at Orr Rink and once up there in the Williams Tournament. Both times the then Redmen had an easy time of it winning by scores of 8-3 and 8-1.

Oddly enough, the Williams rink is going to be like a home away from home for the Minutemen. Counting this game and the Williams Tournament UMass will play four games up there.

Playing in that rink may be somewhat tough. The boards there are of the lively variety, considerably more so than the ones at Orr Rink where the Minutemen practice. So, it could be a rough adjustment for the young UMass squad. They had trouble with the lively boards at the Boston Arena, especially in the early stages of the game and on numerous occasions the defense was caught up ice.

The Williams rivalry is one of the oldest on the UMass schedule and Williams has traditionally been one of their toughest opponents. Despite the two wins last year the over-all series record stands at 13-25-4 in favor of Williams.

Scoring statistics thus far for the Minutemen show the Keenan-Avery-Harris line as the most productive. Pat Keenan has two goals and two assists while Lonnie Avery has two goals and one assist. Freshman Billy Harris shows a goal and two assists for his efforts.

That line has far and away been the most productive for the Minutemen, as the Riley-Connors-Shea and Muse-Lynch-Coleman lines just haven't gotten untracked yet. In fact that third line has yet to score a point.

St. A's — B-ball Foe

By MARTY KELLEY

In the Sticks—Up here in the hinterland above the glacier where the severity of nature knows no equal, you won't be greeted with a "hi, how you all doing". But that doesn't mean you won't get hammered with a flying megaphone, a loose coke or two, or even wrapped in a spare flag, or felled by a flying frisbee or three. And with no comparison in Arenas and although 800 miles apart, there's something quite similar between Morgantown and Manchester, the "Balcony Buckaneers" have no equal either.

So it's off to St. Anselm's and another rowdy den of inequity to play in. The only difference from the Morgantown fiasco—I guarantee you, you won't find a Jerome Anderson. You're lucky if you find St. Anselm's. Yes, the Hawks should not be on our slate and we've nothing to gain by going there except about three hours sleep on a Peter Pan both ways.

But although a young Murphy-Skinner team and a new Charlie Peters really beat the Mountaineers, but inexperience, travel (8 of the first 11 are on the road), the rowdy fans that fill the 2,000 seat sweatbox, and general loneliness could rattle the young team who desperately need one here before the ultimate Ram from Rhode Island opens Hicks this weekend.

"We don't anticipate any changes for this one", said Jack Leaman yesterday afternoon. "They like to hold the ball a lot so we'll probably press and fast break when the situation dictates."

So the five that was one second and 600 miles from becoming instant heroes will start the formality. That means a frontcourt of Charlie Peters up top with John Murphy and Tom McLaughlin in the corners.

Indications at Morgantown point for an easy win here and some integrity left over for the weekend. Now I know you're all dying to find out about the adversary.

Well for the record they've split with Babson and Suffolk with the Boston School upsetting them in their opener. Now this looks real bad for UMass basketball after the Minutemen opened some Eastern eyelids at West Virginia.

The front line of the Hawks-absolutely no match for the visitors. They go 6'3, 6'3, and 6'2 and that trio would have a tough time outreboudning Archbishop Williams. Whoever they are. Good shooters in the backcourt in frosh Vin Hilton and Herb Johnson but the list of threats stops there. Nope, no Jerome Anderson.

Mat Men Meet Central Conn

By JOHN BOCK

It's going to be another week before the campus gets its first look at the '72-'73 Minuteman wrestling team.

The Blue Devils of Central Connecticut State College are a little luckier (?) as they face the UMass grapplers on their home mats tonight at 7:00.

Last year when Coach Barr played host, they came in with a lineup riddled with JV performers and hoping to win a few. They left with a tie.

The Blue Devils did a lot of maturing because they took basically the same team and placed fourth in the New Englands.

Returning placers for CCSC are John Hamilton, second in the New Englands at 126 pounds and Frank Shaw second at 177 pounds.

As for the rest of the team, they will have to count on some promising freshman and transfers to build up their strength. The freshman team from last year did not place a man in the NEIWA Freshman Tourney.

This is the first and last meeting of the grapplers from these two schools this year, as Central Connecticut is not a University Division school and thus not a member of the NEUWA.

In the past years the Blue Devils have been both a pain in the side and a blessing for UMass when it came to the New Englands. Two years ago when UMass won the New Englands it was on the strength of the place winners. CCSC had beaten a couple of kids that might have been threats and, in one instance, beat a highly rated Springfield grappler. Last year it was the same only a couple UMass grapplers fell victim to Central Connecticut.

But tournament or not the Blue Devils are tough customers and can never be counted out. They wrestle a good schedule and are generally in shape for an eight minute bout.

It was being in shape that contributed to the Minutemen matmen's recent victory over Yale and it is hoped that it might come in handy again tonight.

Speaking of Yale, the Elis were hosts to Central Connecticut and Wesleyan last night and it is a possibility that they could really wear the Blue Devils down.

If they fail, however, then it will be up to Barr's Barnstormers to do it.

The lineup is pretty much the same as that which beat Yale. The Minutemen will be without the services of Co-Captain Carl Dambman who has contracted a flu bug, but should be ready to go against Harvard Saturday. He will be replaced by Frosh Joe Acerra, a solid New York wrestler who has come down from Heavyweight.

At 142 Dick Muri will provide some strength as the team waits for Russ Chateauneuf to return. Muri was the 126 pound Champion of the NEIWA Fresman Tourney last year.

Last year CCSC Coach George Redman fared well against the "Redmen" but, times have changednames and the Minutemen should leave the Blue Devils wearing the Red this year.

Skaters Get the Shaft

It's all very intimidating when you first experience Gutterson Field House. The building, the fans, the atmosphere is all very major league. After standing on top of the zamboni room at Orr Rink, it's a change.

Maybe it's because all they have up there is UVM hockey. There's a statewide radio network, and their's is the only press box in Div. II to provide mimeographed statistics to the press.

But you feel out of place, and when UMass scores and you allow yourself the luxury of clapping your hands just a few times the people around you turn and look with kind of a "How dare you" expression on their face. "My God," you say to yourself, -we don't stand a chance against these people. They're the Rockefellers of Division II and we're the vacuum cleaner salesmen they let in the back door if they're in a good mood.

Yet over the past three years UMass has been just as good as Vermont in hockey, and even Saturday night the Minutemen played the Cats to a standstill in their own kitchen.

No matter how many times UMass plays UVM to a standstill, no matter what the location or circumstances, it won't hide the fact that hockey at UMass is reduced to second-class citizenship.

We've been through the rink situation before, ad nauseum. We're forced to practice and play at a rink that's not ours and where we're not particularly welcomed. Amherst College can't be blamed for not wanting the headache of trying to house two teams.

That's bad enough, but that's not all. Come up to the Collegian office sometime and take a look at the brochure we got from Dick Whittier, the Sports Information Director at Vermont. It's beautiful. For comparison, put next to it the "hockey prospectus" that serves to inform the media about UMass hockey. It's mimeographed, on one side of a piece of white paper, and contains the same type of up-to-the-minute information you would expect from something that was published (?) last spring.

All right. Maybe we can't measure up to Vermont in our hockey enthusiasm. But we can come close to Boston State. Or can we? Wednesday night at the Boston Arena the UMass lineup consisted of such tidbits as this: No. 2 for UMass was listed as "Doug Rocoli". In real life this is Don Lowe. Pat Keenan, the pride of Weston, Ontario, comes from West Ontario if you believe the program.

Actually, you can place the blame for these mistakes on Dave Roberts, the SID from Boston State. Seems that when our Sports Information Office didn't reply to his queries about our roster he was forced to call up and get them over the phone. Why the gall of that! He should have driven out and got them.

Even our beloved Varsity M Club, whom I adore for permitting me to feast on their ham sandwiches (for $1.50); sees fit to schedule basketball coach Jack Leaman seven times as guest speaker during the winter. Jack Canniff (who that?) rates the call twice. Basketball even rates a post-season wrap-up despite the fact there was no post- season for them last year. (Hockey won the division playoffs).

And so it goes on. Last year the hockey team placed three men on a six-man All-America squad and their coach was named Division II coach of the year. But who knows or cares?

And UMass-Boston gets a rink (President Wood says it'll be used for intra-murals) while we still have the campus pond.

I know that I'm tired of feeling like the pest exterminator when I go to another school and they talk of rinks and things, and I'm sure the hockey coaches and players are too.

Senate Passes Publication Rationales

By BOB SCHEIER

Rationales (preliminary funding approvals) were passed last night for the Collegian, Spectrum, and Yahoo as the Student Senate started its annual budget process in the final meeting of first semester.

The senate also approved its $12,000 share of the funding for an experimental mass transit system for the UMass area, designed to decrease traffic congestion in the area.

Also approved were a motion taking the SGA (Student Government Association) President's special assistants from the senate executive committee.

A $1,000 appropriation for a conference of area governments to be held off campus late this semester or early second semester was also approved, after lengthy debate.

Rationales for the three publications, including the Collegian, largest of all senate appropriations (about $90,000 this year) passed after some debate.

Opponents of the Collegian rationale claimed coverage of both local and national events had been biased, and one senator claimed a student from his constituency had been unfairly dropped from the staff.

Significant debate was also heard on funding for Yahoo the campus humor magazine. Several students claimed the magazine, which is published twice a year, was of poor quality last year.

Supporters said contributions to Yahoo had increased this year.

The Spectrum (general interest magazine) budget was passed with little debate.

The transit service appropriation was also passed with little debate.

Prolonged debate resulted from the motion on moving the SGA President's assistants from the senate executive committee. Those in favor of it said it would keep the SGA and the student senate seperate.

One opponent of the move, SGA president Larry Ladd, said the move would decrease the coordination between himself and the special assistants, and the senate committee chairmen, all of whom are on the committee.

The appropriation to allow the area governments to hold their conference came after an appeal from Mickey Harris, president of the Sylvan area government.

He said the area governments were "trying to get around the reputation of the student senate."

"We can't do things for ourselves because we're never given enough money by the senate," he said.

In other business, the senate voted to support the cost of a "People's Market," intended to sell food to students at prices lower than those in area supermarkets.

A number of procedural bills were delayed until the senate's next meeting.

Nick Apostola, chairman of the senate's academic affairs committee, was the sponsor of a bill passed by a tie-breaking vote from senate speaker John Hogan.

The bill, which Apostola said was satirical, asked the Board of Trustees to require a Doctor of Philosophy in Education, or equivalent in the field of education, of anyone given a "principle administrative post in the University."

He said it was a satire of the stress placed upon degrees as requirements for posts at the school.

"My god, they're taking it seriously!" he shouted as debate on the bill started.

Senator Wellesley Rasmussen collected $19 from the senators to be sent to the Globe Santa.

The senate also approved a $500 category change in its own budget, to pay for the rental of a copying machine it plans to share with the Student Activities office staff.

The members of the Student Senate voted on the rationales (preliminary funding approvals) of the Collegian, Spectrum, and Yahoo. The Senate also approved its $12,000 share of funding for the UMass experimental mass transit system. (MDC Photo by Steve Schmidt)

Police Meet With Blacks On Arms' Control

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

UMass Security Department officials and representatives of the Black community met yesterday to discuss the possibility of setting up a committee that would record the various interactions between police and the Black community.

The two groups also discussed the possibility of creating a policy that would instruct members of the security force to keep their firearms in the trunks of their cars while on routine security business.

The stage for discussion on this proposal was set when David L. Johnston, director of campus security, said he was "absolutely adamantly against" the idea of disarming police on campus.

The Black community representatives tabled the proposal during the meeting after a brief two-minute caucus. However, they added that the proposal was only being withdrawn for the time being and would be brought up during future discussion between police and the Black community.

The eight Black representatives said their proposed committee would record the "frequency and nature of Black/Police confrontation and/or interactions."

The committee, they said, would also give Black students a "sense that there exists on the campus, machinery to which they can turn if they feel themselves to be victims of police discrimination."

Vice-Chancellor Robert W. Gage for Student Affairs favored the idea of an "interim" committee until the implementation of a police advisory board that is currently being studied by the Student Senate.

He added that this board would handle all student grievances concerning police action, and would establish student input into campus police policies.

Johnston also expressed favorable response to the proposal, but added that he would not be able to make a final decision on its merits until he is able to speak to his officers.

Michael Thelwell, chairman of the Dept. of Afro-American Studies, said a second meeting would be scheduled before next Wednesday to discuss the composition and function of the proposed committee.

He said the committee will not interfere with the every day affairs of the campus police, and has no intention of serving as a "witch hunting tribune."

According to Thelwell, the committee would open up new channels of communication between police and the Black community, and would set into motion procedures designed to "reduce the tension and distrust between the force and the Black community in the future."

In a memorandum dated Dec. 4, Thelwell stated: "If there has not been a record of police harrassment of Blacks, then the existence of the board will do no harm.

"If, on the other hand, certain officers do make a practice of harrassing Blacks, they, by the mere existence of the board, will be inhibited from doing so," he continued. "If they are not, then a record of their actions will rapidly be accumulated, thus forming the basis for appropriate action."

Michael Thelwell, chairman of the Dept. of Afro-American Studies, said a second meeting with the UMass Security Department would be scheduled before next Wednesday. (MDC Photo by Gib Fullerton)

Fees Raise Controversy

By BILL DENSMORE

"Registration" fees and their use in connection with parking control at the University has become the subject of controversy once again. But the issue promises to involve charges of poor motor vehicle planning and misleading information on the part of the University administration.

The parking problem at UMass has been periodically reviewed by University employees, most recently last August. The administration favors increased fees for the purpose of raising revenue for the University, but an employees' union wants no raises.

The latest flare-up over parking results from a meeting of the University of Massachusetts Employees' Association (U.M.E.A.) seven-member executive board at the University last night. At the meeting, the U.M.E.A. board voted 7-0 to withdraw its representative from the Parking and Transportation Council of the University.

The meeting was also attended by state representative-elect James Collins (D-Northampton).

The U.M.E.A. executive council withdrew representative Clarence Hunter because the University "had not acted in good faith" in contract negotiations with the U.M.E.A.

The Association's President, Bernard Turner, claims that remarks made by Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage violate an agreement not to discuss parking and transportation while negotiations are in progress. The Association has been meeting with Gerald Grady, University Business Manager, who is also head of the negotiating committee.

A Monday article in the Collegian said Gage had predicted a "selective increase" in parking fees for next fall. The article said that the increase would be to help parking facilities subsidize themselves, and to discourage bringing of automobiles onto the campus. Gage indicated that such a hike would have to be negotiated with the U.M.E.A. The story also reported that Gage feels policy should be set before negotiations are held.

When asked to comment last night, Dr. Gage said that "policy has to be decided as to whether the parking lots are to be self-supporting, or supported by state funds." He said that his remark "did not intend any specific reference to that union," (U.M.E.A.) and "I don't intend to guide any negotiations--that's none of my business."

The U.M.E.A. board claimed last night that Gage was overstepping the bounds of his job and trying to play a role in labor relations.

The U.M.E.A. says by setting "policy" before negotiations, the administration is trying to circumvent the collective bargaining process by arranging a fee increase before the U.M.E.A. has a chance at the bargaining table. The U.M.E.A. "considers this tactic a violation of lawful due process involving the interests of the employees we represent."

The U.M.E.A. further alleges that Dr. Gage "deleted a section of the Parking and Transportation Council's report to the Trustees" last spring, which stated that fees should be negotiated with the U.M.E.A.

The U.M.E.A. executive board cited a 1970 ruling by the Attorney General saying the University must forward all "parking" fees to the state Treasury. According to the U.M.E.A., the university administration has since decided to charge a "registration" fee of five dollars so that the funds collected may be used for general purposes other than parking and transportation facilities.

A U.M.E.A. spokesman said last night, "We object to the administration charging a 'registration' fee and using the money for non-registration purposes. That is deceit."

Dr. Gage says that the Attorney General's ruling was actually made in the "early sixties", and that "since that time a specific act of the Legislature has made it legal." He added that the Staff Attorney at the University President's office in Boston has been consulted on the issue.

U.M.E.A. President Turner, who is also Head of Security at the library said, "I'm going to write a letter to Bromery." (UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph Bromery). He continued, "It is not in good faith in view of negotiations with the University."

Clarence Hunter, the U.M.E.A. representative who was withdrawn from the Parking and Transportation Council, is also an executive committeeman for the Massachusetts State Employees' Association, and works as a foreman at the Physical plant.

While on the council, Hunter represented the U.M.E.A. in taking the position that "peripheral parking with a bussing system and a one dollar registration fee" should be instituted. Hunter also advocated the building of several new parking lots around the edges of the campus.

Representative-elect James Collins, who was present at the meeting said, "if they're spaces in the parking garage, then there's no reason why people should be getting tickets." Collins said that he would give the UMass- Amherst transportation problem "top priority" at the State House next session, and added that it would be his job "to go and fight for monies in the Legislature."

Collins said that he thought an appropriate "stop-gap" measure would be to "utilize present places as best as possible," while plans and funds for mass transit or parking facilities are found. He indicated that western Massachusetts has not been getting its share of mass transit funds despite a need for new systems.

Collins also suggested that extra spaces in the Campus Center garage be used as free parking by university staff, but Hunter remarked that the suggestion would fall on "deaf ears."

U.M.E.A. officers said they opposed parking fees because as taxpayers they already pay for the use of university land.

According to the executive board, the UMass administration has made errors in planning from the start when it planned campus expansion. Rapid enrollment increases were not taken into account when planning parking facilities for the present.

One member of the group remarked, "now they're asking the University students and state employees to pay for their mistakes."

University of Massachusetts Business Manager Gerald Grady, reached at his home last night said, "I did not interpret the article by Dr. Gage to be any more restrictions on our own negotiations than there had been formerly," but he added that the parking fees issue "is one of the key issues that is the subject of our negotiations."

Grady said that Dr. Gage had not personally contacted him before Gage made the statements in the Collegian article. But he said that all the administration is aware of issues being negotiated with the U.M.E.A.

A spokesman for the U.M.E.A. group concluded that it "must oppose the parking fee increase" because it "injures the financial interests of the employees we represent." The group says parking fees are used on a general basis, but according to Dr. Gage, "the entire five dollars is used in a manner directly related to parking."

Guild Probes Student-Made Goods

By STEPHEN M. FINE

"The issue at hand is not whether the goods being sold are craft goods, but rather, if they are student made goods," stated Bill Staton, coordinator of the wares table in the Campus Center complex, and moderator of yesterday's meeting of the Campus Center Crafts Guild in the Student Union's Berkshire Room.

The meeting was held according to Staton to determine student made goods. This, he said, would be voted on by the Crafts Guild according to the following standards; 1) if a seller were a student, or related to a student in some way such as in the same household or relative, 2) if the goods sold were handcrafted in some way by the student.

At the beginning of the meeting paper ballots were handed out for the members of the guild to vote on. Staton said he wanted to follow this procedure, because last week he felt many people may have been pressured by the hand voting procedure.

He explained however, that the same general procedures used last week would be this week. "It was decided that everyone was in the guild if they wanted to be. The only thing they had to do then was explain what they make and how they make it before a 2/3 quorum of the guild, and then answer some questions about it, so it could be decided whether it was student made goods."

Staton saio that if a person should feel his goods were misjudged by the guild, then this could be appealed personally to him and ultimately to the Campus Center Board of Governors.

Starting at one corner of the room, which was filled approximately 40 people, he let each person explain what their craft was and how it was made.

Some of the craftsmen didn't want to reveal the process they used to make their particular item. "I don't want to tell how I make it because it could be sold to industry", said Brian McKenna, a maker of silver jewelry.

Other craftsmen gave rationales for their selling what they made. Tom LaMasney, a candle maker, explained that he was doing it for the enjoyment. "I get my wax from a greenhouse. I know I'm paying double the price for 30¢ per pound of wax, but I'm selling because I like to make these things and I want to get rid of them."

After each craftsmen presented what he did the guild members voted. Progressively as the meeting went on, the number of people thinned out, as many left after their presentation was complete.

At times some people were put under intensive scrutinization by those present. Ken Grossman, who wanted to sell handcrafted silver earrings that he made during the summer with 3 of his friends, was at times unable to answer some of the questions asked by other craftsmen who worked in silver. "I made these earrings in a shop with 3 of my friends, during the summer. I don't know the exact guage of silver wire used or the exact number of the hammer."

Grossman had earlier said that he had used 20 and 22 gauge silver wire, but this drew a great deal of criticism from the craftsman. "He can't very well use 18 gauge or 20," said Michael Lucivero, who works in silver and has a table on the concourse.

When the question came up if the sister of a UMass student, not enrolled in the university, could sell, Staton said that it was alright, as long as there was some relation between the students.

The Crafts Guild was formed after a bitter controversy began, over whether manufactured goods should be sold along with student-made goods on the Campus Center concourse.

Persons selling craft goods (those made by students, or having some financial relation to a UMass student) at the tables said that manufactured goods cheapened the atmosphere of the area and were unfair competition with student-made goods.

Under current rules, only hand made goods may be sold in the Campus Center concourse while manufactured goods may be sold elsewhere in the Campus Center Student Union Complex on the same floor.

Rep. Wants Westover District

CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP)--State Rep. George Keverian, D-Everett, House chairman of the special redistricting committee, has told the Chicopee Board of Aldermen to assign the more than 8,000 residents of Westover Air Force Base to one or more existing precincts.

Keverian, who met with the board Monday, said the air base residents must be included in the city structure in order to comply with state election laws that require that all voting take place in either wards or precincts.

Boston Smoking Doomed

BOSTON (AP) — Richard J. Sinnot, Boston's official censor who put oomph into the expression "banned in Boston," is being asked to ban something else-either smoking at public events or such events as professional hockey and rock concerts.

The request came Wednesday night from Boston Fire Commissioner James H. Kelly who is worried about the possibility of a fire at one of the events.

Kelly said he wants Sinnot to deny an entertainment license to any promoter who can't assure him that the city's smoking laws will be observed during the performance.

Following a two-hour meeting with the city's law and licensing departments and members of entertainment organizations, Kelly said that as long as the smoking laws are neglected, he cannot assure the public safety.

Boston's smoking ordinances permit smoking only in designated areas during concerts, athletic events or other events held inside.

"The fire department has received complaints stating that some halls have been oversold, aisles blocked and 'no-smoking' laws completely violated," Kelly said. "I cannot in good conscience permit these performances to continue."

A spokesman from the commissioner's office said that most of the complaints came from persons attending rock concerts.

School Of Ed. Discusses Chandler

By WALT LALIBERTE

Paul Chandler's admission to the graduate program of the School of Education was the subject of a meeting held yesterday afternoon in the School of Education.

The meeting was held to allow all sides in the controversy about Chandler's admission to explain their views. The faculty moderator, Emma Coppelluzzo stated at the beginning that no decisions would be reached, and that only discussion of the Chandler case would be permitted.

Present were Dean Dwight Allen of the School of Education, members of the faculty, and representatives of the Third World community. Paul Chandler was not present as the Third World community did not feel he should have to defend himself.

During the meeting the Third World community issued an ultimatum to Dean Allen. They demanded a definite answer on Chandler's admission to the graduate program by 9:30 A.M. Friday. They would not divulge actions they might take should Allen ignore the ultimatum.

The controversy yesterday centered on what Dean Allen called," "Concern as to whether or not Paul Chandler supports some of the major social premises of the School."

Dean Allen described these as

Rochelle Chandler (Photos by Bill Beggs)

"radical reform within the system," non-violence, and due process or the ability to abide by decisions that have been reached.

Also included as premises were educational reform, combating racism, and using education to change society in a productive manner.

Marsha Forest, Program Director this semester for Paul Chandler as an undergraduate, replied that Chandler's activities demonstrate his qualifications for admission.

She quoted Chandler as saying, "I deplore violence," and "My struggle is for perpetual peace."

Further, she said that, Chandler travels to Brooklyn weekly to help Catholic priest John Powers with his youth orgaizations, works with the Institute of Pan-African Culture which is bringing noted Third World artists to this campus, and is Student Director of an alternative school rated excellent by the Amherst School Committee.

In explaining his position Dean Allen said, "I think it is important to recognize that when the School passed a committment to diversity this does not mean it has a committment to all diversity. There are limits to the diversity we choose to function with. At the moment, it seems to me that Paul Chandler falls outside the limits of diversity the institution has chosen to exercise."

He further said that, "The School has clearly identified the fact that admissions decisions in the School are made on much broader than simply academic terms."

"It is not a question at this time of Mr. Chandler's ability to succeed in a graduate program viz-a-viz a demonstrated academic ability," he added.

One issue involved, Allen said, is Chandler's statement that he could learn nothing from the School of Education. Allen cited an MDC article in which Chandler stated that both the objectives and methods of the School are detrimental to Third World people.

Allen mentioned that Chandler might find another institution more in accordance with his goals.

Rochelle Chandler, a "Program Director for Exploration" at the

Marsha Forest

School, replied that "Paul would not want to stay here if he did not think he could learn something from the School."

She further demanded to be told the sources of Allen's allegations that Chandler did not believe in non-violence and that he could learn nothing from the School. Allen never revealed these sources.

Jeff Forest, a doctoral candidate who has Chandler as a student, asked that Allen allow faculty members to choose graduate students. He said, "I would not want the Dean to judge everyone. The Dean has wild cards to bring in who he wants. I want that the faculty can bring in who they choose."

A faculty doctoral committee for Chandler was set up last semester. Included in this are Gloria Joseph, Aklyn Lynch, Tom Clark, Rody McCory, and Johnetta Cole.

Allen challenged the allegation that he was interfering in the normal admissions policy. He said that Deans have intervened in admissions cases before and that this has been a traditional right.

Nick Apostola, Chairperson of the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee, however, said that "I find that due process has not been guaranteed in this case." He threatened that his committee may ask the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors to take up the matter.

After the public hearing the School of Education faculty met behind closed doors to decide what action if any they might take in the Chandler case. If they declared an interest, Allen said he would let them become involved in the decision to admit Chandler.

Larry Brown Speaks

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

Dr. Larry Brown, the principal author o the controversial report: "Suffer the Children - The Politics of Mental Health in Massachusetts," said here yesterday that the large numbers of children who need human services the most are presently getting it the least.

"In the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," he said, "the disparity between the official rhetoric for children and the quality of services provided for them is little short of criminal."

The 31-year-old executive director of the Task Force on Children Out of School in a prepared statement told an audience of 50 persons in the SBA auditorium that the Dept. of Mental Health has not implemented the Community Mental Health Act passed by the 1966 state legislature.

"This act was passed in response to the fact that many people in our state are living worse off than animals in the zoos," he continued. "Nearly seven years after this innovative act was passed, we have virtually the same situation."

Brown's 120-page document released Sept. 15 stated that the Dept. of Mental Health "virtually ignores children" and is characterized by "ineptitude, misfeasance and misguided priorities."

The department, he said, allocates less than 18 per cent of its resources for children despite the fact that children comprise nearly 40 per cent of the population in the Commonwealth.

"Not only do children receive but 18 per cent of the department's resources, he added, but the bulk of that money goes for institutionalizing children - often needlessly."

Brown also claimed that DMH is not reallocating its resources from institutions for community based services.

"Today," he said, "the department continues to pour 90 per cent of its monies into these houses of horror."

According to Brown, professionals and bureaucrats are standing in "blantant violation" of passed legislation causing "67,000 mentally ill children to go without services because there is no real community mental health program as mandated by law."

He termed as "morally outrageous" the inaction of administrators who allow children to psychically and physically die

Achievement Cited In Collins' Interview

By MARK VOGLER

Legislation supporting freedom of the press, expansion of educational opportunities for low income people, and raising the minimum wage were among the major bills filed by Representative-elect James Collins of the 2nd Hampshire District in the Massachusetts State House Wednesday.

The primary areas which Collins addressed himself to included assistance to the elderly, consumer protection, civil liberties, and economic, industrial, and labor concerns.

Collins and the American Civil Liberties Union were co-signers to a bill which would allow the press to keep their news sources confidential.

In regard to the bill, Collins said: "The present situation of newsmen is a very serious threat to our country. So we need a strong and free press to keep the government honest. Although this bill will not be effective nationally, it will keep us in tack on the state level."

Other bills pertaining to civil liberties submitted by the state representative were granting of prisoners' voting rights in town of residence and the abolishment of the Massachusetts' Loyalty Oath.

In dealing with consumer protection, Collins said he would work to give the consumer more leverage with prices and the quality of goods by strengthening the state -wide consumer board with more regulations of utility rate hikes.

Collins petitioned a bill to up the minimum wage to $2.00 per hour and also signed legislation to increase scholastic benefits for children of 100% disabled veterans.

In his educational opportunity bill for low income people, Collins pointed out that the aim was to "help a young kid from a poor background by providing him the adequate counseling and efficient method of getting into college."

Collins also put in a bill to create an internship program for undergraduates of state universities and colleges in order that they may work for the state house in Boston. He also supported legislation to extend work study programs to municipal and state government assignments.

Bills were co-signed by Collins to reduce utility rates and property taxes for the elderly.

Collins said although he didn't initiate legislation for institutional reform, said it was an ongoing process. One of the main concerns he committed himself to during his candidacy was to satisfy the needs of the staff and residents of Belchertown.

He also put strong emphasis on prison reform in Massachusetts. Collins plans to tour the state prisons next Thursday and will meet with Commissioner Boone on Friday.

The representative has made a request to be on the educational and tax committees in the state house.

"Another strong concern of mine is the type of tax system in the state. The present one must be revamped in order to make it more attractive for industry to come and settle in Massachusetts," Collins said.

"These are the things I talked about when running for office and I shall devote full time to see that something good is being done in these areas."

Apollo On Way To Moon After Delay

CAPE KENNEDY (AP)--America's Apollo 17 explorers vaulted toward the moon early this morning as their fiery rocket turned night into day and propelled them on what may be man's last journey in this century to an alien world.

The last in the historic Apollo series began at 12:33 am. EST as a thundering Saturn 5 rocket thrust Navy Capt. Eugene A. Cernan, geologist Harrison H. Schmitt and Navy Cmdr. Ronald E. Evans away from their home planet on a scientific expedition to fill in missing chapters in the moon's history.

Hundreds of thousands of persons jammed viewing areas in the Cape Kennedy area to watch the blazing departure in the first after-dark launching of a U.S. man-in-space flight.

To reach the moon, Apollo 17 must first circle the earth two times in slightly more than three hours while the astronauts and ground controllers check all systems. Then a second burst from the rocket's third stage is to propel them toward their distant target.

The launch of Apollo 17, America's last planned manned flight to the moon, was halted by technical problems within seconds of the scheduled 9:53 pm. EST liftoff. Technicians worked on the problem and remained confident a solution would be found before celestial conditions would force a one-day postponement.

The three astronauts, Eugene A. Cernan, Ronald E. Evans and Harrison Schmitt, were not in danger. They were in the space craft atop the powerful Saturn 5 rocket.

The countdown originally had moved smoothly to within 30 seconds of the planned liftoff when the trouble occurred.

The countdown clock was reset for 22 minutes before liftoff and the count was picked up at 10:58 p.m. EST.

The control center then counted down to eight minutes before launch and stopped the process a second time.

Experts said they felt the cause of the trouble had been found, but needed more time to be certain, launch control center said.

Cernan, Evans and Schmitt remained calm during the delay.

When told of the second countdown hold, Mission Control said that "Cernan commented that perhaps they should have a conversation about a good book, Thomas Hardy or something like that."

Launch control center said an automatic sequencing device had detected that the third stage oxygen tank had not been pressurized as planned and ordered termination of the countdown.

"The problem was with the terminal countdown sequencer which failed to give a command to pressurize the third stage tank," space officials said.

The announcement said that launch controllers monitoring the sequencer detected the failure to pressurize the third stage oxygen tank and tried to do it manually by flipping switches in the control center.

"However," a launch control public announcer said, "this didn't happen fast enough to satisfy the automatic sequencer," and the computer-driven device terminated the countdown.

"We have a cut off," mission control said, announcing the halt.

The astronauts, working from the memory of years of training, quickly disarmed pyrotechnic systems aboard their craft as a safety measure.

The launch halt was the first to occur so close to liftoff in the 11-mission, manned Apollo program.

Observers at the press site three miles from the launch pad saw what appeared to be a brief flicker of flame at the base of the rocket when the automatic cutoff occurred.

Officials at launch control, however, later announced that there was no indication that the massive rockets ignited.

If the defect had not been repaired, the launch count would have been rescheduled and Apollo 17 blasted into space on Thursday at 9:53 p.m. EST.

If the launch were not possible by end of the Thursday liftoff period, then the next attempt would come on Jan. 4 at 9:51 p.m. EST. There would be two more opportunities that month, on Jan. 5 and 6.

Moon missions can be launched at only certain times during a month to assure that they arrive at the predetermined lunar site.

Truman Condition Worsens

KANSAS CITY (AP)--Former President Harry S. Truman, hospitalized with lung congestion and bronchitis, was placed on the critical list late last night and the hospital said "death may be imminent."

Shortly after the condition of the 88-year-old former chief executive was downgraded from serious, a spokesman at Research Medical Center reported there had been slight improvement, although Truman remained critical.

Truman's wife, Bess, was at his bedside and his daughter, Margaret Truman Daniel, was flying here from Washington in a jet provided by the White House.

The hospital spokesman would not elaborate on Truman's condition and would not say whether he was conscious.

The former chief executive was taken by ambulance to the hospital late Tuesday. His condition at first was termed fair, but deteriorated to serious during the night.

A hospital spokesman defined "critical" as meaning "vital signs are unstable and not within normal limits. There are major complications, death may be imminent."

A report earlier Wednesday evening from Truman's physician, Dr. Wallace Graham, had said the former president's heart rate was speeding up at times. The statement said, however, that his blood pressure was "within normal limits."

The early evening reports also said Truman was receiving mild sedatives and that his appetite was "poor but improved over recent days."

John Dreves, the hospital's public relations director, asked about the irregular heart beat, said it is "sometimes irregular and at that point it's rapid." The evening bulletin relayed by Dreves said:

"In response to speculation about the cause of Mr. Truman's hospitalization, Dr. Graham said that pulmonary difficulties had been treated at home, as indicated, for the past two weeks. The acute phase and heart failure began the night before hospitalization while the arteriosclerosis has been a gradual change for some time."

In earlier bulletins Dr. Graham said the bronchial problem was complicated by a mild weakening of the heart caused by hardening of the arteries. Dreves said at the evening briefing the reference to heart failure was synonymous with the weakening described earlier.

The rest of Dreves' statement read:

"Mr. Truman is receiving occasional administrations of carbon dioxide to stimulate the increased blood flow interspersed with the inhalation therapy treatments noted at the afternoon conference. He is also using a flotation mattress to prevent impeding the circulation."

Dreves said the carbon dioxide is being administered by mask.

The previous report had noted the former chief executive was "slightly improved and more comfortable."

Further Shuffle Revealed In Cabinet

CAMP DAVID, Md. (AP)--President Nixon is keeping Earl Butz as Agriculture secretary but is replacing Commerce Secretary Peter G. Peterson with South Carolina textile manufacturer Frederick B. Dent, the White House said Wednesday.

As part of President Nixon's second-term Cabinet shuffle, Peterson will take on a temporary special mission to Europe and Asia, then return to private life.

There were signs that the former Bell and Howell Co. president was eased out after losing a bid to become an international economic policymaker and after falling from favor among Nixon's closest advisers.

Sources said Peterson turned down an ambassador's job in Europe before losing his bid to handle international economic policy under Treasury Secretary George P. Schultz who is being given wide economic powers in Nixon's second term.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler told newsmen at the Camp David presidential retreat that Peterson's departure results not from a rift with Shultz, but from a "joint decision" between Nixon and the man who succeeded Maurice H. Stans as commerce secretary in February.

While Butz is being retained in the second-term Cabinet, White House officials said Nixon has ordered a broad shakeup of the Agriculture Department to make it "even more responsive to farmers' needs based upon today's problems."

Undersecretary of Agriculture Phil Campbell conferred with Nixon at the rainy and fog-shrouded mountain-top retreat Wednesday, but it was not clear how this was related to the coming shakeup.

Wednesday's announcements at a news conference reduced to two--attorney general and Transportation secretary--the Cabinet posts yet to be covered by Nixon in his shuffle.

Death Seen As Answer

CORONADO, Calif (AP)--A resolution recommending the death penalty for certain crimes was approved 32-1 today by the National Association of Attorneys General.

Then top level officers of the states said the U.S. Supreme Court "did not specifically preclude the rights of Congress and the state legislatures to provide by appropriate legislation for the death penalty as the sanction for the commission of certain crimes."

Germans Nominate Woman

BONN, Germany (AP)--Chancellor Willy Brandt's Social Democratic party today nominated Annemarie Renger, 53, to be the first woman president of the Bundestag, the lower house of the West German parliament.

Her election is expected when the new Bundestag, elected a fortnight ago, meets next Wednesday for the first time.

The president of the Bundestag ranks second in West Germany's official hierarchy, behind the federal presidency now held by Gustav Heinemeann.

Mrs. Renger was secretary to Kurt Schumacher, the first post-war leader of the Social Democrats, until his death in 1952. She entered the Bundestag the next year.

WASHINGTON--LEAVING FOR PARIS--Henry Kissinger, President Nixon's chief foreign affairs adviser, waves before leaving Andrews Air Force Base for Paris and resumption of the Vietnam peace talks. (AP Wirephoto)

No Progress Reported

PARIS (AP) - Henry A. Kissinger and North Vietnam's Le Duc Tho had an apparently cordial 5-1/2-hour meeting Wednesday on the third day of their current round of secret peace talks, but they gave no hint of their progress.

President Nixon's security adviser and the Hanoi Politburo member shook hands warmly at the start and end of their meeting in the suburban Neuily villa. They and their advisers lunched together and were later seen walking in the garden in animated and seemingly friendly conversation.

The White House anounced Kissinger and Tho would meet again Thursday afternoon. Their scheduled Tuesday meeting was cancelled without explanation.

The U.S. delegation spokesman David Lamberston said the 169th weekly session of the semipublic peace talks would take place Thursday as usual.

French press reports speculated that Kissinger and Tho may be working on the final wording of a cease-fire agreement. Saigon newspapers predicted a cease-fire agreement by Christmas. But in Hanoi, the official newspaper Nhan Dan said there can be no peace until the Saigon government agrees to release its political prisoners.

The outline of the draft agreement published in Hanoi on Oct. 26 provided for the release within 60 days of military prisoners held by both sides, but left the release of other prisoners to subsequent direct talks between Saigon and the Viet Cong.

The draft contained no provisions for the withdrawal of North Vietnamese troops from South Vietnam. The Saigon government has insisted that a withdrawal provision must be written into the agreement. Hanoi has said repeatedly it will reject such a demand.

Kissinger and Tho resumed their secret negotiations on these issues Monday, following a nine-day recess. The North Vietnamese claimed the Tuesday meeting was cancelled at Kissinger's request. The White House said Nixon sent detailed new instructions to his security adviser during the Tuesday pause.

The Viet Cong marked the pause with sharp rocket attacks on military installations in South Vietnam, particularly Saigon's Tan Son Nhut airport.

U.S. sources in Saigon speculated that the Viet Cong may have wished to demonstrate its presence within rocket range of the South Vietnamese capital in an attempt to pressure the United States into signing the draft agreement despite Saigon's objections.

Irish Vote On Referendum

DUBLIN (AP) - The main issue is the Roman Catholic Church's "special position" in Ireland, but voters in the nation's referendum today have a chance to strengthen the government's hand in working for a peaceful end to Irish partition.

The 1-3/4 million voters will be out to approve or reject two changes in their 1937 constitution.

One would lower the voting age from 21 to 18 and bring Ireland into line with suffrage requirements of most of Europe.

The other, more controversial change would remove two subsections of Article 44 giving the Catholic Church its special position in Irish affairs.

Opinion polls do not operate here, but the most predominant measureable guess is that the electorate will give Prime Minister Jack Lynch a "yes" vote on both issues, probably by a close margin.

Lynch, in his election eve appeal Wednesday for a big turnout, contended that the church's special position had been used as a propaganda weapon by those opposed to unification of Ireland and Northern Ireland.

Lynch stressed that his aim is to make clear that the Church has held and will hold no special position apart from the fact that it represents the religion of more than 90 per cent of the southern republic's population and has, like any other organization, the right to air its views.

The Church has officially stayed neutral, although William Cardinal Conway, primate of all Ireland, said three years ago he would "shed not a tear if the special position clause vanished."

Voters in Cork, however, have been urged by a diocesan magazine not to vote "yes." Priests in some big suburban Dublin churches have urged an outright "no," while in remote County Donegal, on the turbulent border with the north, most priests were reported in favor of change.

The approach to the referendum has been overshadowed by sectarian violence in Dublin and Northern Ireland and by Lynch's tough new law against the Irish Republican Army, the Catholic-based guerrilla fighters trying to blast the British out of the north.

Boggs Seat Declared Vacant

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democratic leaders have decided that the House itself should declare vacant the seat of Rep. Hale Boggs, D-La., opening the way for a special election.

This action would resolve a legal dilemma caused by the disappearance of Boggs, the Democratic leader, on an airplane flight in Alaska Oct. 16.

Both Boggs' family and Gov. Edwin Edwards of Louisiana favor the idea that the House should assume the responsibility, it is understood.

Mrs. Boggs is expected to be a candidate to succeed her husband. She has said she is considering running, but is not expected to anounce a decision until the legal issue of the vacancy is settled.

Louisiana law has no provision for an early finding of death in such cases. House parliamentary specialists have been unable to find a parallel situation in the published precedents of that body.

However, Democratic sources said a resolution will be offered on the opening day of the new Congress, Jan. 3, or soon thereafter, declaring the seat vacant.

Rep. Nick Begich, D-Alaska, and two other men disappeared with Boggs when their planes failed to arrive in Juneau on a flight from Anchorage.

Court proceedings have begun in Alaska, under that state's presumption-of-death law, but they affect only the three Alaska citizens.

Both Boggs and Begich were re-elected after their disappearance.

The proposed House resolution, sources said, would include a finding that Begich's seat also is vacant.

They said that what is regarded as a delicate situation for the missing men's colleagues would be eased if the Alaska proceedings have resulted by then in a finding that Begich is dead, but that the House will proceed in any case.

In addition to providing for the election of a new member from Louisiana, Democrats must replace Boggs as their floor leader. The two announced candidates for the post are the present Democratic whip, Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill of Massachusetts, now considered the frontrunner, and Rep. Sam Gibbons of Florida.

The Democratic caucus, meeting Jan. 2, may designate an acting leader who would formally take over the post when the matter of Boggs' membership is settled.

Dentists Seen To Unionize

NEW YORK (AP) - New York's state-aided medical program has ruled that a person over 21 may not be fitted with false teeth unless he has nine upper or nine lower teeth missing, or at least three out in front.

"What happens to the guy who has two front teeth missing?" asked Dr. Vincent Delman Wednesday. "You can't find a job without two front teeth."

That's one of the vexations in the field of dentistry which has led Delman to form the nation's first dentist's union. He claims a membership of 2,900 thus far in his International Federation of Health Professionals, out of an estimated 90,000 practicing American dentists.

"Our membership is steadily growing," added Delman, one of New York City's 8,000 dentists.

Church Representatives Meet

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) - Representatives of most of the nation's major Protestant and Orthodox churches Wednesday set up a new cooperative organization, more broadly representative and with greater stress on basic beliefs.

At the same time, they reinforced their role for speaking out on public questions with moral implications.

The drastic overhauling of the country's biggest ecumenical enterprise was approved at the ninth-and last-triennial assembly of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., the body being revised.

The National Council's name was retained, but the plan abolishes the large, once-in-three years assembly of 800 voting delagates, vesting its top decision-making authority in a 350-member governing board meeting twice annually.

This means more clear-cut centralized authority but is intended to put it on a more consistently representative basis.

"It is not centralization in a small elitist group," said the Rev. Thomas J. Liggett, a Christian Church Disciples official of Indianapolis, who headed a commission that drew up the plan.

So. Viets Attack

SAIGON (AP) - Government forces, supported by armor, helicopter gunships and planes, launched an attack yesterday on enemy rocket-launching sites only seven miles north of downtown Saigon.

while under their care.

"There is only the thinnest line of distinction," he continued, "between the malfeasance of a Lt. Cally at My Lai, and the misfeasance of a public official who sits by and defends himself while people under his care are dying."

In addition, Brown said it is becoming increasingly clear that Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt and his staff are either "unwilling or unable" to initiate action to deal with the present crisis in mental health.

It is this judgement of the Department's role in providing services for children, he said, that leaves us to conclude that "its top administrators, are inept, callous, and at times even corrupt."

Brown said there is no alternative for change in the present system unless citizens, parents and professional groups assume that nothing will be done unless they all join together for collective action.

"This collective action," he continued, "is as American as democracy itself, and is as necessary as we make it, if we care about the lives of those who cannot themselves."

Record Legislation Filed

BOSTON (AP) - A record 7,597 bills were filed by Wednesday's deadline for the 1973 Massachusetts legislature.

More than half the total flooded into the clerk's offices of the House and Senate during the day Wednesday to beat the 5 p.m. deadline.

There were 6,685 measures submitted in the house and 1,512 in the Senate. Last year a total of 6,293 bills were filed by the deadline for "timely-filed" measures.

A special vote of each chamber is required to consider any measure filed after the deadline. The governor, however may submit legislation at any time.

The mass of legislation submitted on the last day included a package filed by House Speaker David M. Bartley, D—Holyoke. Among his proposals was a bill to increase the salaries of all judges by 10 per cent.

Other measures filed Wednesday would:

—Keep the legislature in session 10 days after it completes its business, giving it an opportunity to override any "pocket veto" by the governor.

—increase state income tax exemption for the elderly.

—repeal 1971 legislation extending the no-fault auto insurance concept to property damage coverage.

—abolish the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority's advisory board.

—ban the sale of professionaly-prepared term papers to college students.

—repeal existing law granting "fiscal autonomy" to the University of Massachusetts, state colleges and community colleges.

—Speed up salary increases granted automatically to state employes.

—permit insurance companies to charge an extra 1.5 per cent per month for each month an insurance premium payment is late.

'The State With A Conscience'

BOSTON (AP) - A bill "to honor the historic significance of the 1972 Presidential election" in Massachusetts has been filed for the 1973 session of the state legislature.

It provides that license plates issued by the state, which now carry only the state name and registration number, would bear the legend, "The State With A Conscience."

Massachusetts was the only state carried by Democratic candidate Sen. George McGovern in last month's election.

Collective Education Kibbutz Viewed

By ANNE COLLINGTON

Mr. Moshe Gileadi, executive director of education of Oranim, a teachers training school in the kibbutz movement in Israel, spoke before a small audience in the Student Union last night. Sponsored by the Gordon Memorial Society, Mr. Gileadi discussed the kibbutz movement, its values, and collective education implicit in the movement.

Tracing the history of the Jews in Israel, Mr. Gileadi referred to the kibbutz movement as a "unique collectivist social struggle for freedom." He explained the need for a "new society" which could be achieved by "social change."

The kibbutz movement has been in existence for at least four generations and is "voluntary, based on community consumption and sharing," Gileadi said. In differentiating a kibbutz from an American-type commune, he pointed out the six basic ideas that guide the kibbutz.

Through the values of "equality, voluntarism, solidarity, direct democracy, work and the realization of values from a national point of view," Gileadi stressed the idea of "the development of the individual through his society and vice versa." In stressing the basic underlying idea of voluntarism, Gileadi explained that an individual remains on a kibbutz only if he desires to do so.

In describing collective education in a kibbutz, Gileadi said, "The community is responsible for the education of the child." He explained that a kibbutz is "highly child-oriented" in that each child is required to obtain a full high-school education but that "the child is never removed from his parents" to obtain this education.

Specially trained teachers and "nurses" are the keys to this education but the child remains with his parents after his school day. Through this child-oriented society, Mr. Gileadi claimed that "in the kibbutz, parents spend more time with their children than in other societies."

By carrying the basic values of the kibbutz into education, he said, the community looks out for child development and teaches the child to be self-sufficient. There are no formal exams or grades, but rather, projects are evaluated, he explained.

However, Gileadi stress that "learning is not voluntary–rather it is a social responsibility." Based on conscience and peer group psychology, this education is designed to make the individual aware of the needs of the community as well as his own.

Kibbutz education is considered to be "highly effective" in that "a kibbutz-raised child's perception and IQ, if it's important, are higher." It has been applying open-classroom and interdisciplinary curricula for thirty years and 70 per cent of those raised in a kibbutz remain there because of "the desire for peer commitment," Gileadi said.

A question and answer period followed his talk.

More Staff Hired In Belchertown

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

BELCHERTOWN–The recent deaths of four residents at the Belchertown State School has prompted the hiring of 21 new workers at the school's G building.

A spokesman for Gov. Francis W. Sargent reported yesterday that the necessary transfer of funds had been accomplished, and that the new employees would report for duty Monday.

Dr. Benjamin Ricci, president of the Belchertown Friends Association, credited the transfer of funds to the power of parents, but added that the new workers will cause a "little dent but not a heck of a lot" in changing conditions at the troubled school.

Larry Speigal, unit director of G building, described his unit as "crisis oriented", and stated: "We have considered this building in a state of emergency for several months now. It is nothing new."

Meanwhile, five separate investigations are underway into four unrelated deaths at the institution since Nov. 19.

State Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt said he has asked one of his department's attorneys as well as the school trustees to investigate the deaths.

Hampshire County Dist. Atty. John Callahan and Belchertown's new superintendent William E. Jones are also conducting their own investigations, while the state police is trying to determine why a search for a resident, who was found dead of exposure less than 1,000 yards from the school grounds, was called off after 12 hours on Nov. 19.

The latest death was that of Rena Aubin, 23, who died late Saturday night of what Hampshire County Medical Examiner Thomas Corriden called "spontaneous rupture of the stomach from massive food ingestion."

In another related matter, Ricci said the proceedings of his court suit in federal court charging the Dept. of Mental Health with negligence in care of residents at the school "will be slow until a permanent judge is appointed to the case." He said a crowded court docket is responsible for the slow proceedings of the suit that was filed last February.

"This shameful posture of the state can no longer stand up," he said, "and they cannot continue to deny the allegations of negligent and inadequate care of the residents."

The Ricci-Greenblatt relationship appeared to show renewed signs of strain this week when Greenblatt told the Associated Press: "What we need is more help down there. We'd be very happy if Mr. Ricci would come and volunteer time as an attendant, working at these very thin staff ratios on weekends to help us and watch the kids."

However, Belchertown superintendent Jones said of Ricci: "I admire his tremendous interest in trying to improve conditions. I think that with his help we will be able to reach our objectives."

Toy Drive For Belchertown

The UMass Dept. of Public Safety (former Security Dept.) is collecting toys for residents of the Belchertown State School through its Toys For Belchertown program.

The department has placed three collection boxes for the toys around campus-in the Security Building, by the Campus Center Store, and in the lobby of the Whitmore Administration building.

Both new and used toys are needed. The best toys are those which cannot be broken easily, such as coloring books, crayons, or blocks.

Anyone who cannot deliver toys to any of the collection points may give toys to any guards in the security booths at the parking lots.

The collection boxes will be emptied every night.

Sex Definitions Cited

"In the beginning Goddess created the earth," began Ms. Katherine Weinstein in a lecture entitled "The meaning of masculine and feminine in different societies," in Stockbridge Hall, yesterday.

The lecture was sponsored by Everywomen's Center, a women's organization for non-professional women working on campus.

Ms. Weinstein cited definitions from a 1949 edition of Claire Barrn's American College Dictionary. - feminine, 1. pertaining to women. 2. weak, gentle, delicate; weak; 1. not strong, 2. liable to break. 3. politically deficient.; masculine, 1. pertaining to man, 2. manly, 3. strong, brave.

"I've been running away from these definitions all my life. Other women have gone mad, married and born children according to these definitions," she said.

She stressed that these terms do not describe inborn traits characteristic of men and women but are arbitrary terms society uses to define sex roles.

"At birth female children are branded with the mark of feminity. Cast marks have nothing to do with inheritability," she said.

Ms. Weinstein noted studies by Margaret Mead in 1935 on three primitive societies in New Zealand.

In the Tchambuli, a mountain tribe, there were no differences in sex temperament. Both sexes were loving and gentle. The Munkugumor a river people, both sexes were aggressive and violent. In the third tribe, the Arapesh, the women were the laborers, and tradeswomen, while the men were artists.

Ms. Weinstein said that archeologists are now discovering evidence of ancient matriarchal (women ruled) civilizations in Egypt, Crete and Samoa.

Ms. Weinstein believes that matriarchies at one time ruled all of the western world, but were overthrown by patriarchal bands of aggressive men.

Ms. Weinstein concluded by saying, "that by setting up the myths of masculinity and femininity, man has denied himself of human feeling and women will themselves into failure."

Debate Team Sweeps Columbia Tournament

By ED PEPYNE

UMass debate teams made a sweep of the Columbia Debate Tournament last weekend. The Ivy League school witnessed UMass walk away with both the semifinalist and tournament champion trophies.

The debate union attributes much of their success to the strength of the Kennedy health care proposal which they are defending under this year's resolution. Senator Kennedy's proposal has consistently showed its merit under the attack of some of the nation's finest debate teams.

The tournament champions were David McCaffery and John Day. In the preliminary rounds Dave and John had a 7-1 record with wins over Bowdoin, Drew, Florida, Bowling Green, Rhode Island, Maine and Pace while losing only to Tufts.

In the three elimination rounds Dave and John beat Scranton in the quarterfinals. Then in the semifinals they were scheduled to meet another UMass team of Roger Legendre and C.C. Hooper. Roger and C.C. accepted the semifinalist cup and allowed Dave and John to advance to the finals.

In the final round UMass was matched against two worthy opponents from Tufts; Nan Bernstein and Barry Shouer. UMass had lost to this team debating on the negative side of the topic in the preliminary rounds. So when Dave and John won the coin toss in the final round they chose to go affirmative and to rely on Senator Kennedy's health care proposal. The result was an excellent debate and a 3-2 decision for UMass.

Senator Kennedy's proposal that UMass has found so much success with is a plan where the federal government pays virtually all medical bills. The plan is financed through a combination of labor and business taxes in addition to general revenues. The proposal would replace private health insurance and most of the existing government health programs.

The semifinalist team and the second part of the UMass one-two punch was the team of Roger Legendre and C.C. Hooper. In the preliminary rounds Roger and C.C. had a 6-2 record with wins over Penn. Morehouse, C.C.N.Y., Columbia, Rhode Island, and Scranton while losing to U.S.M.-M.A. and South Carolina.

Roger and C.C. qualified for the elimination rounds and in the quarterfinals they met Cornell and won a 2-1 decision. In the semifinal round Roger and C.C. were scheduled to go against the other UMass team of Dave McCaffery and John Day. Roger and C.C. accepted the semifinalist trophy and gave Dave and John the opportunity to go on and win the tournament.

Contraception Clinic On Till Dec. 13

The education session of the Health Services Contraception Clinic will continue on regular schedule through December 13. We would like to advise students, however, that there are only a limited number of appointments available during the intersession period. If you had contemplated obtaining a clinic appointment before second semester, you may wish to call the appointment desk (5-0057) to inquire about appointment availability. Of course all students, male and female are invited to participate in the educational sessions, whether contemplating a clinic appointment or not. Included in these discussions is the appropriate use of non-prescription methods.

Residence Head Positions Open

Information on applications for Head of Residence and Resident Director positions for the 1973-74 academic year is now available at the Information Desk inside the ramp entrance, second floor of Whitmore Administration Building. Head of Residence positions are full-time, twelve-month professional appointments. Resident Director positions are part-time service assistantships, September through May, available to students enrolled in the Graduate School.

14 Year Old Guru To Speak

On Monday, December 11th at 7:30 p.m., Mahatma Rajeswar, a realized disciple of the 14-year-old Guru Maharaj Ji, will speak at the Student Union Ballroom. Admission is free.

Guru Maharaj Ji is revealing the Knowledge of God to all those who sincerely desire to know this profound inner Truth. Like all the great masters of the past, such as Jesus Christ, Buddha, and Mohammed, Guru Maharaj Ji is here for the explicit purpose of revealing to human beings the direct experience of God, the life force within, which brings complete peace of mind and satisfaction to the soul.

Guru Maharaj Ji says:

"Receive what I can give you before you try to understand who I am. If what I give you satisfies your soul, if I can show you Light, then you can know me, what I am. My theory is that you should never believe something until you have proof."

Central Area Council

Central Area News Discussed

By SHELLEY BAKST

Several things were discussed at the Central Area Council meeting on Monday night. Main topics of discussion were: donation to the Concert Committee, donation to the Westfield Detention Center, Central Residential Planning Conference, a proposed area judiciary board, the new inter-dorm committee, and Van Meter South's proposal for Winter Carnival.

Lee Trousdale from the Concert Committee visited with the Council on Monday night to ask them for approximately $500.00 for the Spring Concert. Ten thousand dollars has been appropriated from the Student Senate but because the price of groups has gone up 20% or 30% since last year, more financial aid is needed. Trousdale said that tentative plans have been made for two concerts in February. If the contract is drawn this week, the James Montgomery Blues Band will be playing on February 3rd. On February 10th there is a possibility that Leo Kottke will play.

A conference called the Central Residential Planning Conference (CRAP) has been proposed to take place during intersession. At the conference, which is opened to all of Central Area, topics such as area government, counselling, team building, and area academics will be discussed. The dates for the workshops will be January 18th, 19th, and 20th.

Larry Marcus, Assistant Area Director, proposed that an area judiciary board be set up as opposed to the system where every area except for Southwest is under the East Area Judiciary Board. The benefits of the Central Area having its own board are (1) less bureaucracy and (2) the board would be run by area people who have a concern for what happens within their area.

The benefit concert for the Northfield Halfway Home will be this Thursday night from 9 p.m. to 12 p.m. in the Bluewall Room at Worcester Dining Commons. The Amalgamated Grease Band is playing.

On December 11th the Rosellini film, Socrates, will be shown free to all Central Area in Franklin Dining Commons at 8 p.m.

An inter-dorm committee has been set up within the area to keep each dorm posted on the various activities within the dorms.

A proposal for Winter Carnival was brought up by Derry Cronon from Van Meter South. The proposal called for a Council sponsored, semi-formal dance on Saturday, February 24th.

Off The Oath

State Representative-elect James Collins of the Second Hampshire District and State Senator-elect John Olver of Amherst have shown their interest in creating a legislature responsible to the will of their constituencies. They have filed a bill to repeal the required signing of the Massachusetts loyalty oath for faculty, staff, and students employed by the Commonwealth.

The bill is certainly senseless. "It just doesn't serve a purpose anymore," said Collins in an interview Tuesday. It is little more than a carry-over from the days of the McCarthy purges of supposed communist subversives.

Three groups have recently begun court action concerning the bill's extermination. A group from UMass-Amherst, a group from UMass-Boston and a group from Berkshire Community College have been granted preliminary court injunctions which have stopped the college and the University from dismissing anyone who refuses to sign the oath.

Collins claimed that legislative action is quicker than court action. This can only be true, though, if the entire legislature acts similarly–trying to achieve what their constituents want in a quick, efficient manner.

The entire legislature should back this bill when it comes to the floor for a vote. At best, the loyalty oath is an ineffective collection of words. It would stop no one from being disloyal to the government. While it may not directly interfere with academic freedom, it may make the patriotic professor or student doubt his or her own feelings.

To insure this bill's repeal, it wouldn't hurt if everyone interested dropped a line to his or her representative or senator expressing his or her feelings on the subject.

Olver and Collins have started their part for responsible legislation from Beacon Hill, but their efforts could prove fruitless if not backed up with loud support from their constituencies. As we have said in the past, let your legislator know how you feel about the issues. Ask him or her to repeal the loyalty oath law.

Who's Loyal?

By MARK VOGLER

It seems to be a moot question–at least at this university–that faculty and staff members and students who are employed by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts should be asked to swear allegiance to the state by signing the employees' loyalty oath.

Take a minute and evaluate the oath and ask yourself what it means to you:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States of America and the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and that I will oppose the overthrow of the government of the United States of America or of this Commonwealth by force, violence or by any illegal or unconstitutional method."

Perhaps you assess the task of signing the oath a very painless procedure, which it undoubtedly is. You, as a citizen of the United States and the Commonwealth, may find it a personal duty to ascribe to the oath. After all, you are an American and also a resident of Massachusetts. It's academic. Or is it?

There are those who oppose the oath strictly on morals. They ask if in the true sense, one really demonstrates his loyalty to his country and to his commonwealth by signing a little piece of paper. These people argue that signing the oath is against one's conscience and that it challenges the nature of an individual. In short, the oath opposition feels that to swear loyalty in such a manner is very mistrusting. This side has a legitimate point also.

Though the moral issue of the oath will not hold water in the courts, there is some legal grounds to have the piece of 1949 legislation removed from the books.

It's apparent that the loyalty oath is a very shoddy piece of legislation indeed. If it weren't, Attorneys William A. Norris of Cummington (representing the UMass–Amherst and Berkshire Community College, Pittsfield groups) and Stephen Oleskey of Boston (legal counsel for UMass-Boston) wouldn't be dissecting it so skillfully as they have.

A major point to brought out to prove the oath's faulty construction, is the foreign national angle. Students and faculty members should not have their own national citizenship enjeopardized because of the oath.

Those who defend the oath say, "send the foreigners back. Nobody's asking them to live over here. We have enough trouble employing our own people." Stop and think a moment. Virtually the same thing could be said of American business and industry abroad.

Another major weakness lies in the administering of punitive action for those who decline to sign the oath. Oath opponents, prior to the recent court injunctions now protecting them, were informed they would be dismissed from their jobs if they didn't sign the oath.

It's interesting to note that the only penalty for non-compliance of the state law is punishment of a fine not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

One more fine point to be expressed is that teachers are being administered the wrong oath. Their oath is worded slightly different:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of (insert the name of the position) according to the best of my ability.

As long as the principle of loyalty is being pursued, the subjects of the Commonwealth should be entitled to question the loyalty of the people now in office. Too often promises are made by the politicians who prove to be connivers.

If the idea of a loyalty oath were to be foolproof, then it should be a mutual and unwritten contract between the state and the people.

People's loyalty to the Commonwealth is certainly in order. But why should they be loyal when the state and its bureaucrats remain unfaithful to its constituency?

Putting the issue in more relevant fashion to the students and faculty members–and even staff members of this university, why should you swear loyalty to the Commonwealth when there are Belchertowns which are completely ignored as if they don't even exist; when the expense for a "quality" education goes up and the quality goes down; when you go to school for four years to get a degree for a job that doesn't even exist because jobs are tough to find? And these are but a few of the questions to be asked.

The loyalty oath is a fine and dandy thing if you feel obligated to sign it. But it seems irrelevent to examine the loyalty of the citizens employed by the Commonwealth without first examining the loyalty of those who employ them.

Who is loyal? Ask the Governor.

Color It Purple

By TIM NEY

Purple should be the color of the prison reform movement. As Dostoyevski has told us we may know the level of civilization in a society by entering its prisons.

In Massachusetts we find the average age of those in prisons is 24, at Concord it is 19. The average sentence is three years. Seven out of ten return to prison. Most now are on drug or drug-related offenses. Many are poor and black.

Newspaper headlines and TV "Bonanza" fantasies continue to distort the public picture of prisons and give a false image of the people in them. Even in Massachusetts, considered by some to be the most progressive state in corrections, such primitive and inhuman institutions like the Charles Street Jail in Boston still are allowed to exist. At Charles St. Jail a man is kept in his cell for 20 hours of the day and it is not unusual for a person to wait three months for trial. There have been several suicides there.

At Concord the "wing" is the oldest section of the prison. There is no hot water and the heat is poor. The recent runaways, called riot or escape by the media, were rational predictable acts. At least two of the men have been repeatedly imprisoned and cruelly treated since their teens.

One ex-convict put the situation astutely, "the only difference between you and me is that I got caught."

Once incarcerated a person may find himself caught in a revolving door of doing time and being out on the street. With no money or home and unable to find a job, he may find himself back in prison. He ends up doing bits of time doing a life sentence on the installment plan.

In spite of conditions an amazing amount of talent fights against being boxed up. There is a new breed of prison artists springing up behind the walls. While vocational training programs run by the state view inmates as blue collar workers and a source of cheap labor. Inmates write poetry and books, paint, learn music, and make theatre.

Through such groups like the Self Development Group, 3 Joy Street in Boston outsiders go into the prisons and visit with inmates. Now Self Development Group is looking for student groups interested in sponsoring prison artists' visits to campus and making visits to prisoners.

David Powell, who is being released from the Concord Reformatory this week, will be reading his work jazz poetry with two musicians on furlough from the Deer Island House of Correction. He is scheduled to make appearances at Project Ten and the New Africa House.

The Tip Of The Iceberg

By ANDREW BARRAFORD

It has been said that thousands of dollars are ripped off annually from the University and to do this one needs a real horde of people. I am an advocate of the Student Government system and I have spent a great deal of time working with that proportion of people who were caught; one might butter the cliche: "the tip of the iceberg."

My concerns are with these people, not the University Store and my reason for writing this piece is in the experiences that I have had. Over the last semester I have been involved in some capacity with 40 plus cases and when the question arose, as to why they attempted the theft, there were two inevitable answers. The first half of the responses were tending towards the ludicrous in that they just missed the price for the object by only a few cents (or no money at all). Yet the most common answer lacks even this validity.

"I just picked it up, for no reason, and walked out."

Some people have been busted for as little as an 18¢ item. It seems to lack some reality.

A casual whim can cost in this case, in time, money, and a little bit of bother. There are students who work in the University Store under the title of security and their job is to just sift through the crowd looking for shoplifters. They are not trolls or gorgons underneath the display cases but a somewhat strangely normal looking crowd of loiterers. Oddly enough they are pretty nice people when you get a chance to know them. In fact I know of some cases where the guard and his apprehended shoplifter parted as friends. If you want you can dislike them and categorize them and maybe, if you work hard enough, you can get those blue meanys that you are looking for. Outrightly, it is not the lady attendents that will bust you (although they do not remain blind) but this security guard. If you do get busted, the best thing to do is to cooperate and help the security guard. He is not there to screw you (if you are caught you have actually screwed yourself). Most of them are real students just trying to get enough money (sound familiar?) to get through this place. Usually, all they do is take you off and ask you directly for the item that was stolen, plain and simple. Under the Merchant's Law, they do have the right to search you.

I will not philosophize or moralize whether shoplifting is good or bad, in or out. It is irrelevant when the shoplifter comes and asks for assistance. I am basically just letting people know the truth and some of its consequences, because there were some mighty fine people who got hassled for their thoughtlessness.

If you have been busted in the past or recently go to Room 921 of the Campus Center, the Student Attorney General's office, (not too many beasties there either) and you can find out the downright details; how it will affect you now and in the future?

Before too long the Christmas rush on the University store will begin and maybe this note will make the holidays a little bit better for some people. Look after your whims and try not to get caught for your mistakes. The suggestions is to take care, and remember that the best things in life really are free, but you won't find them in the University Store.

Andrew Barraford is an MDC Editorial Columnist.

"There is no substitute for a strong, well-developed body."

"Oh, boy, looks like we're given another vote of confidence."

Letters To The Editor

Down With Social Activists

To The Editor:
In reply to Mark Cerasuolo:

I took my first degree in Economics, and I am only too well aware of the types of "social changes" the Young Socialist Alliance and similar groups are working for. It is precisely because I am aware of the types of policies they support and the actual consequences of those policies that I oppose them–if I called their schemes idiotic I must have been in a charitable mood. To speak of socialists as "fighting for the rights of oppressed groups" is worse than ridiculous, considering that socialism as a political and economic system entails the denial of the fundamental human rights of private property and free, voluntary trade, which in practice means the denial of any means for seeking one's own values and happiness. It would be far more accurate to say they are fighting for the right to oppress groups and individuals. But the moral and intellectual status of their ideas is not the issue. The issue is that my money is being used to promote their poisonous nonsense, along with the projects of various other "social activist" groups. I am perfectly willing to concede anyone's right to advocate any ideas he wishes–on his own time and with his own money–however obscene or irrational they may seem to me. But I also insist upon my own right not to support those groups or individuals whose ideas strike me as a false or evil. Since when has attendance at a university required one to lend support to a particular set of economic and political policies?

It happens that I don't think much of "social activists".

I find that "social activists" are more often motivated by a desire to escape the valuelessness of their own lives than by anything else. One competent scientist, inventor, or engineer–one Newton, one Edison, one Bessemer–does more actual good for mankind than all the "social activists" who ever lived. (Not that I think "helping mankind" is a laudable motive, since it entails viewing one's fellow men as objects requiring help and places one in the position of the world's nursemaid, wallowing in the endless troubles of a billion strangers.) Good intentions are no substitute for competence, and messing around with other people's lives is no substitute for developing a worthwhile life of one's own. Most of all I despise those "activists" who think their alleged good intentions constitute a license to raid my bank account. But then, I should expect that attitude from socialists: that's what socialism is all about.

As for universities being centers of political and social change: they are not the only such centers, nor is that their primary function. A university is an institution for the dissemination, accumulation, and preservation of knowledge. Any other functions are secondary and incidental to these. The incidentals should never be permitted to impede the genuine purpose of the institution.

As to the charge that I am selfish: I am. Proudly and intelligently so. Narrow-minded? I know what I believe and why, and I'm willing to state my beliefs without equivocating. If that's narrow-mindedness, I'd like to see more of it.

One last suggestion to Mr. Cerasuolo: learn something useful and true for a change–take an engineering course.

Misrepresentation

To The Editor:

On Monday, December 4, the Collegian published a letter from Jeff Ling, a student on Orchard Hill. Mr. Long is the editor of the Sage, the Hill's newspaper. Mr. Long signed his letter with this identification. As students on the Hill we object to his using his position to exemplify the attitudes and beliefs of the Orchard Hill Area as a whole. Mr. Long is entitled to his opinion but the use of his position as a spokesman for the Hill is unwarranted. It is the position of Orchard Hill through its Area Government that Mr. Long's views are his own and not necessarily those of the entire Orchard Hill community.

Paul Chandler

To The Editor:

During the fact-finding meeting on Wednesday, December 6, 1972, I asked Dean Dwight Allen why Paul Chandler was not admitted to a graduate program in the School of Education this fall when he had been accepted by the Admissions Committee of the Non-Center and had a doctoral committee. Dean Allen stated in response that "Paul Chandler had not completed his B.A." I was unable to be recognized by the chair later in the meeting, and I would like to state publicly that when I was admitted as a graduate degree candidate in fall 1972 I had completed two years of undergraduate work; possession of a bachelors degree was not a determining factor in my case. I submit that Paul Chandler, who I have spoken with, is better qualified through experience and ability to influence socially important changes through education than I and a great number of graduate students presently at the School are.

Paul will now have his degree, unlike several other graduate students in the School of Education. He has received the highest praise from all those whom he has worked with here. I submit that he will be a strong asset to the university, to people at the School of Education and elsewhere whom he works with, that it is imperative that he be admitted, that it would be a grievious mistake for questionable political motives if he is not admitted as a doctoral candidate in the School of Education this spring.

Collegian Be Fair

To The Editor:

The University Police and the Union to which the Worcester Dining Commons Workers belong have both conducted investigations into the food theft accusations. Both investigations have found the workers involved to be innocent. It is now the Collegian's duty to print this information, and print it in the same manner as the first story (i.e. on the first page in 3/8 inch type).

The Collegian has hurt some of the people most friendly and helpful to the students of UMass. These women, in the past three years that I personally have known them and for many years before, have done everything they could to make the Dining Commons and the services there better for the students eating there. They are the ones who got covers for the meal tickets so that they will not fall apart so fast, they are the ones who work extra hard on steak nights, and they are the ones who put on the foreign foods nights.

The Collegian owes these people a public apology.

Editorial Points

It looks like Mother Nature is trying to please everyone at once. Snow, slush, water, and mud freaks are all happy with the present weather situation. But what about dry, sunny freaks? You can't please all the people all the time.

When the Campus Center Garage becomes obsolete we have a suggestion for its use: Why not sell it to a company that makes waffle irons? They can cut it up and use it to make a few million. The people in charge ought to start taking bids now. Do we hear $1.59?

Portuguese Americans

To The Editor:

We, the Portuguese American student body of the University of Massachusetts wish to express our opinions concerning the blatant anti-Portuguese racism that has been circulating throughout this campus. For instance, do you know how many "portuguese" it takes to paint a house? Why, of course, everyone does! This is precisely our point. We as a race have been slandered, ridiculed, hasseled, and generally taken for granted, without anyone ever realizing that it wasn't the American way of life. Now, do you know the average income of a Portuguese-American family? Of course not; no one does. Someone has to rectify this situation. We as a minority group demand the certain unalienable rights afforded every other minority group in this country, but that have been conspicuously denied us. It is for this reason that we are presenting this list of demands to the University and to the student body:

1. We demand the abolition of the "portugee joke".
2. We demand the introduction of Portuguese cuisine to the dining commons, and of Portuguese music and song on the campus radio.
3. We demand the recognition of the P.L.F. as the spokesman for the plight of the Portuguese-American.
4. We demand that everyone who reads this take it seriously.

In conclusion, we of the P.L.F. would like to say that we will not forget the above demands, although most of you may. It is for this reason that we also ask for the co-operation of all concerned students to actively participate in Portuguese-American week. Remember, brothers and sisters, "Que e realidade?"

Responsible Press

To The Editor:

Over the course of the past year I have heard a great deal of dissent concerning our "free and responsible press", and today I saw why there is dissent. In your editorial appearing on page 10 Wednesday, December 6, 1972 I noted a few discrepancies that could be considered irresponsible.

To start, the area government presidents did not decide to hold an off-campus conference; they decided to take the matter up with their respective area governments.

You make a number of references to a group of people you know little or nothing about: area and dorm governments.

You also said a figure of 300 students attending this type of conference is unrealistic, you neglected to mention the area government presidents were working on a means to keep attendance down to 300.

We realize that there are time restrictions placed on this type of conference especially at this time of year, but we also made provisions to find a site before the planning of this conference advanced too far.

Perhaps you are unaware of the implications you have made, but you have implied (1) the area governments are incapable of planning a conference and (2) that area governments are irresponsible in the spending of student money.

In closing, I would suggest this paper get all of the facts surrounding an issue before you take a stand on that issue. Far too long has the administration and the Collegian neglected the residential areas which incidentally, play a large role in an individuals education.

Drug Laws

To The Editor:

We are presently building student support for the reform of the state's drug laws. We would like you to print the following letter to aid in our efforts.

Dear Student:

Many people think that the drug laws in Massachusetts are liberal; yet people can still be sent to jail for up to two years for simply growing marijuana. Legislation has been filed in the state legislature to decriminalize marijuana but in order for it to pass we need your help. You are the people most affected by harsh drug laws and it is from you the push for change must come.

The Committee for a Sane Drug Policy would like volunteers now and next semester to organize local campaigns, work in the Boston office, distribute petitions, and lobby at the State House. Drug reform is an issue which concerns you directly and one that you can have some influence upon. Maybe it's time for you to get reinvolved in the political scene.

Commies In The U.N.

To The Editor:

This is addressed to Mrs. Robert McGarrah who has to be very naive about the true character of the United Nations. Let it be known, Mrs. McGarrah, that the U.N. is nothing more than a framework for what may very well be a one-world totalitarian state. To back up this last statement, let me quote from a small handout put out by AMERICAN OPINION which totally agrees with my stand on this matter:

WE MEAN GET US OUT OF THE UNITED NATIONS BECAUSE The UN was conceived by Communists...

Joseph Stalin's book MARXISM AND THE NATIONAL QUESTION (published in 1942) outlined the following principle: Divide the world into regional groups as a transitional stage to total world government...Later, the regional groups can be brought all the way into a single world dictatorship.

That the U.N. was to be the means to achieve that goal was made clear in the April, 1945 issue of the Communist journal POLITICAL AFFAIRS in the following words: "Great popular support and enthusiasm for the United Nations policies should be built up, well organized and fully articulate. The UN was created by Communists...

In 1950 the State Department issued a volume called POSTWAR FOREIGN POLICY PREPARATION, 1939-45. It described the policies and events leading up to the creation of the United Nations. This and similar government documents list 17 men who had key roles in shaping these policies. The list was headed by convicted perjurer, Alger Hiss, and sixteen of them--including Hiss--have been identified in sworn testimony as secret Communist agents!

The UN is controlled by the Communists...

Perhaps the most important position in the entire U.N. structure is that of Under-Secretary-General for Political and Security Council Affairs. This position supervises all military functions, all disarmament activites, and all U.N. uses of atomic energy. Since 1945, ten men have held that job, and every one of them has been a Communist!

The UN is an integral part of Communist plans...

On April 6, 1970 U.N. Secretary-General U Thant said Lenin's "ideals of peace and peaceful coexistence among states,"--MEANING NO RESISTANCE TO COMMUNISM--"have won widespread international acceptance and they are in line with the aims of the U.N. Charter." They certainly are. Which is why responsible Americans want to GET US OUT!

Mrs. McGarrah, this is the position that I and others like myself have taken on the U.N. and be assured that we will fight your drive to put that symbol of Communism, the U.N. flag, on the town common.

I presented this, Mrs. McGarrah, so that you can think a little before you go on with your plans to help impose a Communist government on the United States.

GET US OUT!

Bob Estelle

Comment

To The Editor:

Recent letters to the editor have called into question the overall quality of Collegian journalism. Some of them have made constructive criticisms with which I fully agree.

It does seem fair however, to balance these negative evaluations with praise for high-quality reporting. An example of this was Don Glickstein's article "UMass Transportation-The Big Gamble." To my layman's eye, this piece seemed to be well-written, carefully researched, and informative. Mr. Glickstein managed to remain fairly objective, and when his own analysis and opinions did creep in they were fairly easy to distinguish from the facts which he was presenting.

I am personally grateful to Mr. Glickstein for his report on the transportation crisis at UMass, and I feel he deserves a commendation for a job well done.

Who Pays?

To The Editor:

In his rebuttal (12/4) to Steven Lord's letter, it seems to me that Mark Cerasuolo is missing the main point that Lord is trying to make, namely that students are paying large fees for many things that they, as a whole, don't necessarily benefit from. The point here does not concern a value judgement re the various "schemes", but rather it concerns the question of who is to pay for the activities of these organizations. I have no opinion one way or the other about most of them; they do not concern me personally. But I do agree with Lord completely in this one respect: Let those who wish to engage in an activity pay for it THEMSELVES.

There's never been a better Loggins & Messina moment than right now. Their second ear-opening album is on the radio, in the stores, and making everyone who hears it extremely happy.

Realize that the first L&M album was the product of just a short time together... and it became the sleeper hit of 1972.

The new album is the product of well over a year together... there's no way of estimating its eventual impact on America.

Just relax and enjoy all the new songs and singing that're coming your way from Kenny Loggins and Jim Messina.

They'll make you positively light up.

Pentecostal Revival Growing In Brazil

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP)-A Pentecostal revival is taking hold in the world's largest Roman Catholic country.

Signs of the Protestant denomination's growth range from storefront-type meeting halls reminiscent of some U.S. urban areas to huge million-dollar "Brazil for Christ" temple going up in Sao Paulo's Pompeia district.

By completion in 1975, it will accommodate 25,000 Pentecostal faithful in what the founder claims will be "the world's largest evangelical church."

"Amen, Jesus!" and "Hallelujah!" punctuate services of "Brazil for Christ," the largest of three main Pentecostal groups here. Its leader is 43-year-old Manuel de Mello.

"Now let's sing that song that's taking hold of Brazil," Mello exhorts from his pulpit.

"We're looking for revival, the power of the Father, the power of the Son, the power of the Holy Ghost!"

The lively Pentecostal services of Brazil for Christ, the Assemblies of God and the Brazil Christian Congregation are filled with hand-clapping and use of musical instruments considered unconventional by more conservative Protestant groups.

Its growth has been so spectacular that Brazil's National Conference of Bishops has undertaken a study to assess the movement's prospects in this vast Catholic nation.

A rigid moral code is common to all.

Today an estimated 2 million Brazilian Pentecostals make up 60 per cent of the country's Protestant population.

Big Ditch Moves On

BEGINNING December 6, 1972 construction on the "Bid Ditch" (Steam Line Construction) will start in the vicinity of Governor's Drive near Parking Area #6 Control Booth. Construction will involve four phases.

An estimated time of fourteen weeks for construction is anticipated. Each phase will cause rerouting of traffic over a different pattern. Signs will be erected directing motorists to Area 6 and also denoting through traffic. During this time of inconvenience, it is requested that all proceed with caution. Your cooperation is appreciated.

Academic Freedom Explored

Professor Karier will explore the History of Academic Freedom and its affect on twentieth century American Education. The talk will examine the roots of the crisis in the German University and its impact on the American University. The liberal professionalization of the American teachers throughout academia and the problems of communist teachers of the 30's and 40's will be discussed as well as the problems faced by liberal and radical faculty in the crisis of the past decade.

Doctor Karier is currently professor of History of Education at the University of Illinois. He is the author of various articles and books concerning the History of American Education. His talk is based on a soon to be published book on radical movements and academic freedom in America. He is also the author of The Roots of the American Educational Crisis; a radical analysis of the American Progressive Period and the affect of public schooling on the economical and social structure of this country.

Professor Karier is considered to be one of the leading radical social historians in America and is at the forefront of research in examining the history of social welfare and education movements in the 20th century.

Law Conference Filled

"Open up in the Name of the Law," the January law conference sponsored by the Legal Studies Faculty reached its enrollment limit in the first day and one half of a four day registration period this week. The remaining two and one half days of registration have been cancelled. Because of the unexpectedly large turnout, several students had to be turned away Tuesday afternoon. It is possible, however, according to the conference organizers, that additional courses may be added or that some people may drop courses thereby creating new openings. Interested students or staff should inquire in room 308SBA on January 4 about openings.

The members of the faculty participating in the law conference were pleased by the enthusiastic response. The coordinator of the Law Group, Professor John Bonsignore, indicated that "this degree of genuine interest in the subject matter argues well for the quality of the program." He observed that if the conference courses turned out to be as stimulating and useful as the registration and faculty participation indicate, "there is a good chance that we may do more of this sort of modular, interdisciplinary work with students interested in the law."

Graduate Study Opportunities

Graduate study fellowship money for women whose academic careers have been interrupted is now available from the Danforth Foundation, the UMass Graduate School announced today.

According to Special Assistant Robert L. Chew, the Danforth Fellowships are "designed to assist all able women whose academic careers have been interrupted to undertake master's or doctoral programs in preparation for teaching in secondary schools or colleges."

Completed applications and all supporting materials for the 1973-74 fellowships must be received by the Danforth Foundation by Jan. 12, 1973, Chew continued. Applications are available from: Graduate Fellowships for Women, 222 South Central Ave., St. Louis, Mo., 63105.

He added that the Graduate School occasionally receives other announcements of graduate fellowship support for students from minority groups from national foundations. These announcements are posted at the Graduate School office, on the second floor of the Graduate Research Center.

Fellowships are available beginning academic year 1973-74 to women pursuing graduate studies at UMass or at other institutions.

Applications may be obtained from the Secretary to the Committee on Graduate Scholarships, Wellesley College, Wellesley, MA 02180, and must be filed before February 20, 1973.

Roy M. Cohn to Speak

Roy M. Cohn, formerly chief counsel for the U.S. Senate Permanent Investigation Subcommittee, will speak at Hampshire College tonight. His lecture, which is sponsored by the Symposium on Post-War America, will deal with his part in the Joseph McCarthy Era, and will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the main lecture hall of the Academic Building.

Cohn was born in New York City, and earned his B.A. and Ll.B. at Columbia University. After his admission to the New York Bar, he was associated with the district attorney's office in New York City (1947-50), and was assistant U.S. attorney (1948-50). After serving as assistant to U.S. attorney Saypol and U.S. Attorney General McGranery, he assumed the position for which he is well known- as Senator Joseph McCarthy's chief counsel during the latter's controversial investigations in the 1950's.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Libra, although often indecisive, seems to know how to get to point of destination. Natives of this zodiacal sign are sensitive but strong, artistic but practical. Libra is in love with love, drawn to Aries and Aquarius and often deals with Cancer in matters of career. Where money is concerned, Libra persons seem able to ring bell of profit with Scorpio.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Versatile approach gains objective. Friendly manner now wins allies. All is not milk and honey. Contractual dispute is indicated. Marriage or business partner expresses ideas which conflict with your own. Find alternative procedure.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Check proposition which seems a "sure thing," in actuality, there are flaws. Applies to personal as well as business relationships. One who is supposed to perform basic services may have other ideas.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You get welcome chance for change, excitement of discovery. Virgo could be involved. Accent is on romance, creativity, relationship which is growing in intensity. Nothing now is apt to happen halfway.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Lie low. Time is on your side. You can afford to play waiting game. Permit mate, partner, close associate to take lead. You require cooperation of family members. There has been minor upheaval at home base.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Encounter truth without running from it. See people, situations as they actually exist. You are stronger than might be apparent. Know it and act accordingly. One who should know better acts in contrary manner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Money finds its way to you. Financial decisions are featured. Press for favorable arrangement. Strive to enhance security. Consult one who has benefit of experience. Accept responsibility. Invest in your own ability.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Best to round out project, assignment-don't try new tricks, gimmicks. Stick to what is familiar. Family members, home environment--these are also spotlighted. Aries could play significant role.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Hold off on short journey. You may get better advantage by waiting for call, message. You have something of value to offer. Know it and refuse to be intimidated. What occurs behind scenes works to your advantage.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): What appears to be a sure profit could dwindle to a break even point or less. Be aware of hidden costs. One who purportedly does favor may ask for much in return. You get nothing for nothing.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Doors open and you gain additional chances for advancement. Horizons are enlarged. Your view now enables you to see areas previously blocked. Sagittarian could be in picture. One in authority makes room for you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You sidestep obstacles. You are able to make contacts which develop into meaningful relationships. See and be seen. The future is now. Maintain that attitude and you will achieve goal.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Not wise to listen to friends where investments are concerned. Key now is to be analytical. Arrive at your own conclusions. Basic change is in offing. Opposite sex is involved. Be cautious in signing any legal document.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, a spiritual person, concerned with rights of underdog. Much travel indicated this month along with relief of emotional pressure. Your views will be sought and you will have greater opportunity for self-expression.

UMass-UCal Boardwalk Bowl Toss-Up

By MARTY KELLEY

Chapter II–Suppose Jimmy the Greek really did start off his career as resident analyzer for the local Mafia. And if the scope of his efforts had to thrive on the likes of trying to beat the spread on such Boardwalk matchups as UMass - UCal, by now Old Jimmy would have seen one too many violin cases and from somewhere six feet under would be filling out game cards to himself and cursing the day he ever decided to predict spreads on such wide open fiascos as the one to be witnesses this weekend.

I don't even think Jimmy, in all his astuteness and seemingly poetic insight into the game of grids could pick this one. But I'm going to try. No, not because I want his job, it's too dangerous. I went on record, saying that UMass would beat Harvard by a 17-10 count and the spread was only 2 points off in a 28-19 stuff of the Johns. And verbally in the "emotion Bowl" I figured 35 points and defense would hold off the Eagle. We got 28 but added the extra seven on defense.

For openers, you know that the Aggies did win the Western Conference with a 5-0 mark and finished a 6-1-2 effort. To say they are explosive is to say that Bears use toilets. They can deal from any iota of the field with All-American Bob Biggs, the nation's number one small college passer and recently selected to that first team All-America, pitching to Tay Thompson, the leading pass catcher in the nation. How quaint.

Accept for a 6'5", 230 lb. right tackle, the offensive line is short and stubby. The left tackle waddles at 5'11 and 5'10 and 205 and 206 lbs., respectively...But somehow they give Biggs the protection he needs, although he's only six feet tall...

Now here's a factor. With that height situation existing you know that MacAleney and Bradshaw, both 6'2 and lurchy, will penetrate with arms in air trying to distort Biggs' view. It may work, it may not; but don't bet that Biggs hasn't alluded some tall onrushing linemen this fall...Well, it will be a factor anyway...

UMass will go almost a man to man in the secondary...Can they do it? Coach Larry Pasquale seems to think so, but the burden of the backfield success, defensively at any rate, rests strictly with Bobby Parrot and John Healy. It will be Parrot, our proven one-on-one defender throughout the year, operating on Thompson and that will be quite a battle. You can bet Healy will keep a close eye on that pair, for John is invaluable as a dogcatcher napping runaway receivers. Paul Hansen should, and will be able to, handle the tight end with no problem. He's a solid kid with strong football sense.

But MacPherson didn't have Metallo and Berra ready for double duty against New Hampshire for laughs...And after the Holy Cross game Earl Brown needed relief. If Brown can forget about deep responsibility and let Healy worry about that, it could be a brighter day in front of the ABC cameras for the defensive backs who'll be in view quite often.

Now what do you do with Richie Cronin? If Mac goes 4-34 Richie won't start, but he should. Dennis Kiernan was hot for awhile but Cronin has come on like the quiet gangbuster he is, and had a field day with Gary Marangi of Boston College.

Tim Edwards could get up for anything physical and don't worry about Crazy Winslow. Doug had three mediocre games to realize that he looks tough and should start playing the role. If Winslow and his horde can get to Biggs, or at least pressure him out of the picket, it could be a turned-around game. But a major problem for the Minutemen could be internal speed.

Jimmy Allen is the Aggie's only running threat, and I'm not at all worried about catching him. It's catching Biggs that will be a task, and if the Minutemen can do that, again, they'll be in great shape.

You talk line speed–Paul St. Onge has enough, Tommy Price very little, so the pressure up the gap will be on this tandem that stuck it to the Esposito-Bennet myth. That was two weeks ago. But as Doug Winslow said, "This is a game that's so easy to get up for, its gravy for our season.".

Of course the jock ethic, the team that puts most points on the board will win it. It's simple logic but it's true. Although emotion will win games for you such as BC, heart has to be backed by talent and "Mac" had an over-abundance of it. It has shown in Stadiums all over New England and the like. For openers, the Boardwalk offense from Amherst way just happens to be the best in the school's history. Explosive isn't the word.

You've heard their life stories, marveled at their magic, and asked if they're real, well, I'll tell yah, Pennington, Schubert and Metallo will be in living color at the Boardwalk this Saturday. And the likes of Cummings and Berra, who at times, have stolen the show, (BC and UNH) are threats in every sense of the word.

And it's too bad UMass fans haven't had a chance to see Dick run, but he's blocked enough for more than his worth which at times saved Jim Queeny from humiliation.

But it was a humiliation that "Queenso" couldn't help. He weighs but a 180 pounds but it's all desire and he showed even more than that against BC. The line has finally jelled with Brooks and Mullen at All-Conference and Cunningham at all-effort.

But No. 44 needs that line and will he get it! We didn't have the sweep all year until Queeny came out of his shell magnificently against the Eagles.

The kicking game–well, weak at times, I guess ambiguous may or may not be the word. You may see punter Andy Dutkanicz with his meager, but acceptable, 35 yard average kick long field goals while Mark Palau will stay short where he has reasonable success.

Can the defense get to Biggs? Will Piel, Paul, and Steve save a performance such as BC? Will Healy and Parrot, two youngsters in the melting pot, rise to the occasion? Will the offensive line realize how good Coach Bob Lord has made them? I like UMass 35-28, but the 1972 Boardwalk Bowl, and not Jimmy the Greek, will have all the answers.

It's 8 Years For Charlie, Too

By MARTY KELLEY

Behind the Curtain–It was late in the afternoon and within his own makeshift office, Steve Schubert had the man in a lazy headlock. And the atmosphere around the man is always loose and comfortable. And the job gets done. And now, in his eleventh year and having seen much in transition of a football image and the shifting of personnel, he readies himself once again as he did eight years ago, to outfit a team for a Bowl appearance.

His name is Charlie Safron, the popular equipment man who's work isn't reflected on anyone's scoreboard. Without his diligence and dedication, and countless work hours on his own time, you'd see the Minutemen playing in shorts. From the time the players open their lockers to the time they throw the mud-filled jersies and jocks back to the owner, Charlie is there to make sure the process of keeping the UMass football team on the field is completed. And in his own humble way, the only way Charlie would want it, the job gets done.

Safron has weathered the reign of the Vic Fusia era and has ushered in the start of the MacPherson Renaissance. Reflecting on his duties, Charlie admitted, "Vic never bothered me and Mac doesn't either. They've got their thing to do and I've got mine."

And, yes, Safron has witnessed change. UMass football has come a long way since the Tangerine Bowl of '64. "I remember when all the sports came out of the Cage. It was hectic, believe me," said Charlie. "Now I don't think the Cage itself would provide half the room just needed for football."

For Charlie Safron the triumphs and hours of personal satisfaction that eminated from his work has far exceeded the pressure and the responsibility of packing 45 game bags for the road games, fixing the tattered and battered helmets, or making sure Paul Metallo's thigh pads are packed. And although Charlie was raised on shoulders in ecstasy following the BC verdict (and don't bet he didn't enjoy the plucking of the Eagle), Safron has an indelible love for the '64 Tangerine Team.

"They were a rowdy bunch, those guys were," noted Safron in describing the University's very first Bowl team. "They seemed a bit more mature than this group because of course they were older. And, of course, they played Vic's style of ball which was, by all means, tougher than it is today; for Vic looked for this type of player and he found them and they won.

And Charlie was right. And that first Tangerine Team was tough and they did win. As a matter of fact that Bowl envoy did finish second in the nation in total defense that year allowing but nine points all season. The Redmen went undefeated in nine regular season games and battled Harvard to a scoreless tie in one of the most dramatic football stories in modern UMass football. Safron remembers it well.

"Toward the end of the game the Crimson had a first and goal inside the five and they just couldn't push it in. I remember our middle linebacker, Dickie Warren, making some tremendous tackles that kept them out." And it is scripts like the saga of Cambridge in '64 and a similar showing at the Ivy Tower some 8 years later that produce Bowl teams.

And Charlie went on to list the memorable UMass greats that, as a kid I enjoyed watching stomp to their glory behind the School of Business. The list that flew to Orlando included the likes of Milt Morin (Browns), Bob Meers (Vikings), Bob Burke, Joe Doyle, Ken Palm (New Bedford Sweepers); as well as the likes of Dick Bourdelais and quarterback Jerry Whelchel, who both played for the Holyoke Bombers of the Atlantic Coast League (now defunct, thank God).

And, of course, you might expect Eddie Hadjusak to jump in with the comment, "Charlie, you forget Dick Cummings."

With the Harvard game of eight years past providing the thrill, I had to know who Charlie tabbed as his favorite player over the years. "They've all been something else but if I had to go with the one over the years who has done the most to liven up my day around here, it would have to be 'Trap' (Mark Tripuka)."

Now, Mark is a helluva character and it just did dawn on me why Safron gave the nod to the colorful backup quarterback. "He doesn't know enough to keep quiet," muttered Charlie happily about his work. "He's a good kid. He wouldn't hurt a fly and he'll do anything you ask him to do. I swear, for some reason or other, he's always in the office here before and after practice. I think he owns this place."

But the reason is obvious. It's Charlie Safron. As Mark Palau said while dressing for the final workout of the year in Amherst (for not only Mark but for fourteen other seniors), you could easily write a book about Charlie Safron.

So the man goes about his hectic day not asking for thanks while constantly trying to help someone with their gear or lend an ear to a semester problem. And when he returns from Atlantic City in the same motion, Charlie Safron returns to the Cage to help the hockey team, who I'm sure by now, miss his unassuming candor and warm smile.

And I think it's easy to figure out his intrinsic joy from the job. "I love working with the kids," he says.

And believe me, Charlie Safron, when all has been said and done and in those hush little campus cubicles that hide the footballers 'til spring's advent, you can bet that those "kids" are saying, as well, that they loved working with you.

Well, here's two out of three. All we need now is Schubert to creep in to the eye of the lens. If he did that as much as he slid into opponents endzones this fall, he'd be fashion material. And talk about being caught by the eye of the camera, Pennington (Piel), Metalio (Paul)--shown here--and Schubert (Steve), just around the corner, will be followed closely by the ABC camera crew this weekend in Atlantic City. It will be a show...(MDC Photo by Ken Sulin)

WMUA Goes To Sacramento

For the very first NIT basketball appearance, the WMUA microphones were heard New England-wide via a hookup with WHDH in Boston. Since March of 1970, there hasn't been any regionalization until this weekend. Sports Director Kent Best has announced that the station will pipe the Boardwalk Bowl back to UCal listeners via a West Coast hookup with commercial station KJAY, serving the Sacramento Valley.

Best added that Jack Powell, owner of the station, asked him for his services and will pay the student station's cost. The only difference in programming will be the fact that 26 commercial spots for the Sacramento station will be aired to pay for the cost.

It was reported that Governor Ronald Reagan, an alumnus of UCal, wanted the game aired back to Sacramento on TV. But the hookup was unavailable. So radio and WMUA was the next best thing.

The Boardwalk Bowl will be telecasted live throughout the East Coast over ABC on the "Game of the Week" in the Eastern half of the country.

Just what is an automatic transmission Adjustment?

...and what should it cost?

A regular adjustment consists of tightening the bands, adjusting linkage, replacing the filter and refilling with fluid. Doing this once a year (or about every 10,000 miles) is like an insurance policy against major trouble, and it keeps your transmission shifting smoothly and efficiently. Our price for the complete job is $00.00.

Minutemen Take Two

Hoopsters Rout St. Anselm's By 80-59 Score

MANCHESTER, New Hampshire–Using two point barrages - 12 straight points in the first half and a 16-6 edge in the second half, the Minutemen rolled to their first win of the season, 80-59, over St. Anselm's here last night.

After falling behind St. A's 13-10, the cagers sank six straight baskets to take the lead, 22-13. The insertion of Junior Rick Pitino and Capt. Tom McLaughlin sparked the outburst, with Pitina setting up the big plays underneath.

Peter Trow opened "the back door" three times while the front of the court (erratic last year but not this year) controlled the board aggressively.

The changing defenses, with a 1-3-1 revolving trap (which is similar to half court press: one guard up front and one in the back) effectively stopped the penetration of the Hawks.

6'4 frosh John McMenamin and Springfield's Kevin Kennedy were the major Hawk threats in the first stanza.

In the second half, it was more of Rick Pitino. The 6-1 guard sacrificed the scoring role to pass to McLaughlin and Al Skinner. Charlie Peters and John Murphy were again the big men in the rebounding department. Top scorer was Peter Trow with 20 points. Al Skinner, after a slow start, added 18 pts.; McLaughlin 14; and Murphy and Peters had 10 points apiece.

The bigger, taller Minutemen outrebounded, outplayed the Hawks enroute to their first victory. They lost their opening game of the season 63-62 last Saturday night in West Virginia, on a last second 25-foot shot. Next game for UMass will be this Saturday night, the home opener against URI at the Cage starting at 7:30.

WMUA

SATURDAY, DEC. 9: Sports doubleheader on WMUA. In the afternoon at 1:45 p.m. it's Kent Best and Don Gorski covering the Boardwalk Bowl. That evening, from Curry Hicks Cage, Ken Horseman and Mike Goldman cover UMass–URI basketball. That's at 7:50 p.m.

Whalers Win

BOSTON (AP) — John Danby assisted on the tying goal midway through the third period and scored the game winner with 3:24 remaining in sparking the New England Whalers to a 4-3 World Hockey Association victory over the New York Raiders Wednesday night.

The Whalers entered the final period trailing 3-1.

Kevin Ahearn scored the tying goal after Danby's shot caromed off Raider goalie Peter Donnelly.

Danby lifted the Whalers to victory on a neat individual effort. He skated across in front of Donnelly, faked the goalie out of position and lifted the puck into an open net.

Leaman, Basketball Varsity M Feature

By BILL BALLOU

The Varsity M Club kicked off its series of Winter Sports Luncheons yesterday afternoon at the Newman Center with basketball and head coach Jack Leaman holding center stage.

Leaman gave a rundown, man-by-man, of his club and he seemed pretty happy with what he's got. In fact, he said that "if the guys get their chins up I think we're gonna have a real good season coming."

Ray Wilson and Fan Gaudette, Leaman's assistants, also lent some of their wisdom to the crowd and much of it centered around St. Anselm's, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, upcoming opponents for the Minutemen.

Rhode Island and Connecticut are Yankee Conference foes, and traditionally tough ones for UMass. Leaman looked at them kind of whimsically, saying "It seems that every time Massachusetts gets a little better you look around and see that the other powers in the conference have gotten a little better, too."

Leaman was able to look back on his Morgantown experience, which was none too pleasant, and find a couple of things to laugh about. He mentioned the "independent" cab operators which were the only form of transportation (besides the foot) in that lovely city. It seems one time part of the hoop entourage filed into a cab, filling it up and told the cabbie where they wanted to go. No dice. The cabbie said he was going the other way. It eventually took them 2 1/2 hours to go the 2 1/2 miles they were going.

Jack also mentioned the great sleeping accommodations they had the first night. Leaman, not a particularly big man, snuggled into the sack for some shut eye and found his feet sticking out about four inches into Morgantown air. You can imagine the fun some of the big boys like Murphy and Austin had.

Also on hand for the festivities was captain Tom McLaughlin. McLaughlin's the only captain that ever kicked Jack Leaman out of a room so that he could talk to the players by himself. Tom showed he could match lines with anyone as he showered Leaman with some good-natured ribbing. The Minutemen, he said, were going to go up to Manchester and beat St. A's "in spite of Leaman." He also said that this year's team wasn't going to be in any more one-point games. "When we win," he said, "we're gonna win by 20. And when we lose we're gonna lose by 20."

Bill Lambert, the luncheon MC, made a special point of mixing the tickets up real good so that people who got there late wouldn't have a better chance of winning the door prize than the early-birds. And Jack Leaman did the picking in a special effort to give the Collegian reporter a better chance. And indeed, the winner was a guy who got there real early.

I had trouble finding a parking space and got there late.

Pep Rally Today

There will be a send-off rally in honor of the football team today from 11:55 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. on the street side of the campus pond.

In order that the maximum number of students who want to attend can make it, classes scheduled during the time of the rally have been cancelled.

The rally is being organized by Kris Fletcher and Marie Romanus, co-captains of the football cheerleaders and will feature important athletic department officials and members of the football coaching staff and players as speakers.

The team will leave for Atlantic City immediately following the rally.

Skaters Hang On; Beat Williams, 5-3

By ROY LYONS

Two quick third period goals by Pat Keenan and Bill Harris and brilliant goal tending by Peter Erickson powered the Minutemen to a 5-3 victory over Williams College in Williamstown last night.

It was an evenly played game from the start in spacious Chapman rink, although Williams showed a wide edge in shooting, Erickson blocked 37 shots for UMass while Bill Jacobs handled 18 for Williams.

The first period was wide open. It lacked the coordination that will come later in the season.

The Minutemen's best scoring bid was thwarted when Williams goalie Jacobs stopped Kevin Connors on a break-away. Connors tried to fake Jacobs down and stuff it in back of him, but Jacobs held his ground. Erickson was tested early in the period on a Nat Robbins drive. He gloved the 30-footer after being set up on a neat drop pass from Bill Wyer.

Jon Carter rang one off the post from near the left side boards later for another close call for UMass.

Wyer went off late in the period for charging Don Lowe but the Minutemen could not put a serious threat on Jacobs.

UMass came out skating at the start in period II and it paid off. With only 17 seconds gone, center Don Riley drove a long shot past Jacobs to open the scoring, Connors and Chico Shea had an assist on the play. Erickson made a great save on Carter and Williams' captain Dave Polk hit the post as the Ephmen showed they weren't about to fold.

Pat Keenan made it 2-0 nine minutes into the period. The elusive center iceman was all alone in front for a net centering pass from freshman Bill Harris. Keenan snapped a 20-footer along the ice beating Jacobs easily. After that, it was all Williams as they came back to tie it up. With Shilalie out for tripping, Robbins scored from a scramble in front after Erickson made a great stop on a Tom Devaux break-away.

At 17:23, Robbins scored a powerplay goal, bouncing a long floater past a bewildered Erickson. That was "The Thief's" only slip-up all night. This sent the teams to the dressing room 2-2 after two.

The third period was only a minute old when Keenan rammed home a rebound after Jacobs blocked Bob Shilalie's drive from the left point.

Harris drove a wrist-shot by Jacobs four minutes later with Doug Morrell off for high sticking, to make it 4-2. Keenan got the assist.

The Ephmen began to press midway through the period, but Erickson as superb. Robbins finally broke through a 17:44 and it was a one-goal margin and anxious moments for UMass once again.

Coach Bill McCormick lifted Jacobs with one minute to go, but Keenan hit the empty net and the pressure was off. That goal was Keenan's third of the night, giving him a hat trick.

Gymnasts Open Season

By JOHN CALABRIA

On Saturday evening the University of Massachusetts Gymnasts defeated the University of New Hampshire by the wide margin of 150.3 to 134.05. As expected UNH did not provide the challenge to UMass that is expected from the rest of the Eastern league teams. But in any event the meet provided an opportunity for the gymnasts to see how well prepared they are for a difficult season.

Floor ex. as well as the other five events was dominated by the Minutemen. Jack Berner and Jay Thomsen led the scoring for UMass by tying for first with the score of 8.55. Both men should be capable competitors in upcoming meets.

On Side Horse Rich Seikunas took the honors for UMass with an 8.40. Pommel Horse has not been a dependable event for UMass and improvement should be forthcoming.

Still Rings provided the highlight of the meet in the form of Co-capt. Jay Aronstein. He captured first place and high score for the meet with a 9.3. If Jay can keep his performance at this consistently high level he should be a top contender for a spot at the Nationals. Also prominent here was Dan Spier with a good back-up score of 8.30.

Another highlight of the meet was seen on Long Horse Vaulting in the performance of junior Jay Thomsen. His 9.05 is indicative of the level he will achieve throughout the season.

Parallel Bars was dominated by the All-around men: Steve Scuderi and Gene Whalen. Gene led the scoring with an 8.65 while Steve was not far behind with an 8.6. P-bars is another event that should strengthen in the course of the season.

The final event, High Bar was again led by sophomore Gene Whalen with an 8.6. Another good performance was turned in by senior Dan Spier who followed Gene with an 8.15. Also performing well in his first varsity outing was Earl Roy with an 7.2.

In the important All-around, Gene Whalen led the Minutemen with an overall score of 49.80. He was followed by senior Steve Scuderi with a somewhat low for Steve of 45.10. In future meets both men should be breaking 50 points with ease and consequently lead the team in many of its important victories to come.

If UMass is to compete with the likes of Penn State, Temple and in the forthcoming Southern Conn. meet on Sat. afternoon, the team score will have to improve considerably. But this improvement is definitely within the capabilities of the team. By starting the season above the 150 mark they are setting a precedent for things to come. With this in mind we can predict that UMass is going to be a contender for top honors in the Eastern league.

'College Night' Announced

Friday night is "College Night" at the Springfield Civic Center when the Springfield Kings take on the Hershey Bears in an American Hockey League game.

The Kings management has announced that all area college students can purchase tickets for the game at half-price upon presentation of the college ID.

For all information concerning College Night, phone the Kings Ticket Office at (413) 781-6890 or (413) 781-6891. Phone reservations will be accepted.

The Kings play their games at the brand new Civic Center in downtown Springfield and their ticket office is located on the Dwight Street side of the Civic Center. Office hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

C.C. Governors Fund Study Of Services

By STEVE FINE

The Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors passed by voice vote last night, a motion to pay Arthur D. Little, Inc. a consulting engineering firm from Cambridge, $35,000 to study the management of the services of the Campus Center.

The study which would be conducted next year from January to early March, would concentrate on investigating how the food services, hotel accommodations, and bookstore divisions of the Campus Center could increase the Campus Center's profit and surplus.

The ultimate purpose of the study according to Richard Nelson chairperson of Board, was to make more money to pay off the Campus Center's debt. "With more efficiency, we would yield more money to help pay off the Campus Centers debt service," he said.

Thomas Campion, Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services said that the initial search for a firm consulting in management began with the University's School of Business Administration, Westinghouse Corporaton, Arthur B. Little, Inc. and the Charles T. Main Company of Boston. "The choice then went down to Westinghouse and Little," he said.

Campion explained that SBA was dropped because they wanted to take too much time in studying the problem and Main removed itself after examining the problem.

"When it came down to Little and Westinghouse, we examined their different approaches to the problem, and the depth of perception they were viewing it in," he continued.

The Vice Chancellor said that it was then decided to eliminate Westinghouse, and go with Arthur Little. "We found that Westinghouse did not examine the problem in depth enough, while Little will give us a perspective on the management," he added.

Campion explained that the Little proposal would be carried out in 3 phases. He said the first phase in January would examine, "how good a job was being done with food services, hotel accommodations, and bookstore and how they could be operated more effectively to increase profits."

The second phase in February would look at figures and long term proposals for the immediate future and the third would give us an idea what we could expect in the next 10 years," he added.

Terry Grinnan, manager of the Campus Center, said that the $35,000 would be paid in $8,750 installments, at the end of December, January, February, with the fourth and final invoice upon the submission of their final report. "I look forward to working with them, since they're the best management team in the country," he said.

When a motion was made before the Governors, that the recommendations of Little be definitely taken into consideration after they were submitted, Campion agreed that they would be closely scrutinized.

Larry Ladd Student Government President, said they would be applied as much as they were applicable. "I wouldn't want to commit ourselves to their study if they said to double the Campus Center Fee."

In other business, the board moved, after first temporarily tabling, that the Building Committee of the Board should have complete responsibility in determining policies governing the sale of all goods in the Complex.

All of these decisions would then be subject to review by the Board only on approval of the Executive Committee of the Board. "We did this so that the committee can recommend to us what action to take," said Frank Cotter, vice-chairperson.

In Other Business the Board:

—tabled a motion by Bud Wilks, manager of the Student Union, to allocate $4,800 for renovating the Student Union lobby counter into a candy shop until next week.

—Reviewed with Terry Grinnan the financial activities of the Campus Center Complex for the month of October, and the first quarter of 1972 and 1973. This was tabled to the financial committee for further study.

Tenure Case Now In Hands Of Dean

By STEVE SECHE

The fate of Assistant Professor of English Jack Shadaoin's tenure application, recommended by the English Department's personnel committee, rejected at the next level by the personnel committee of the Faculty of Humanities and Fine Arts, presently rests with the Dean of the College of Arts and Science, Jeremiah Allen.

Allen said yesterday that he wanted to "study all the available evidence" in the case, before reaching his decision. Allen's recommendation, regardless of its nature, will go from his office to the Office of the Provost, ultimately arriving before the Board of Trustees for final approval. The right of appeal is extended at each level.

Allen said that the evidence before him includes the basic file submitted by Shadaoin with his application for tenure, the recommendations of both personnel committees, and the many "supporting" letters that have arrived at his office from both students and faculty.

Dean Allen's office also reported that petitions bearing nearly 250 signatures have been submitted on behalf of Shadaoin, and that these would be considered as further supporting evidence.

Virginia Tilley, one of Shadoin's students responsible for the circulation of the petition, said yesterday that "at least Bonnie and Clyde, one of the films in the "Gangsters in Film and Literature" course which, Ms. Tilley said, was created largely through the efforts of Shadaoin.

"He set up the whole course last summer," she added, "expecting to enroll maybe two sections." Interest in the course mushroomed at the beginning of the semester, however, forcing the English Department to enlarge the course to 11 sections, three of which are taught by Shadaoin.

Ms. Tilley feels that Shadaoin's interest and involvement in film may be one of the underlying causes for the rejection of his tenure application.

"Jack's a film person," she said, "and some people in English would like to see film courses taken out of the department."

Shadaoin himself, reached at his home, said that he was "confused and disappointed about the decision".

"I think my case will receive a fair hearing," he said, although he added that he was uncertain about the current standards that are being used to grant tenure.

Jules Chametzky, Chairman of the English Department's personnel committee said that "teaching, service and publications" are the criteria generally used in tenure decisions.

Chametzky, who with English department head Joseph Frank, appeared before the personnel committee of the Faculty of Humanities and Fine Arts to appeal their decision, said that more evidence is being compiled that they hope "will strengthen Shadaoin's case".

Chametzky said that his experience had led him to believe that "the (Faculty of Humanities and Fine Arts) committee is very responsive and very responsible," and that he was "confident" that Shadaoin's case would receive their close consideration.

"We have had nine cases of tenure come before our committee this term", Chametzky said, and in seven instances it has been granted."

Among those seven cases, according to Chametzky, were three where the Faculty committee reversed a negative recommendation and granted tenure after presentation of new supporting evidence by the English Department.

"There was even one case," he added, "where our committee voted against tenure, and the Faculty committee voted to grant it."

Both Chametzky and Dean Allen said that while there is a lot of talk about the number of tenured faculty at present, there have been no quotas set as yet.

"If you look ahead, and assume that all faculty receive their tenure," Allen said, "you're talking in terms of an 85-90% tenured faculty. I think that's something no one wants," he continued, "because of the deadening effect it would have."

"We have a very young faculty here right now," he added, "whose median age is well under 40 years old." But, Allen added, with the mandatory retirement age of 70, and fewer faculty leaving institutions once they have been granted tenure, the tenure that will be granted in the future will come under closer scrutiny than ever before.

Collins Puts Belchertown At Top Of Priority List

By MARK VOGLER

Over a month ago Representative-elect James Collins took his initial tour of Belchertown State School along with the three other candidates for the Second Hampshire County Seats.

Immediately following the tour, Collins declared: "Belchertown is going to be a top priority for me if elected. I am going to cut through the red tape in Boston and push for reform."

Wednesday Collins' position was no different. He said his major decision to put the Belchertown issue at the top of his list was based upon his visit.

"I don't think anyone who tours Belchertown is going to walk away without being slightly affected by the incredible conditions," Collins said.

When reminded that Governor Francis W. Sargent had toured the institute for the mentally retarded, but had taken no legislative action to alevlate some of the problems, Collins suggested that the governor ought to go again.

According to Collins, the basic problem revolving around Belchertown is that "the Department of Mental Health is not meeting the needs of the staff and residents."

"As legislator, I intend to see that the major problems are met by the department much more quickly and efficiently," he said.

Collins said he would like to see the budget of the state school increased from seven to 10 million dollars. He also added there could be changes in a number of the administrators and that the regulations should be more flexible so the staff in Belchertown could use the money in many different ways.

"I have great concern for the staff and residents at Belchertown because they're residents of my constituency just like anybody else. I want to help these people as much as I can," Collins stated.

As Collins said prior to election to office last month, "In order to meet the problems of the Belchertown residents, I must deal with a bureaucracy which is insensitive to the needs of these people. We can't change things overnight. But we can certainly pressure Boston and work for reform."

Collins said he would meet with the Belchertown State School Friends Association shortly in order to discuss possible legislative reform.

Thursday night, Dr. Benjamin Ricci of Amherst, president of the Friends, reported Collins had done just that. The representative-elect and Ricci met with Belchertown Superintendent Willis Jones; Everrett Kosarick, a member of the Friends' Board of Directors; and Edward Hanifey, president of Franklin County Area Board and an administrator at Franklin County Public Hospital.

"Collins approached me on his own," Ricci said. "He wanted to talk, get a feel for things, and begin to pursue the issue at hand here. It's his commitment. Jim wants to go over the ills and proceed with what needs to be done. And the Friends deeply appreciate it."

Ricci recalled that Collins had sought him out prior to the election. "This man approached me and asked to be educated. He wanted to know about the inhumane and cruel treatment down here.

"After his visit, you could see that this man was shocked, sincerity and disgust written all over his face. You could see it in his eyes that this man was moved by what he saw. And that's what it takes to bring action down here."

Ricci said that the past election was really the first one which the Friends began to make demands, and a legislator became sensitive to those demands.

Ricci lauded three politicians in the past who aided the Belchertown situation without being asked. They included Senator-elect John Oliver of Amherst, Representative Al Lolas of Monson, and speaker of the house Dave Bartley.

Joseph Sylvia, a psychologist for the Department of Mental Hygiene in New York and a person who worked closely with Belchertown for a few years, echoed Ricci's sentiments of Collins and his commitment to Belchertown.

"I'm taking Jim Collins at his word. With his sincerity and enthusiasm, I'm confident he'll follow through. He's the kind of person we need to solve some of the problems at Belchertown.

"He pointed out that he would work to better the conditions for the staff and residents. That's one of the reasons why I voted for him. He's going to fight with legislation to get things done at the right level.

"I have complete faith that he will do everything in his power. We don't need any more token representatives. Jim's a dynamic guy who should help us immensely."

Nixon Daughters Hunt For Apartments

WASHINGTON (AP) — Both of President Nixon's daughters are apartment hunting in New York and Boston.

Tricia Nixon Cox admitted yesterday she was "really planning ahead" by looking for a place to live in New York because her husband, Edward Cox, still has to face his required service in the Army. He is a first lieutenant in the Reserve Officers Training Corps and is due to report for duty at Ft. Benning, Ga., Feb. 1.

Tricia said she plans to go to Georgia to live while her husband is serving there. And she said she had no idea how long he would be required to remain in service since he has been in the reserve since his college days.

However, with Cox just having passed his New York state bar exam and making up his mind over offers from several New York law firms, Tricia seemed to feel they should start finding a New York residence.

She said Cox will make a choice relatively soon among the offers he has gotten.

Meanwhile, her sister Julie Nixon Eisenhower is getting ready for a move to Boston. That is the new home port for Lt. jg. David Eisenhower's ship, the USS Albany, which is due back from a Mediterranean cruise in March.

The young Eisenhowers had an apartment in Atlantic Beach, Fla., while the Albany was based at nearby Mayport, Fla. Now that it has a new base, press secretary Constance Stuart said Julie would be looking for a place to stay in the Boston area.

Lt. Eisenhower is serving a three-year tour of active duty that is scheduled to end around March 1974.

Julie was returning today from Barcelona, Spain, where she had been on a 10-day visit with her husband, while his ship was in port.

Fac-Sen To Study Procedures Change

By JIM DEMPSEY

A proposal calling for a Constitutional Convention in January to revise Faculty Senate procedures was returned to the Rules Committee yesterday for further study. The decision came during the continuation of last week's Faculty Senate meeting.

The Committee will study the matter and report to the Senate at their first 1973 meeting indicating the need and the appropriate methods for revising the Senate's procedures, by-laws and constitution.

One of the items for consideration would be the restructuring of several of the senate committees and the elimination of some of the inactive committees. Another item such a convention would deal with would be the possibilities of joint committees of students and faculty from the two Senates.

The decisions resulting from the Constitutional Convention would only be advisory to the Faculty Senate, not final.

One of the major objections to having the convention in January was the timing. Senator George Sulzner pointed out that many teachers may have already made plans for the January break and would be unable to attend the two-week convention. Sulzner said, "They might feel discriminated against because of the time."

Sulzner also felt that there was too little time left in this semester to decide exactly what should be considered by the Convention.

When a time is finally decided on to hold the convetion, elections will be held to choose those who will attend.

Under the guidelines for this convention there will be 51 delegates in attendance.

There will be: 1) one faculty senator from each senate district elected by that district's senators 2) one faculty member from each senate district elected by that district's faculty members, 3) one ex officio senator elected by the ex officio members; 4) one administrative official appointed by the Chancellor; and 5) the Student Senate president, the graduate student senate president, and the Chairman of the Student Senate Academic Matters Committee without vote.

The Chairman of the Convention will be elected by the delegates to the Convention.

The Secretary of the Faculty Senate will organize and oversee the nominations to the Convention and the Rules Committee will organize and oversee the elections.

Student Food Co-op To Open

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

'People's Market', a student operated food co-operative, is scheduled to open January 25, 1973 in the Campus Center-Student Union complex.

Merchandise to be handled by the market will include such basics as fresh produce and hamburger as well as health foods and canned goods. The store will be entirely student staffed and open from noon to 2:00 a.m. daily.

The Committee for the Creation of 'People's Market' is a special committee of the Student Senate given the job of setting up this market. Heading this committee are Bob Chiller, SGA Treasurer, and Tony Tartaglia, who, over the past summer, decided that the need for such a co-op existed at UMass.

"A co-op could provide an economic and social base to unite students," states Tartaglia. "Originally we considered dealing in luxury items, such as stereo equipment and cameras, but we had little cooperation and too few experienced personnel to implement this idea."

Work was then begun on a grocery co-operative patterned after the Wisconsin Student Association Cooperative, and local area co-ops. On loan from the Commuter Assembly, the committee secured $4,000.00 to fund the co-op, which they expect to repay within two years. The Student Senate also passed a motion recently supporting the rational and philosophy of a student store.

"'People's Market' will be non-profit in the sense that no one will be making any money," says Chiller. "Receipts from the sale of merchandise will go toward paying employees, purchasing store equipment, replenishing stock and paying off the Commuter Assembly loan."

Food supplies will come from the Amherst Food Conspiracy and the New England Cooperative. Although pricing policy has not been agreed on as yet, Chiller expects "prices to be competitive or lower than those in the surrounding area stores."

At present, the 'People's Market' committee is considering a staff of six to nine people to run the co-op, one of whom will serve as a student manager. Eventually, it is hoped that a board of directors, elected by those who use the store, will run the market and set down market policy.

As a rationale for the creation of a student co-op, Tony Tartaglia sees "economic and social exploitation of students by some members of the community" to be primary. "The idea of the store is not to sell things cheaply; it is to form a sense of community in the students. In other words, bargains are not the object."

"Community control is the essence behind this argument," Tartaglia adds.

When the store opens, a careful weekly financial check will be kept on merchandise and student suggestions for new vendibles will be solicited.

If its operation is successful, 'People's Market' may expand to include such items as camping supplies and bicycles. Other projects, such as a student credit union, may be considered, depending upon the success of 'People's Market'.

Chandler Decision Still Up In Air

By BOB SCHEIER

The dean of the School of Education will apparently be "out of town" this morning when the deadline comes on a request for his decision on the admission of Paul Chandler to the school's graduate program.

Members of the Third World Alliance had asked Allen Wednesday to make a decision on the application of Chandler at a meeting between Allen, faculty members, and Third World students.

A spokesman for Allen's office said yesterday that Allen was out of town, and would be until Monday.

Chandler's application to the graduate program has become a controversy at the school, with Allen saying he is "negatively disposed" to Chandler's application.

The group Wednesday declined to say what, if any, action it would take if the deadline were not met. However, Chandler said it had been a request, not demand, for a decision by this morning.

Chandler, in an interview yesterday, said Allen was opposed to his admission because of stands Chandler has taken in opposition of some of Allen's policies.

He also said it was an attempt by Allen to "get back" at Chandler for his role in the shutdown of the School of Education Marathon last spring.

The educational open house at the School of Education was closed by members of the Third World community who claimed the school exploited Third World persons.

Allen, at the Wednesday meeting, said he doubted Chandler's commitment to the "premises of the school's programs", and also his commitment to "due process" within the school, and to non-violence.

Chandler said he could not recall any students he had made which statements would indicate a lack of commitment to non-violence, and schools and teacher-training programs he had been involved in showed he respected "due process".

He said others who had been involved in the events which led to the closing of the Marathon had been punished by Allen, in the form of promotions denied them and job responsibility taken away from them.

Chandler said he will graduate from UMass in January, magna cum laude, with an average of over 3.5.

Chandler said his graduate work would be a study of the effects of politics on education, and that "an educational system reflects the political system it operates under."

He added his thesis would include references to the School of Education, but not necessarily focus on the school.

Chandler said that if he were sure an investigation would be done of policies at the school, he might not be interested in entering the school himself.

While the school has a national reputation of being innovative and works with schools in many black communities around the country, he said it also received funds from foundations "that are also involved in South Africa."

The UMass School of Education was the "thrust of where education is going in this country," he added.

"If Allen were really the radical everyone calls him, he wouldn't be getting all the money he is," Chandler continued.

Bans Refused

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Environmental Protection Agency refused once more Thursday to ban immediately all remaining uses of the pesticides aldrin and dieldrin, chemical relatives of the already-banned DDT.

But EPA accepted the offers of Shell Chemical Co., the sole U.S. manufacturer, and of numerous product formulators, to eliminate voluntarily five aldrin-dieldrin uses:

—As an aerial spray.
—As a dust.
—For fire-ant control.
—In granular form for termite control.
—And in the "dye-bath" method of mothproofing.

The agency's decisions were reported by The Associated Press last Nov. 17, but the order was not officially signed and made public until Thursday-the day on which Shell Chemical and the formulators were to face, in a prehearing conference, the environment groups seeking the total ban.

What Makes A Journalist?

A six-man panel featuring distinguished journalism professors from the university will begin a discussion on "What Makes a Journalist" Monday at 7:30 in the Student Senate Chambers Room on the second floor of the Student Union.

Professors who have been invited to sit on the panel include Journalism Program Chairman Howard Ziff, Professors Barney Emmart, Arthur Musgrave, Milton Mayer, and Larry Pinkham. Robert Medeiros, a Springfield Union correspondent and a Collegian staffer, will represent the students on the panel.

The discussion will be moderated by Alvin Oickle, managing editor of the Greenfield Recorder. The program is being sponsored by Alpha Phi Gamma, the national honors fraternity for collegiate journalists. It is open to the public with no admission charge.

Talks Deadlocked

PARIS (AP) - Henry A. Kissinger and Hanoi's Le Duc Tho met yesterday for the fourth time in their current round of secret peace talks and again gave no hint of progress.

The Communist side spoke of a new deadlock caused by American and South Vietnamese intransigeance.

French press reports that an agreement might be signed within hours were discounted by both sides.

The two top negotiators and their advisors met for four hours in a suburban villa belonging to the French Communist party where they held several secret meetings last month. They shook hands cordially at the end of the meeting.

While the two sides maintained their news blackout on the secret sessions, an American delegate at the parallel semipublic peace talks warned that there might be "disappointments and setbacks" in the final negotiations.

Acting chief U.S. delegate Heyward Isham told the 169th weekly session of the conference that prospects for peace were "brighter," but added:

"We should not permit disappointments and setbacks in the pace of the final negotiations to prevent us from displaying an unchanged and unchangeable intention to achieve peace."

U.S. Secretary of State William P. Rogers, addressing NATO foreign ministers in Brussels, said he was confident the United States will achieve a firmly based peace settlement for all Indochina. He declined to go into details.

In Washington, presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said he could not predict how long the current round of secret talks would continue, "or what their outcome will be."

Kissinger and Tho met twice Monday following a nine-day recess and had a 5-1/2-hour meeting Wednesday. They will resume meeting today.

In Brief...

Manilan First Lady Attacked

MANILA (AP)-Imelda Marcos, the Philippines' strikingly lovely First Lady, was attacked yesterday by an assassin wielding a foot-long bolo knife. She survived with injuries requiring 75 stitches.

The assailant was slain. As of early today he had not been identified. The motive of the assault was unclear.

Seaman Allison Convicted

NORFOLK, Va. (AP)-Seaman Apprentice Jeffrey Allison was convicted Thursday of setting the $7.5-million fire that damaged the aircraft carrier Forrestal July 10.

The slender, freckled Allison was sentenced to five years at hard labor and will be given a bad conduct discharge.

Marijuana Mail Seized

ANDOVER, Mass. (AP)-Police are investigating an elaborate hoax in which more than 900 marijuana cigarettes were mailed individually to students at Phillips Academy.

Some 910 envelopes, each containing one joint, were collected from students' mail boxes at the prestigious prep school, Inspector Robert G. Hale of the U.S. Postal Service said Wednesday.

Brinegar To Replace Volpe

CAMP DAVID, Md. (AP) - President Nixon added a new face to his virtually complete second term Cabinet yesterday, nominating California oil company executive Claude S. Brinegar to replace John A. Volpe as Transportation secretary.

Volpe was nominated to be ambassador to Italy, the first Italian-American selected for the Rome post.

The announcements by press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler at the mountain-top retreat where Nixon has spent most of the month since his re-election left only one Cabinet nomination-attorney general-yet to be disclosed.

Officials say there is little question but that Richard Kleindienst will be retained in that slot.

Brinegar, a 45-year-old Republican, economist and racing car buff, is the third new face to be picked for the Cabinet.

New York labor leader Peter Brennan was brought in to replace James Hodgson as Labor secretary, and South Carolina textile manufacturer Frederick B. Dent to replace Peter G. Peterson as Commerce secretary.

Otherwise, Cabinet members were kept in their positions, shifted from one department to another or promoted from within the ranks.

Ziegler said Brinegar will divest himself of his holdings in Union Oil Co. where he is senior vice president as well as president of the Union 76 division.

Brinegar received his doctorate in economic research from Stanford University in 1953, joined Union Oil as an economist-analyst and worked his way up through company ranks.

He is a director of the American Petroleum Institute and lives with his wife and three children in Rolling Hills, Calif. He also lived for a while in Yorba Linda, Calif., Nixon's home town, and was a visiting instructor at Whittier College, the President's alma mater.

But Ziegler said Nixon did not know Brinegar until he made a trip to Camp David to discuss the transportation department post.

Brinegar is a director of the Daytona Speedway and Ziegler said "he likes cars."

Both Volpe and Brinegar must be confirmed by the Senate.

Volpe would succeed career diplomat Graham Martin, who has held the Rome post since September, 1969.

Ziegler said Martin will be "receiving another important assignment in the administration in the second term.

FDA Sites Dangers Of Antibiotic Use

WASHINGTON (AP) - A top Food and Drug administration official yesterday cautioned against the use of antibiotics to treat minor infections, saying some drugs not only can cause blood poisoning but also create deadly "super infections."

Dr. Henry E. Simmons, head of the FDA's Bureau of Drugs, told the Senate monopoly subcommittee recent studies indicate blood poisoning cases caused by the inappropriate use of antibiotics may total from 100,000 to 300,000 per year.

Fatalities, he said, may range from 30 per cent to 50 per cent.

"If these figures are correct," he said, "this is a problem of devastating significance."

Simmons said the misuse of antibiotics also can cause "the appearance of resistant strains of bacteria with an increased number of super infections-infections occurring when an antibiotic kills off one set of micro-organisms, thereby allowing another group to flourish."

And he said studies indicate that as many as 60 per cent of hospitalized patients who were given antibiotics showed no evidence of infection. He estimated several million patients per year may be receiving antibiotics they don't need.

The FDA official said one antibiotic-Chloramphenicol-often is used incorrectly to treat colds and minor upper respiratory infections. The drug, he testified, can cause fatal aplastic anemia and a serious type of blood poisoning.

"Only last year we received a report of a 25-year-old man who was seen by his doctor for a sore throat and received Chloramphenicol for nine days. He developed aplastic anemia within two months and died within four months," Simmons testified.

Harmful side effects of the drug in "non-appropriate" use have been cited in medical literature for more than 20 years and the substance was the subject of testimony in 1967 subcomittee hearings.

Simmons agreed with Chairman Gaylord Nelson, D—Wis., that an emergency situation exists in the misuse of drugs.

Klein 'Deplores' Arrests

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) - Herb Klein, director of the White House Office of Communications, says he "deplores" the recent arrests of newsmen for refusing to divulge confidential sources to courts.

"I believe very strongly in the need for confidentiality of sources," said Klein, an associate of President Nixon's throughout his political career.

"I also believe in the need for minimal regulation - in other words less, not more regulation of the press," he added.

Newsmen in New Jersey and Los Angeles have been jailed on contempt of court citations for refusing to answer grand jury questions concerning their sources of information.

Klein said the information the government sought in these two cases could have been obtained from other sources.

"Glimmer of Hope" in Heroin Control

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Defense Department's chief doctor said Thursday the "totally out of hand" abuse of heroin by American troops in Vietnam in early 1971 has now been brought under control.

The optimistic note by Dr. Richard S. Wilbur, assistant secretary of Defense for health and environment, was echoed on the domestic front by President Nixon's chief drug adviser, Dr. Jerome Jaffe.

Jaffe said there is now a "glimmer of hope" that heroin use domestically "may be leveling off...may be going down."

The two men made their statements at a special conference on "Medical Complications of Drug Abuse" sponsored by the American Medical Association.

Wilbur said the Defense department's drug abuse program of identification, treatment, rehabilitation and education was successful in reducing heroin abuse by GIs from its previously high levels to a level he termed still severe. The program, he said, was successful despite "the fact that heroin is still freely available throughout Southeast Asia."

Wilbur said military doctors were caught unaware by the 1971 epidemic of heroin abuse in Vietnam. But he said an emergency program of urine tests for detecting heroin plus new group therapy programs had succeeded in returning thousands of soldiers to duty.

Wilbur said as of Oct. 1, 1972-the latest date for which complete figures were available-32,645 identified heroin users had been rehabilitated and returned to duty. Another 10,041 still are undergoing treatment.

In addition, he said, 20,036 men had been separated from the services after being rehabilitated and 4,028 others had been transferred to Veterans' Administration hospitals for added treatment.

In the past few months, he said, none of the patients discharged from Vietnam medical facilities after a diagnosis of drug abuse were found to be absolutely addicted.

Former President Harry S. Truman. (AP)

Truman Improved

KANSAS CITY (AP)–Former President Harry S. Truman was reported in improved condition by medical authorities yesterday after a touch-and-go night in his battle against lung congestion and a weakened heart. Doctors kept him on the critical list.

"His age and the potential of sudden change require that he continue to be described as critical," said spokesmen at Research Hospital and Medical Center, where the 88-year-old former chief executive was taken Tuesday evening from his home in nearby Independence, Mo.

During the night, Truman had passed through what his personal physician, Dr. Wallace Graham, called an "ultracritical period."

"His general response is better today than yesterday," the hospital reported in one of several periodic statements to newsmen. "The major concern is still heart failure."

Wayne Conery, the hospital's assistant director of professional services, said doctors "have described last night's episode as acute pulmonary edema which is a manifestation of heart failure...But at the present, there is no evidence of myocardial infarction."

In layman's terms, Conery said, doctors were indicating there was no evidence Truman had suffered a heart attack.

The same statement also mentioned the continued presence of infection which doctors indicated was "in the bronchial tree." An edema is the presence of abnormally large amounts of fluid in the inter-cellular tissue spaces of the body.

Truman's wife, Bess, and their only child, Margaret Truman Daniel, were at his side during most of the night. They left shortly before dawn, but were back by 11 a.m.

Mrs. Daniel, wife of New York Times executive Clifton Daniel, arrived here just after midnight yesterday from Washington.

Meeting with reporters less than an hour afterward, she voiced "great faith" her father would "come out of this all right."

Mrs. Daniel arrived here just after midnight yesterday from Washington. She met with newsmen shortly after her arrival and again yesterday afternoon.

She said yesterday afternoon her father had improved noticeably during the day. "The difference is between night and day," she said. "He's getting kind of contrary, a very good indication."

Mrs. Daniel, who had said she thought her father "would come out of this all right," said she has had no conversation with Truman because it would be "too tiring." But she said her father was wide awake when she and her mother returned to the hospital yesterday.

"He is in serious condition, but he has been before," she said. "He's a strong man and he's gotten over worse things."

Never Trust Pregnant Cows

BOSTON (AP)-Gail Madden learned a valuable lesson in etiquette Wednesday: never invite a pregnant cow to a reception at the Boston Sheraton Grand Ballroom.

Miss Madden, 24, is a freelance fashion designer from providence, R.I., and Florence is the cow she won in a yogurt recipe contest.

Florence was to be presented to her by Colombo and Sons Creamery, but the cow wasn't too crazy about the idea.

The public relation director for the affair, Ann Herzog, said that Florence decided shortly after arriving at the Boston Sheraton she was ready to leave. With five men trying to hold her back, Florence charged across the red carpet in the ballroom, knocking down a set of curtains, upsetting two tables and chasing a group from the room.

Apollo Safely on Way

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Apollo 17, the moon flight that began with a stutter step, sailed smoothly toward its lunar target yesterday while its crewmen settled back and enjoyed the ride. Their only bother was a pesky warning signal which the experts said was no worry at all.

Experts said the Apollo 17 crew took the first steps to make up the time lost in the launch delay by firing a longer burn than planned when they fired out of earth orbit at 4:45 a.m. yesterday. This put them on a faster course to the moon and they will be back on schedule before they enter lunar orbit.

It was a time of waiting for astronauts Eugene A. Cernan, Harrison "Jack" H. Schmitt and Ronald E. Evans, anxious to reach their lunar goal and begin explorations that will fill gaps in man's knowledge of the moon's history.

As the trio knifed deeper into space, Mission Control reported that the "spacecraft is performing in a super fashion...absolutely no problems at all."

The ground also radioed a medical report on the condition of critically ill former President Harry S. Truman.

"Our best wishes for the return to health of Mr. Truman," came the word from space.

"You're a sweet talker," was the reply from Apollo commander Cernan when informed by Mission Control the word was go for a quarter-million-mile journey through space, which will put them in the moon's gravity late Saturday.

"We try to please, Gene," said Houston.

Cernan, 38, and Schmitt, a 37-year-old geologist who is the first professional scientist spaceman, are scheduled to touch down on the lunar surface Monday to begin three days of explorations.

Their visit, the sixth by Americans, ends an era of adventure and may be 20th century man's last voyage to an alien world.

While most of America was awakening yesterday morning, Cernan, Schmitt and Evans, who will circle the moon in the command ship during the lunar expedition, began their first rest period.

Awaking late in the afternoon, they had a full schedule of equipment tests and the reward of their first breakfast in space.

A problem with a balky computer delayed their launch from Cape Kennedy nearly three hours Wednesday night and yesterday morning. But the delay did not dim the spectacular show given tens of thousands who gathered at Cape Kennedy to watch the powerful Saturn 5 rocket roar away in America's first after dark launch.

"Good show, babe! Little late, but good show!" Cernan exclaimed as the spaceship began its voyage 2 hours and 40 minutes behind schedule.

Liftoff originally had been scheduled for 9:53 p.m. Wednesday, but the countdown was interrupted by the computer.

Experts described what happened this way: the computer failed to receive a signal telling it that automatic pressurization of an oxygen tank in the rocket was taking place. The technicians were aware of the problem and were pressurizing manually. The computer wouldn't recognize this, however, and technicians at Cape Kennedy, Houston and the Marshall Space Center in Huntsville, Ala., had to work out a computer bypass plan.

This done, the count was resumed and blastoff went smoothly at 12:33 a.m. EST Thursday.

Aside from the cranky computer, the astronauts encountered little trouble other than the irritating and false master alarms. The alarm system flashes lights and sounds a tone indicating something is wrong.

The crew checked the alarm panel frequently but found everything normal.

Mission Control dismissed the counterfeit signals as minor and switched off the warning system for the five-hour, 45-minute rest period.

The destination of Cernan and Schmitt is a site called Taurus Littrow. It lies at the foot of ancient lunar mountains in a valley thought to have been carved out by volcanic eruptions.

The landing, scheduled for 2:55 p.m. EST Monday, will be the sixth in an historic series dating to the July 1969, Apollo 11 flight commanded by Neil A. Armstrong. The landing timetable was not affected by the launch delay. Experts say the time will be made up on the trip.

Cernan and Schmitt will spend a record 75 hours on the moon, including 25 hours outside the landing craft in quest of some of the oldest and some of the youngest rocks on the lunar surface.

As he orbits the moon, Evans will conduct extensive scientific and photographic tasks from the command ship called America.

Although this is the last Apollo, Cernan, a veteran of two previous space flights, contends it does not signal the end of lunar exploration.

Following Apollo 17, the United States will shift its emphasis from lunar exploration to earth orbit flights, beginning next year with the Skylab space station.

The space shuttle, a reusable spacecraft that takes off like a rocket, flies like a spaceship and lands like an airplane, is being designed for use in the late 1970s.

Court Rules Against Strike Fines

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Supreme Court Thursday ruled that labor unions cannot fine workers who quit the union during a strike and return to their jobs.

The 8-1 decision, written by Justice William O. Douglas, held that a union has no more control over a former member "than it has over the man in the street."

The case involved a strike in 1968-69 by the Textile Workers Union, AFL-CIO, against the Nashua, N.H., plant of the International Paper Box Machine Co. All but one member of the local voted to strike and, after the strike started, the members agreed that defectors were subject to a $2,000 fine.

Thirty-one members eventually quit the union during the lengthy strike and went back to work. The local tried to fine them a day's wages for each day worked.

The court agreed with the National Labor Relations Board that the fines were illegal under the 1947 Taft-Hartley law.

"When a member lawfully resigns from the union, its power over him ends," Douglas said.

In 1967, the court upheld fines imposed by the United Automobile Workers against members who had crossed picket lines during strikes at two Allis Chalmers Manufacturing Co. plants. But these workers had not quit the UAW first.

The court and the NLRB said this made the critical difference. "We have...only to apply the law which normally is reflected in our free institutions-the right of the individual to join or resign from associations as he sees fit," Douglas said.

Justice Harry A. Blackman, dissenting alone, said membership in a union involves mutual commitments, especially during the strike. Once a worker votes to abide by a strike, he still may resign from the union afterward and cross picket lines "but not without the prospect of having to pay a reasonable union fine for which he voted," Blackman said.

Neither the Textile Workers contract with the company nor the union's constitution or bylaws contained any provision defining or limiting the circumstances under which a member could resign.

In a second ruling the court held unanimously that tenants in apartment complexes have a right under the 1968 federal civil rights law to sue landlords on charges of discriminating against black applicants.

The decision, also prepared by Douglas, came in a case from San Francisco, where two tenants, one white and one black, had been barred by courts from suing operators of Park Merced Apartments. Less than one per cent of the 8,200 tenants are black.

The suit claimed the tenants suffered a loss of social benefits of living in an integrated community as well as the embarrassment of being a stigmatized as residents of a "white ghetto".

Scientific Glassblower

While two graduate students watch, the talented hands of UMass scientific glassblower Gordon Good put together a condenser. The students are in Good's Chemistry 705 class, subtitled Laboratory Glassblowing for Scientists. Each semester, Good teaches a select class of graduate and Senior Honors Program students the basics of scientific glass work.

"They will be able to make small laboratory glassware when they go to a place that may not have a glassblower," Good explained. "Or if they can't actually make the apparatus, at least they'll be able to know how it's made so they can order it."

Good's main job is making special equipment for UMass laboratory researchers when it can't be bought ready-made. His shop in the Graduate Research Center has a staff of three and is part of the Graduate School's Research Services Office. Good has worked at his craft for nearly 30 years, and was with the Monsanto Company before joining the UMass staff in 1964.

Space DJ: 'Wow! Fantastic!'

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP)–Scientist Jack Schmitt came through with the expected scholar's descriptions as Apollo 17 sped to the moon Thursday. But he also chipped in his share of the now familiar astronauts', "Wow! Fantastic!"

The fun was listening as he switched roles.

Sometimes he sounded like he was playing the first space disc jockey.

"Stay tuned for the next installment on earth," he told Mission Control after voicing reflections on his maiden space flight.

Other times his chatter was about such things as "interfaces" and "oceanic currents" and "pack ice."

Schmitt, a 37-year-old geologist, is the first professional scientist to make a space trip. Previous astronauts were mostly test pilots trained by special instructors, including Schmitt, to make scientific observations.

Schmitt did not even know how to fly a plane when he was selected as a scientist-astronaut in 1966.

"I'm not easily impressed, but I'm impressed by this one," he said.

Schmitt and Apollo commander Eugene A. Cernan are scheduled to touch down on the lunar surface Monday for three days of exploration while the third crewman, Ronald E. Evans, orbits the moon in the command ship.

At another point, Schmitt said he wished he had a geography book and a map of Antarctica to expand his observations of the earth.

"One of the things we miss in our training is a good geography lesson, and particularly on Antarctica," he advised ground control. "I really wish I knew that geography, I wish I had thought of bringing a good map of Antarctica."

Some of his descriptions were far from the textbook variety.

"I'll tell you, if there ever was a fragile appearing piece of blue in space it's the earth right now..."

He saw the sunrise as a rainbow.

Schmitt lapsed into straight talk for some of his descriptions of Antarctica.

"You can see patterns of what I think is pack ice, leading off from that sharp interface...those patterns seem to merge directly with the patterns of the clouds..."

As Schmitt prepared for his sleep period he mused:

"Man, I've never taken it so easy in my life. I'll tell you, I couldn't have believed this would be an experience like it is now. Every time you turn around there's something else to see and wonder what's causing it...There's always something going on."

Boston Paranoia Sets In

BOSTON (AP) - Business in police dogs, locks and karate courses is booming following the strangulation deaths of five young women and the disappearance of a sixth.

The reaction has been similar to that following the Boston Strangler killings in the 1960s, when 13 women died in a 19-month period.

Robert Langer of the Back Lock and Safe Co. said his business has increased 34 to 40 per cent over the past two weeks. Most of his customers are young women in their mid 30s or younger.

Three of the five victims have been coeds, two at Boston University and one at Emerson College-both schools in the city's Back Bay section. The missing woman is also a BU student.

Robert McGuinnes, director of the Mattson Academy of Karate, said there's been an abrupt increase in the number of inquiries from women in the last few weeks. He said he received four calls Wednesday.

The director of the Agnell Memorial Hospital dog adoption agency, Dave Smith, said he'd noticed an increase in the number of people inquiring about watch dogs in recent weeks.

Smith said more than usual are interested in large breeds, such as Labrador retrievers and German shepherds.

At Boston University, the director of the office of residence life said there is a general nervousness among women dorm residents.

Karen Riggs said that when they go outside, "people are more careful to walk in lighted areas."

The head of the BU dormitory union, Margie Augembraium, said, "Students are talking about the murders very much...Everybody is aware of it."

Many students, she said, will go outside only in groups.

"Friends tell me if I go out at night, I'm crazy," she said.

Men residents of dormitories also are beginning to worry about women's safety, she said, and many are volunteering to escort them. A wave of rapes and assaults on women at the University of Colorado recently has produced the same reaction among men students there.

One 20-year-old BU coed said she is hesitant to ride the subway at night, and another said she will go out only in a taxi.

Women's Fellowships

Fellowships are available beginning academic year 1973-74 to women pursuing graduate studies at UMass or at other institutions. The Palmer Fellowship carries a stipend of $3,500, and the recipient may study in the U.S. or abroad, however she must be no more than 26 years of age at the time of appointment and remain unmarried throughout the tenure of the appointment.

The Shackford Medical Scholarship is for the study of medicine with a view to general practice, not psychiatry and carries a stipend of $3,500. This announcement is posted on the Graduate School Bulletin Board, Second Floor, Graduate Research Center.

Applications may be obtained from the Secretary to the Committee on Graduate Scholarships, Wellesley College, Wellesley, MA 02180, and must be filed before February 20, 1973.

Applications are available from December 1, 1972 to March 1, 1973, in the Admissions Office, Whitmore Hall, for Undergraduate Students interested in going on exchange either semester of next year. The participating institutions for 1973-74, are:

Illinois State University, Montana State University, Morgan State College, Ohio University, Oregon State University, Rutgers-the State University of New Jersey (at New Brunswick), University of Alabama, University of Hawaii, University of Idaho, University of Maine-Fort Kent, University of Massachusetts-Amherst, University of Montana, University of Nevada-Reno, University of Oregon, University of South Florida, University of Wisconsin-Green Bay.

The student applying for an exchange should be a sophomore. The exchange would be during his junior year. The student must have at least a 2.5 cumulative grade point average. Students who are interested in participating in the program for next year must complete an application and return it to Mr. Loder, Office of the Registrar, no later than the deadline of March 1, 1973. Final selections, including a list of alternates, are expected to be completed by March 31, 1973."

Need Aid? Apply Jan.-Mar.

Financial aid applications for 1973-74, including Summer School 1973 and all special summer programs sponsored by the University, will be available in the Financial Aid Office, Room 232, Whitmore Administration Building, after January 1, 1973.

All students wishing to be considered for any type of aid whether or not assistance has been received previously, must file an application.

The deadline for filing is March 1, 1973.

Junior Year in New York

Washington Square College of Arts and Science of New York University sponsors a Junior Year in New York.

The College, located in the heart of the city, is an integral part of the exciting metropolitan community of New York City—the business, cultural, artistic, and financial center of the nation. The city's extraordinary resources greatly enrich both the academic program and the experience of living at New York University with the most cosmopolitan student body in the world.

This program is open to students recommended by the deans of the colleges to which they will return for their degrees.

There are strong and varied offerings in many areas, such as fine arts, urban studies, languages including non-European, mathematics in the College and at the Courant Institute, psychology, and others.

A qualified student may register for courses in all other schools of the University, including the specializations in Commerce and Education.

The University sponsors programs in Spain and France.

Easing The Burden

The Campus Center - Student Union Board of Governors last night decided to commission the Arthur D. Little Company, a nationally known consulting firm, to study the management of the services of the Campus Center. The cost of the study will be $35,000, and a report should be out by mid-March.

At the present time the Campus Center is a very large financial burden on the backs of students, the Campus Center fee being $62.50 a year, the highest on campus. We hope that the study will do something to make the Campus Center - Student Union complex a smaller burden.

As things stand now the only operation in the complex which shows a profit is the bookstore. Campus Center Food Services has been a failure financially from the very beginning.

We also hope that the $35,000 fee for the study isn't a ripoff. It seems like a pretty high figure, even for such a prestigious firm as the Little Co.

It seems as if everyone from administrators to student leaders is in agreement over the need to make the Campus Center a more financially feasible operation. Last night a first step in making it such an operation was taken. We hope for the financial and mental welfare of all concerned that the $35,000 is money well spent.

She Needed The Exposure

The following is a candid conversation taken from official tape recordings of an episode between a news reporter and a suspect awaiting trial while they were speaking in the confidential conference room of the jail.

"Gus, the authorities have told me that the charges against you are assault and battery with intent to commit rape. Is that true?"

"Yes it is. That's what I'm charged with".

"Well, did you commit the crime?".

"I refuse to answer that question."

"Is it because you're guilty?"

"No, it's because I don't want to see you go to jail."

"What do you mean?"

"If I tell you my story, you'll have it printed. Then what happens when the court calls you as a witness and asks you where you got your information? Do you decline to testify and go to jail for refusing to reveal your source or, do you tell them that I gave it to you and prejudice the case into a mistrial."

"I see. Well, enough of that. Let's get into the specifics of your case Gus. I've been given access to your past record and it doesn't look good at all. It shows that you've been arrested before for assault and battery. Who was the victim?"

"I think you'll find that it was a female."

"That doesn't help your case much. Was this an instance where you were trying to commit a sex crime?"

"No, all I was doing was standing in an intersection with my pants unzipped."

"That doesn't make much sense then. It sounds more like lewd and lascivious behavior."

"I didn't think it was all that viscious."

"Anyway, was that when you attacked her?"

"No, all I was doing was urinating. I really had to go. She was crossing the street and it splashed on her leg."

"You were found guilty."

"Yes, they threw the book at me."

"Maybe you could get them for assault."

"I doubt it. There weren't any reliable witnesses around."

"Of course. Did you then make any sort of advances that would assimilate an assault?"

"I really shouldn't answer but, the judge will probably find me guilty anyway. Some other inmates here said they saw him the other day playing with something under his cloak that looked like rope. Anyhow, the night of that incident I was drunk and stepped on her shoe."

"You stepped on her shoe and they chargd you with assault and battery with intent to commit rape?"

"Well, she claimed that I stopped her on the street and fell all over her. It was an accident. I tripped an fell onto her. We fell on the ground and I admit it may have looked a little cozy to anyone just taking it out of context."

"So, you're innocent then."

"Well, it's more like she's guilty".

"Of what?"

"Perjury".

"That makes sense. Why do you think she did it?"

"She was an up and coming actress and needed the exposure."

Chandler: A Severe Test

By BRENDA NASH

One of the most innovative schools of education in the United States is in trouble today. Dwight Allen, Dean of the School of Education and also referred to as the 'Messiah of the Ed. School' is in trouble. No longer seen as a man interested in controversy and risk or as a man seriously dedicated to actively combatting institutional racism, Dean Allen is joining the ranks of the 'establishment' and hanging on diligently to the status quo.

The issue revolves around Paul Chandler; defined by Dean Allen himself as a brilliant and creative student. Mr. Chandler is an acknowledged leader of the Third World community in the Five College area (Amherst, Hampshire, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, UMass) and as well in the Oceanhille-Brownsville section of Brooklyn, N.Y.

Paul Chandler is an outstanding student. He will graduate Magna Cum Laude in Jan. 1973. Why then is his admission to graduate school being blocked personally by the Dean? Why is Dean Allen overruling due process in the case of Mr. Chandler? Why is the Dean overriding the recommendation of fourteen faculty members who want Paul Chandler as a graduate student this Spring?

Dean Allen refuses to give any substantive evidence as to why Paul Chandler should not be admitted to graduate school. He makes innuendos and insinuations but he will never give actual reasons as to why Mr. Chandler is being denied admission. He alludes to the fact that perhaps Mr. Chandler wants to work "outside the system" or that Mr. Chandler is not a "good citizen".

There is however a wealth of substantive data to show the excellence and quality of Mr. Chandler as an undergraduate student and as a prospective graduate student. For example, these past four months Mr. Chandler has been a member of Explorations, an alternative teacher preparation program at the School of Education. To fulfill his requirements for this program he has done a variety of experiences such as participating in the creation of an alternative school for Third World children. This school has received accreditation from the School Board in Amherst and the curriculum of the school which Mr. Chandler helped prepare has been described as "excellent" by an evaluation commmittee of the Amherst school system.

Paul Chandler also travels to Brooklyn, N.Y. once a week to work with Father John Powers as an unpaid consultant to a neighborhood Tenant's Association. Paul works with the youth in the community and holds educational sessions for them in conjunction with Father Powers. On Sunday evenings Paul conducts a radio program on WFCR FM which involves both music and conversation on current topics of interest. He is also actively involved in the Institute of Pan African Studies where he works closely with both artists and political activists such as Acklyn Lynch, Archie Shepp, Max Roach, Diana Ramos and others to bring cultural awareness and political awareness to the Third World community in Western Massachusetts.

Aside from his academic endeavors Paul and his wife Rochelle are the parents of four active sons.

On Dec. 6, 1972 a public meeting was held on this matter. This issues were discussed and still the Dean refused to make a decision. At this time the Third World Alliance, a recognized student organization on the campus, made a request that a decision on Paul Chandler's admittance to the graduate program be made public by 9:30 a.m. on Friday, December 8, 1972.

Heriberto Flores, an undergraduate, read a statement both in Spanish and English which endorsed Mr. Chandler as a recognized and respected leader of the Third World community. In addition, several Third World students and faculty have publicly stated that they "refuse to allow Dean Allen to determine the position that Third World people can take vis a vis social issues."

It is clear that Dean Allen's actions are political actions aimed at limiting the diversity that he will allow at the School.

The issues are clear. Can the Dean define what the limits of diversity are? Will the Dean override the recommendation of several members of the faculty? Admittedly the School of Education has a diversity in color both in its student body and faculty, but is the Dean stating that all these people should have similar political ideologies? What about academic freedom - the right of diverse political beliefs to exist? At the School of Education academic freedom is being tested.

The student government at the University is considering requesting that the American Association of University Professors commence an investigation of academic freedom in this case. Other support is growing daily from a variety of organizations and faculty in the Five College area.

The Dean is taking this issue as a personal matter. He sees criticism of the School as criticism of himself. Rather than welcoming Paul Chandler's perspective as an invitation for debate, discussion and analysis with the faculty and students he has resorted to intimidation and insult. A group of concerned white undergraduates who went to see the Dean on Dec. 6, 1972 were told that they were "white crazies and adolescents". The directors of Explorations! were also seen by the Dean as "white crazies, dupes, naive, immature, adolescent and unwitting allies". The Dean consistently refused to deal with substantive issues and instead responded with verbal insult.

Members of the Third World Community and concerned white groups have exhausted every possible area for avoiding confrontation on this issue. To this date all efforts have proved unsuccessful. While Dean Allen has stated that "I will try to do everything in my power to keep Paul Chandler out of the School of Education" he refuses to give a written answer to Paul's application. The Christmas holiday draws near and soon everyone will be going home for the holidays and the Dean will be able to say 'no' to Paul Chandler's application without the fear of any dissent.

This type of stalling procedure will not be tolerated by the Third World community and in fact all members of the academic community who believe in due process and academic freedom.

The School of Education is in trouble. Dwight Allen is in trouble and the right of all students and faculty to question and criticize freely is being severely tested here at the University of Massachusetts today.

A Night With The UMass Police

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

Every time a cop knocks on a door, he has no idea what is waiting for him on the other side–it could be anything from an abandoned baby or a psychopath about to blow the cop's head off. It could be nothing at all. No cop ever knows: Robert Daley, former New York City Deputy Police Commissioner.

The call came at 10:09 as Unit 10 was moving south on North Pleasant Street. "Station to Unit 10..." the dispatcher spit out the words, "unconscious individual on the 18th floor of Kennedy..."

They never know till they get there.

He could just be drunk, burp himself awake and stumble home or they could be carrying a body out. It's happened before.

So they don't wait. Before the radio transmission was over Guilmette was stepping on the throttle, calling out to Turati for siren and lights. There was a lurch as the gears shifted and the second two barrels of the 427 cut in. You could hear the whine of the engine through the siren and the sharp discussion between the two, Guilmette calling for a burst from the siren as they swerved to avoid a car at the Massachusetts Ave.-North Pleasant intersection. They slowed for the corner then jumped as Guilmette punched the pedal, flying down Mass. Ave. towards the Kennedy lot.

It could be nothing or there nould be a body waiting.

Dick Guilmette and Jim Turati are UMass cops. They work three nights together, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, alternating days off (Guilmette gets Sunday and Monday, Turati Tuesday and Wednesday) and work two nights a week with another officer.

They drive a "power car", a '69 Chevy Wagon. The power car is the only police cruiser on campus that regularly carries two men. Turati described he and Guilmette as the "guys who cover all the emergencies." The power car, tonight Unit 10 (there are two wagons on the force Units 10 and 11) carries a stretcher and emergency first aid equipment.

Both men joined the force in April of this year, underwent six weeks of training over the summer. They became regular officers in August, just before the start of the fall semester.

Both have gone to college; Turati, the University of Bridgeport, is six credits short of a degree in physical education. He plans to pick up the extra credits while on the UMass police force. Guilmette will graduate in June from here with a degree in sociology. He plans to go onto the Northeastern School of Criminal Justice next fall.

We started that night's patrol at 7:20 pm from the UMass police station, the low concrete block building to the right of the Southwest tunnel. (During World War II it was a garage for army tanks using the fields of the Pioneer Valley as a training ground). Around the island and in front of the station, sliding past Boyden Gym, we paused for a moment to check the siren then banged two lefts, Commonwealth to Massachusetts Ave., heading east to begin the night's work.

Why does a cop become a cop? Turati's answer goes back to his grandfather, police chief of South Deerfield. He lived with his grandfather, and admits to it having an influence on his decision of just a year ago to enter police work. "It was always on the

Space Saga

By Carl Greenberg

With the last scheduled moon flight in the news, people might be inclined to pay attention to it somewhat more than they have to the last several missions.

Leaving aside all political beliefs in the value, or lack of value, in the space program, it is curious that so little public imagination has been stirred by the space program in recent years. Of course, very little is left to the imagination what with the on-the-spot television; but, still, what can be more exciting than a flight through space?

Most people have already forgotten the names of the three astronauts who were killed in the fire on the pad. (Grissom, White and Chaffee) And Grissom was one of the original seven. And White was the first American "spacewalker."

Of all the inherently dramatic stories of American and Russian space exploration, triumphant and tragic, perhaps none approach the ill-fated Apollo 13 year-tragedy for man-vs.-nature-and-machine drama.

Recently, the New Yorker magazine ran a two-part article (Nov. 11 & 18) by their space reporter H.S.F. Cooper, Jr. It will probably come out in a book version. In it, Cooper tells the story of the Apollo 13 flight straight and chronologically. He makes no attempt to lay blame or question values, he simply observes NASA and NASA people during four of NASA's most critical days.

Just for the record, astronauts James Lovell, Jr., John Swigert, Jr., and Fred Haise, Jr. were aboard their craft on April 13, 1970 when a short circuit caused by exposed wires inside an oxygen tank in the rear service module caused a heat rise which blew up the tank. The explosion was barely felt by the crew, but it took out of commission main electrical sources and it happened at just about the point beyond which the flight was committed by physics to the moon.

Cooper tells the story of freezing astronauts, shoe-string attempts to conserve water and power, and round-the-clock effort to solve the problem with just the right amount of technicality to make it understandable, and just the right degree of stand-off observation to make the reader realize that he never got the whole story from the press.

It is a singular story of a disaster that took on its ominous proportions gradually and simply got worse and worse. It is perhaps to be expected that insuch an organization as NASA, which exists on the cooperation between men of widely different areas of specialization and machines which are at times beyond anyone's comprehension, that no heros emerge and that the calamity is really only expressible in technical terms. It was not at all like simply a torpedoed ship, although Cooper may say such things. In a structure such as NASA and a machine such as the spacecraft, there are few things which relate one-to-one.

Everything affects everything. Names and personalities float by as if they are nothing, and, indeed, no single strong personality would have made any difference. Either the problem was solvable or it wasn't. If the data was available, if the working parts of the craft had certain capabilities, and if there was time enough for the plan to be worked out and simulated, then the astronauts would be saved. No simple determination or endurance on the part of the crew or on the part of the ground controllers was going to make the least difference.

If there was little human element in the causes and solutions to the accident, there was, of course, the reaction of those who took part. If we insist on our dramas and adventures to have people in them, then it is at the end of this story that we would have to look.

But, even there, it seems that the reaction can be summed up as a huge organization just slowly shaking its head and saying "whew!"

Rough Seas

Do we have an hysterical issue for you this week! Page sixteen sports the latest from Liberation News concerning the ongoing racial tension in the US Fleet. Acts of sabotage have been reverberating through the ships in South East Asia. Nonviolent protesting has been met with violent suppression on the part of the authorities, so goes the newsletter. For the viewpoint of one side see page.

Death Throes?

Continuing onward and upward in hysteria page fifteen makes the claim that The Revolution is suffering badly from its last battle (The Battle of the Presidency) and with its mighty wounds is in the throes of death. The question remains however. Does Tralfamadore control the Solar System? And will the media come to the rescue. Remember The Strike of '72!!! For your own salvation read!

A Dream Of A Book

George S. Kaufman wrote and directed more than a dozen legendary plays and musicals on Broadway. Amongst them were "The Man Who Came To Dinner," "The Front Page," "Of Mice and Men," and "Guys and Dolls." His career spanned more than three decades and he was one of the most flamboyant and exciting personalities of New York society. World Politics

What Country Didn't Have An Election Last Month?

By Howard Bloom and Steve Ferber

Voting booths all over the world were busier than ever last month. No less than 11 countries held elections in November 1972. Ideologically there was no certain trend, some moved left, some right.

What became unequivocably clear is that pollsters worldwide were having a hell of a time predicting the outcome. They were missing a dead heat by a mile, and predicting one when a landslide was upcoming.

But overall there was one good sign. Voter participation was extremely high upwards of 80% in most countries. Here we'll take a look at 10 countries to find out just what did happen in the hectic month of November.

WEST GERMANY. In an election victory which the analysts called "overwhelming", Chancellor Willy Brandt's ruling coalition was returned to the Bundestag with a 48 seat majority, and made the pollsters look silly. Brandt's runoff election against Christian Democratic Party leader Rainer Barzel was called a standoff and no one dared hope that the Chancellor would win even a 10 seat majority in West Germany's lower house.

Brandt called for the election himself after intentionally losing a vote of confidence in the Bundestag, the only constitutional way to dissolve Parliament prematurely. His small enough majority in Parliament had begun to dissolve last Spring, and by the time Brandt called for the new election, his government had been reduced to a minority.

Both candidates held relatively similar views on major issues, but Brandt stressed his successes in negotiating historic treaties with the Soviet Union, Poland, and East Germany while all Barzel had to offer was a smear campaign in which he insisted if Brandt were re-elected, it would be Germany's last free election. The opposition leader also reminded West German voters of the inflation rate, which had jumped from 2.7 percent to 6.4 percent in Brandt's three years in office. Today, woe is Rainer, because the voters refused to put their pocketbooks ahead of foreign policy as an election issue, and have now exalted Brandt alongside Konrad Adenauer for contributions to the consolidation of democracy and the restoration of West Germany to a position of decency and respect.

CANADA. Although the Canadian election was held more than three weeks ago, the verdict is not yet in. Prime Minister Elliot Trudeau split the vote with conservative head Robert Stanfield, 109 seats apiece in the 264 seat Parliament.

The closest election in its history, Canadian's gave the charismatic Trudeau what the New York Times called a "personal stinging rebuke."

The vote, leaving both Liberals and Conservatives far short of the magic 133 seats, left the balance of power to David Lewis, the peppery populist leader of the leftish New Democratic Party (30 seats).

Trudeau. Letting Parliament decide.

With pollsters greatly underrating Stanfield's appeal, analysts turned to world wide trends in attempting an explanation of the unexpected results. "The move is away from charismatic men," they claimed, towards less flamboyant heads of State as evidenced in Russia, Great Britain and France.

While Trudeau was absorbing this personal defeat, he continued to fight the high employment rate (7.1%) and the spiraling cost of living. Still, the Prime Minister refused to resign, despite the fact that his liberals dropped 38 seats.

What lies ahead will be the answer to the question: Can Trudeau form a government with the cooperation of one of the minor parties?

SOUTH KOREA. It seems as if leaders all across the world were getting overwhelming votes of confidence during the month of November. In a little publicized election, South Korean voters gave President Chung Hee Park practically unlimited powers by ratifying a new constitution. The new document puts to an unfortunate death the old three term limit on the Presidency and will allow Park, who openly supported the new constitutiin, to continue in office for as long as the South Korean electorate sees fit.

As the situation stands at the moment, it looks as if he'll be President for a long, long time. Of the 91.9 percent of the eligible voters in South Korea, 91.5 percent cast ballots in favor of scrapping the old constitution, which had been adopted 25 years hence. The vote was more a show of confidence for Park than support for the new document. One social scientist who supported the constitution said, "most people forget that, basically, we Koreans are not loyal to a government, institution, or ideology. We are loyal to a person and in this case it is President Park. The new constitution may not be democratic, but most of us Koreans feel it is better this way."

It certainly is not democratic. The new constitution contains a bill of rights which guarantees freedom of speech, assembly, and press, but it also contains a potentially dangerous clause, "except as provided by law," which means that these "rights" can be stripped away at any time. Still, South Koreans are happy with the outcome of the vote, obviously.

"Democracy is not good for Korea," said one wealthy farmer. "We are too individualistic and misuse freedom for personal profit." As soon as President Park signs the constitution, South Korea will begin its escape from freedom.

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND. As Australia goes, so goes New Zealand, or so it seems, as both countries recently ousted more conservative leaders in favor of two Laborites. The similarities between the countries appear endless.

Norman Kirk, New Zealand's new Prime Minister, and Edward Whitlam of Australia both stressed social improvement in their campaigns. The phrase "It's time for a change" became the battle theme of both upset victors.

In New Zealand the Labor Party had been out of government for 12 years, while in Australia the drought extended for 23 years.

In both countries the departing coalitions had been severely criticized for following so closely the United States' lead in world affairs. Kirk and Whitlam plan to change their foreign and defense policies. Specific plans have been announced concerning an end to the draft and an end to involvement in Vietnam.

Thus a move away from the United States is indicated, while a move away from more conservative leadership is likewise implicated. The neighboring countries of Australia and New Zealand have much in common and a long time friendship between Kirk and Whitlam is soon to begin.

NORWAY. The political predictors certainly found the going rough during November. In Norway, citizens voted by a 54 to 46 percent margin against joining the Common Market. The Norwegian vote confounded the experts. Nor way is very much a trading nation, and both Prime Minister Trygve Bratteli's Labor Party and its archrival Conservative Party campaigned for a "yes" vote.

Besides costing Norway economically-prices on the Oslo Stock Exchange dipped sharply after the referendum-the decision will cost them politically. Immediately after the balloting Bratteli and his cabinet resigned, and that left Norway without a government until the next parliamentary election, a year away.

The opposition won by arguing that Norway simply didn't need Europe. The argument was a persuasive one, since the nation's unemployment rate is less than one percent and Norwegians enjoy one of the world's highest standards of living. Many people worried that Norway would be swallowed up in the vast European Community and lose control of its own destiny. Now, for the time being, they can stop their worrying.

DENMARK. Anker Jorgenson has himself a new job, and all because of a Danish vote that led to the retirement of their Prime Minister. Danes (90% of those eligible voted) voted overwhelmingly last month to join the Common Market.

Prime Minister Jans Otto Krag stepped down, having fulfilled his greatest political ambition, namely entrance into the market.

The vote also helped stem the tide of European disunity created in part by Norway's actions just one week earlier.

Time magazine called the vote a "move towards the left" as Jorgenson, the new leader, heads the Social Democratic Party, a more liberal party than that of Krag's.

PUERTO RICO. In came the old and in came the new? Yes, that's what happened in last month's Puerto Rico elections. The New Progressive Party, led by Louis Ferre, was turned out of office last month by more than 93,000 votes from a total of 1.2 million eligible. In came the old, the Popular Democratic Party, that the 68 year old Ferre had ousted after a 28 year reign. In came the new, in the person of Rafael Hernadez Colon, an articulate 36 year old, as head of the Popular Democratic Party.

As in many countries, the pollsters missed this one badly. In a race termed "too close to call" Colon won an easy victory, bringing with him more than 2/3 of the seats in the legislature.

The people of Puerto Rico had certainly had enough of Ferre, a man who advocated a complete break with the United States, and the man responsible for Puerto Rico's incredibly high unemployment rate of 12%.

ITALY. Italians took a small step toward the left on November 28th as the neo-Fascists, the Christian Democrats and smaller moderate groups, suffered setbacks in Italy's minicipal elections. The voting involved only 11 percent of the country's electorate, and it showed that no really significant political changes had occurred in the country since the Parliamentary balloting last May, when the losers in last month's election slightly strengthened their positions. All in all, the results proved ver little, and no one faction increased its gower substantially enough to claim any major victory.

HOLLAND. Boy, have the Dutch got problems. Last week's election among their 26 competing parties left them without a government. The center-right coalition that had governed for the last 18 months was left with an unworkable majority of one seat by the 81 percent of the Dutch voters who made it to the polls.

The reason for this political stalemate is the Dutch's proportional representation system, which allows any party which wins any share of the vote to be represented in the Government. Twelve parties got percentages of the vote, and so Holland is hurting.

back of my mind...maybe some of it (his grandfather) rubbed off on me." Turati had considered becoming a cop all through college and his first years of work; an insurance salesman (on the UMass campus) and Moore Mapping and Survey until one night he sat down with his wife and decided to take the step.

Turati says he once thought of joining the state police but rejected that because he thought it was too political, appointments made not on aptitude but who the prospective trooper knows. The decision to join the UMass force, "just happened". Turati said he heard there was an opening, applied, and was accepted. He grew up in South Deerfield, and knew UMass from his youth. Both his father and wife have worked here.

Turati sees working at the University as a challenge. Dealing with people that are "supposed to be smart kids." People, Turati says, who will "make up the core" of the country. He realizes most of the students here don't like the police. He speculates they get it from personal experience in their home towns; picked up drunk and handled too roughly, from tales told by friends. But he is angered because so many students condemn police on the basis of the uniform, and don't bother to judge the man inside.

Cops are people Turati says. "I play with my kids...put my pants on the same way...the thing that is different, corny cliche, is that we're sworn to uphold the law."

Guilmette echoes Turati with a story.

One night about a month ago he was driving under the Southwest tunnel towards the center of campus and passed a group of students walking in the same direction. One held a beer can in his hand and Guilmette says, "he was obviously under 21, but I wasn't going to stop him." As the cruiser drove past Guilmette says the kid yelled out, "Fucking pigs." Guilmette stopped, let the student draw even to the cruiser door and called him over. The beer can was gone. He asked the student what happened to it. The student said, "What beer can?" Guilmette answered, "The one you were holding in your hand a minute ago." The student said he threw it away. "Well," Guilmette said, "you wasted a can of beer, because I wasn't going to stop you for that. Now why did you call me a fucking pig?"

Guilmette says the student told him he had been messed over by his home town police. Guilmette asked him if that meant all cops are pigs, and he and Guilmette had a short and inconclusive debate on categorizing people. Guilmette shook his head and said he hoped he had changed the student's mind.

Guilmette joined the force the same time as Turati, after 2 1/2 years at school in New Mexico, four years in the coast guard, and short stints in the state police training academy and with a private investigation outfit in Springfield. He left the state police for the same reason Turati did, too much politics. Once he graduates from Northeastern Guilmette doesn't want to work anywhere in New England for the same reason.

"This is sort of bizarre," he said when he explained his reasons for becoming a cop, other than humanitarian, "but I like the excitement of dangerous situations."

Every cop has to like that excitement Guilmette says, because he never knows what he's going to run into. We don't create danger Guilmette says, but there's always the possibility.

Excitement and danger met Guilmette in Viet Nam. An electronics technician on a Coast Guard cutter' of the coast, he was called ashore to the Mekong Delta to fix a riverboat's radar. What was supposed to have been a one night stay turned into six weeks combat when his ship was called north to Da Nang the day he was ashore. The riverboats are the PT boats of Viet Nam where John Kerry, ex-VVAW head, made his reputation.

We moved up Massachusetts Ave. on to North Pleasant and up past Lot 4 noting a car moving fast up the hill behind the lot towards Central. We followed but lost him at the end of Lot 2 facing Hills. A left and we are behind a station wagon crammed full of trunks and suitcases. Guilmette says questioningly, "Someone moving in?" and Turati replies, "I hope he's not moving someone else out." They both chuckle.

Up the hill towards Baker and Butterfield, we swing into Amherst to pick up some cigars (Guilmette smokes them. Dry, stubby black ones, he keeps promising Turati he'll just smoke three), and gum to last the night. The UMass police and Amherst police have a self help agreement. Guilmette says only once were they called into town, about two months ago when four men tried to bust a friend out of the Amherst jail. They had nothing to do though, "We got there in two minutes and they already had all four in the cells."

Swung up and around the Drake and headed back towards campus, Guilmette wondering out loud if his father would give him a loan so he and his wife could go to the Bahamas for a vacation. He smiled, looking over the wheel through the top of his eyes. "But my father will probably say why the hell do you want to go there?" Leaning back, "My father believes in the Protestant work ethic, work, work, work."

We swung back onto Massachusetts Ave. and pulled up next to the traffic booth in Lot 1 next to Whitemore, and "lurked" for a while, police jargon for waiting for speeders or other violators of the traffic laws. The speed limit is 30 mph on Mass Ave. How much faster than that a car must be going to get stopped Guilmette and Turati said depends on the road conditions and the particulars of the speeding. A few weeks ago they stopped a car that had almost run down two students in a cross walk. The driver, they said, was roaring drunk, and as it turned out, a two-year law student. He was arrested on a felony charge and was due to appear in court in two weeks.

Later that evening Guilmette said the driver had gotten a state senator as a lawyer. Guilmette was wondering how the "wheels of justice" would grind in court.

Suddenly in the middle of the conversation Turati spat out a string of words, and we were in the midst of the Mass. Ave. traffic chasing a VW squareback, speeding in the left lane towards 116, at the intersection with Commonwealth it swerves down towards the Campus Center, and three cars almost pile up. "Will you look at that," Guilmette mutters. We follow, three cars behind. But the VW gets up and into the C.C. garage before we can reach him. They mutter "maybe next time" and we turn away. It's 7:40.

We cruised for a while, then pulled into 4 Lot and lurked for just a moment, long enough to hear what the police think of North Pleasant and speeding cars. Guilmette, "It's a real hazard when you're coming 40-50 mph down here. It's hard to pick up a person crossing the street." Guilmette said that while no one's ever been killed, a few people have been injured. They enjoyed catching speeders on North Pleasant. That night they stopped no one, though three or four times they chased cars but were not able to clock them for the 1/8 of a mile the law requires for a driver to be given a speecing citation. Either the car had to slow up because of a slower car ahead, or else by the time the officers caught up with the car it had reached the lights and had to slow or stop.

At 7:50 a call came over the radio. A car was doing power turns on the lawn behind the Campus Center Student Union. We pulled out and turned down the sidewalk next to Hasbrouck. A red Ford convertible was pulled up behind Hasbrouck, a white cruiser in front, its officer at the door of the Ford. Turati and Guilmette got out and approached the third officer. Two of them walked down to the grass, shining their flashlights on the grass, obviously torn up. Students on their way to the Blue Wall turned and looked at the three cars, the lights on the cruisers still blinking and revolving. At the Ford the three officers spoke briefly, their faces and frosty breath thrown into profile by the cruiser's headlights. They broke; Turati and Guilmette came back to the cruiser, the third officer going back to the door of the Ford. Guilmette said the driver of the Ford had committed a misdemeanor, "malicious destruction of state property." He would be given a ticket for driving where automobiles were not allowed and probably would have to pay to have the turf reseeded, at $10 a sq. ft.

We were about to leave when two more cars passed us driving across the lawn to the rear of the Campus Center, oblivious to the three cars parked a scant 20 yards away. Guilmette gave an incredulous, "What the hell is this?" as the two cars drove past. We watched as one parked on the grass at the base of the Campus Center, then turned and followed, as the second car, seeing us, pulled to a halt. The man in the front seat got out. He told Turati that the cars carried equipment for the band that was playing in the Blue Wall that night. A short debate ensued between Turati and the drivers of the two cars. Turati said they couldn't drive down over the turf, the drivers asking how else they could unload their equipment. "Man these are heavy, a base amp, and bottom, a leap amp..."

Turati thought for a moment as the passengers of the second car, a Pontiac Firebird, pleaded with him. Turati told the driver of the Pontiac to pull out and drive down the sidewalk to the east entrance of the Campus Center and unload there. The first car, he told to unload, seeing as they were already down there, then told both to park in Lot 4 across the street. Evidently one of the passengers was from UMass. He kept telling the reluctant drivers that Lot 4 was just across the street, a short walk. After a moment's hesitation the drivers of both cars agreed, the second car pulling out with Unit 10 following. As we left the first officer was showing the driver of the Ford the torn up turf.

Guilmette commented as we turned back onto North Pleasant, "We'll probably get some publicity on the issue in the Blue Wall tonight." Turati shrugged it off. "They should have known better, they wouldn't want someone driving around on their lawn."

We cruised for a while. Lurked for a moment at Lot 1 and chased a car with both taillights out. Pulling it over in front of Boyden, the driver explained that it wasn't his car, that he didn't know the taillights were out. Guilmette and Turati let him go with a warning to get them fixed. "Justice on the street" Guilmette called it. They explained that what happened to a person stopped for a minor violation, traffic or otherwise depended mostly on the "demeanor" of the individual at the time. If the violation, say a traffic violation, isn't that serious, (the car with no taillights) and the driver doesn't start swearing at them for pulling him over (as they said often happens) and isn't too drunk to be driving, (they said they sometimes pulled over cars where the driver was too drunk to stand up) then the waiving of a ticket in favor of a warning is probable. But Guilmette, "If someone starts screaming in your face you don't pour out love and affection."

We cruised for a while, over to North Village to check on a car with no plates, (If it's there in a few days we'll check with the station to see if it should be towed) lurked for a moment next to Lot 1 and answered a non-event in Coolidge. Six males were said to have broken security and gone looking for a party on the third floor according to the girl standing dorm security that night. We arrived, waited a moment for another car, then went up to the floor. All was quiet, two girls who lived on the floor said no one had come up. One of the other officers told the girl on security to call if they showed up again. 9:15.

We cruised for awhile, checking out parking lots near Sylvan, stopped for a coffee break at the Worcester Commons "Catalyst" and were back on North Pleasant at a little past 10 pm when the call came over, an unconscious individual on the 18th floor of Kennedy...

It could be nothing or there could be a body waiting.

Into the Kennedy lot. Siren and lights blasting, students scooting out of our way, onto the sidewalk and a dash to the elevators. Tension rose as Guilmette and Turati fumed, watching the elevators move down from the 20th, 11th, 14th floors on the Christmas tree board in the lobby. For a moment they considered the stairs, but 18 floors. No. Ultimately the elevators would be faster.

Then the doors spring open and the lobby is bathed in harsh flourescence. Students crowd the elevator and Guilmette shouts, "This is an express to the 18th." The elevator moves slowly. Only one button is hit inside, but on the 17 intervening floors other students are partying floor to floor this Saturday night, and the elevator stops three times. Guilmette glances at me, a disgusted and worried look on his face.

The 18th floor. We push our way out into the lobby, hesitate, (which corridor?) then head to the right, and a body is sprawled out on the carpeted corridor, face down, a plume of vomit stretching from under his hair. He's a thin kid, in jersey and jeans, curly red hair covering his head.

Nathan Gerenstein

Momentarily, everyone thought it was over.

Guilmette and Turati stand over him, hands on their hips. The ass't. head of residence tells them the kid's been lying there for 15-20 minutes. He tells the cops he never saw the kid before, but another student says he does live in the dorm. No one knows what he's done to celebrate the weekend this way.

Guiomette bends down, lifts the student by an elbow, and asks if he can hear him. Red-hair moans at Guilmette's touch. Guilmette almost yells in his ear, then shakes him, red-hair doesn't wake. Turati goes to get a cup of water.

Guilmette turns red-hair over and Turati sprinkles water in his face. Not a movement, not flicker of eyes. Guilmette mutters, "Might as well dump the whole thing in his face." Face up now, red-hair starts to choke and gag, but automatically, like a robot, no conscious mind trying to control its body. His face turns pale. Stretcher time.

Suddenly they know red-hair's in trouble. "We gotta get him to the infirmary," Turati says. They lift him by the shoulders and drag him to the elevators. The call button has been hit and an elevator is waiting.

Into the elevator. "G" is pushed and we slowly drop. Guilmette curses state contractors once more. He tries to get red-hair to come around but with no luck. They hold him face down off the floor as he retches and gags, vomit spraying their hands and legs. The door opens and Turati turns, but it's only the tenth floor. A student starts to walk in and is stopped by Turati, "Not this one, try the next." The door closes and the smell of vomit fills the elevator. Turati grimaces and looks at his hands, wet and sticky with the remains of a night's meal and drink. Guilmette, holding red-hair, stares at the floor numbers above the door. They move so slowly.
